HIGHLIGHTS OF THE INTER-RACIAL ACTIVITIES FOR 1962

The Lenoir County Inter-Racial Committee, composed of men and women representing both the white and negro churches and lay leaders, was formed in 1952. From its inception its special characteristic has been meaningful and voluntary community service. Officers and representation have changed over the years, but the aims and purposes set forth by the original members have remained constant.

"To promote a harmonious relationship between the various racial groups within our community; to study problems as they arise and seek to further a right and just settlement of same."

Perhaps not all efforts, nor the realization of all things hoped for, have been achieved, but satisfactory solutions to some problems have been attained, and better understanding in several areas of community life has been achieved.

It is with much humility, sincere gratitude, great expectations, and much optimism that the committee reviews the past year'sactivities which brings to an end the first decade of its existence.

February 6, 1962 – Committee of Kinston merchants recommended a community-wide, non-discriminatory employment policy.

February 11 & 18 – Human Relations Institute, Dr. Frank Graham, and Dr. William Tycer Nelson spoke at 7th Annual Institute.

February - May – Picketing by Local Youth Council resumed at four Kinston downtown retail firms.

February – 25 copies of High Cost of Conflict, publication of Anti-Defamation League, distributed to members of Kinston City Council, County Commissioners, city and county school boards.

June 18 – Kinston Chamber of Commerce completed first survey of Negro employment in sales and related jobs. 12 firms agreed to attempt to employ or up-grade present Negro employees into sales or related positions by August 1.

July - August – Kellis Parker, Kinston Negro and junior at UNC at Chapel Hill, was selected to be one of five Americans, the only Southerner and only Negro, to represent US at International Student Movement for the United Nations meeting in Athens, Greece. Parker became the first Negro to address the Kinston Rotary Club. Financial support came from throughout the community.

August – Two Negroes enrolled in 10-week automotive course at Lenoir County Industrial Education Center in mixed adult education class.

August – Kinston Chamber of Commerce completed second employment survey of retail establishments which indicated firms with openings for qualified Negroes.

October 16, 1962 – Representative from Kingston, Jamaica, Negro Deputy Mayor, was denied accommodation at local hotel, but was offered accommodation the second night. He attended City Hall Dedication, Parade reviewing stand, luncheon for visitors in Hotel Kinston Ballroom and became probably the first Negro to be received and served a meal at a Kinston Country Club function.

November – Kinston Chamber of Commerce completed its 3rd employment survey of retail merchants indicating that 11 jobs in sales and related work for Negroes were opened up in 1962.

December 10 - 12 – State Convention of Negro Masonic Lodge held in Kinston with assistance from city and Chamber of Commerce officials.

December 18, 1962 – Ministerial Alliance and Ministerial Association, separate Negro and white groups, were merged into the new Lenoir County Ministerial Fellowship, composed of members of both races, which meets monthly for dinner sessions at Hotel Kinston.

HISTORY OF COMMITTEE AND INSTITUTE

The Lenoir County Inter-Racial Committee began with an informal discussion group of about fifteen persons, representing both the white and Negro churches and lay leaders in 1952. It met informally for twelve months, then organized and adopted a constitution and by-laws. Its purpose from its inception has been to seek solutions to local problems, keeping lines of communication open, and to avoid the use of pressure. As stated in its constitution, the purpose is:

"To promote a harmonious relationship between the various racial groups within our community; to study problems as they arise and seek to further a right and just settlement of same."

George Skinner, layman from St. Mary Episcopal Church, served as chairman for the first two years. The group has also been led by James A. Harper, J. P. Strother, W. N. Payton, Mrs. Josephine Rowland, and the current leader is E. R. Bryant, with Rev. Paul Conrad serving as vice-chairman.

In 1956 the committee began to sponsor its Annual Institute on Human Relations during Brotherhood Week each February. Initially there were three speakers on consecutive nights. For the past two or three years it has been limited to two speakers, and this year the sessions are one week apart to avert conflicts. Persons who have addressed the Institute include Dr. Robert L. Humber of Greenville; Dr. Harry Golden of Charlotte; Dr. Robert Daniels of Lynchburg, Va.; Dan Shoemaker of Miami, Fla., and formerly of Asheville; Dr. Samuel D. Proctor of Greensboro; Dr. Cleo Blackburn of Indianapolis, Ind.; Dr. Benjamin Mays of Atlanta, Ga.; Dr. Barton Hunter of Indianapolis, Ind.; former Congressman C. B. Deane of Rockingham; Rev. William Borders of Atlanta, Ga.; Irving Carlyle of Winston-Salem and others. Sessions in the past have been at the Courthouse, but were shifted to the National Guard Armory in 1962 to accommodate a larger crowd.

The Inter-Racial Committee meets in quarterly session each fifth Monday night in the year.

"To promote a harmonious relationship between the various racial groups within our community; to study problems as they arise and seek to further a right and just settlement of same."

The Eighth Human Relations institute in February, 1963 here featured addresses by James M. Dabbs of Mayesville, S. C., president of the Southern Regional Council, and Dr. Walter N. Ridley, president of Elizabeth City State Teachers College.

Lenoir County residents of both races worshiped together at the well-attended Easter sunrise service at Grainger Stadium.

The Pittsburgh Pirates and the Washington Senators, racially mixed professional baseball teams, were accommodated and fed locally when they played an exhibition game in Kinston in April. Visiting baseball players were served regularly throughout the season at a local restaurant.

The Kinston Chamber of Commerce board of directors heard a report in the Spring from members of the Lenoir County Inter-Racial Committee expressing concern for picketing which was being conducted elsewhere in connection with public accommodations and church worship services. Subsequently a number of church boards discussed the matter and Negroes were received at worship services in all major churches: none were refused admittance.

Picketing was conducted at a downtown theatre in June. On the third day, 111 were arrested; on the fourth day 274 were arrested. On the fifth day, the Kinston City Council enacted ordinances restricting picketing and parading and received a list of 15 objectives of the picketing group. A Mayor's Bi-Racial Committee was appointed. This committee met immediately and set up a sub-committee to work in specific problem areas.

The Kinston-Lenoir County Public Library announced an open policy.

The non-discriminatory admissions policy of the Lenoir County Industrial Education Center was clarified.

A survey of job opportunities was completed and a study of employment policies revealed that two-thirds of more than 100 business firms had adopted a non-discriminatory employment policy.

The Kinston Board of Education appointed a committee to study racial problems and solutions.

A Good Neighbor Council was appointed at mid-year to work on opening job opportunities and to encourage training for new positions to be opened.

Setting an example, the Kinston Fire Department employed two Negro firemen in the Fall. The City Police Department added an additional Negro police officer, bringing to five the number of Negro police officers in the Department.

SUBJECT: Status of --- Multi-ethnic and Segregated Textbooks and Curriculum

Last year the VCHR became interested in the subject of textbooks and curriculum. Soon this became one of our top priority projects. Mr. Louis Brenner, a Portmouth Attorney was selected as Chairman of the VCHR Education Committee.

A number of events have since occurred--- VCHR has held a number of meetings with other state wide organizations on this subject. Mr. William K. Stevens, educational editor for the Norfolk Virginian Pilot, wrote a series of articles (Oct. 26-27, 1965) on the state prescribed history books indicating some grave problems about these texts. Mr. Robert P. Hilldrup, educational editor for the Richmond News Leader, broke the story about the Hanover School Board and certain books being removed from their school libraries which suddenly brought the procedure of approving library books into question. The Wall Street Journal, Wednesday, March 24, 1965, Vol CLXV, No. 57, Eastern Edition, "Integrated Books --- School Texts Stressing Negro's Role in U. S. Arouse the South's Ire --- Primers Show Mixed Scenes; Some Publishers Turn Out Special Editions for Dixie," by A. Kent MacDougall indicated the fact that sometimes there existed two versions of the same text, and at times some title texts had been "de-integrated." The VCHR (Dr. R. Picott, Rabbi Stern from Portsmouth, Mr. L. Brenner, and Mr. R. L. Combs) appeared before the Virginia State Board of Education's Textbook and Curriculum Committee on February 2, 1966 pointing out the segregated and integrated versions of certain texts, urging them to approve such books in the future, and to follow a positive future policy on this subject.

VCHR has heard for years that publishers were marketing a Northern and a Southern version of certain textbooks, the primary difference being the exclusion of Negro authors or stories about Negroes in the text. We were unable to obtain copies of these books, but finally after much difficulty were able to secure two textual versions of Scott, Foresman and Company (referred to in the Wall Street Journal article). Let us remind you that there are other texts by other publishers which pose the same problem, but the only reason Scott, Foresman and Company was questioned was due to the availablity of the books.

We compare the following: (1) More Roads to Follow, Book 3, Part 2, Scott Foresman and Co., c. 1964. The cover is different; the Virginia version has a white child on the cover, the other version has several children on the cover including a Negro child. Page 18, 27, the stories "Maurice" and "Charles" have been omitted in the Virginia version. Page 117 has "Audubom's Birds" in the Virginia version while page 119 has a story about George Washington Carver, "The Boy with the Green Thumb" is omitted in the version but included in the other. Page 127 has in the Virginia version "Spring Song." (2) Ventures Book 4, Scott, Foresman and Co., c. 1965. The cover is different; the Virginia version has moon rising over the mountains and the other version has birds flying over the mountains. Page 49, Virginia version has "The Trouble with Francis" and the other version has the story "Jerry and the Dragon." Page 67 has "Kickapoo" for the Virginia version and "Food for Thought" in the other. On pages 70 and 76 these stories are omitted in Virginia version "My Friend the Leona" and "Mail from Home." Page 257 Virginia version has "Paul Revere, Bell Maker" and the other version has "Benjamin's Clock."

What has all of this revealed? (1) The State Board of Education has the power (and the Textbooks Curriculum Committee) to be both monetary and monitory. They control the state funds in repayment of books being purchased by a local school board through the approved for purchase library lists, the basal textbook requisition list and supplemental materials. The State Board of Education, through its committee does review books and passes on these books as being approved or not. The point we wish to make is, they have consistently omitted versions of texts from the basal lists which have not included Negro authors or stories about the Negro which is discrimination! (2) The textbook and curriculum discrimination issue may lead to a future court case. (3) Title VI of the Civil Rights Act would appear to cover this subject in several ways. (a) Federal Funds will be used in Virginia, $2,095,347, to aid school libraries and other libraries. This money is channeled through the State Department of Education. Title VI of the Civil Rights Act forbids use of education aid funds in perpetuating discrimination. (b) If Section 601 of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act applies to pupils, teachers, staff, any activity, facility or other service, including transportation, provided or sponsored by a school system is segregated on the basis of race, color, or national origin; or there remain any other practices characteristic of dual or segregated school systems(quote from General Statement of Policies under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 Respecting Desegregation of Elementary and Secondary Schools, April 1965, HEW, Office of Education), then it could possibly imply the tabo subject of textbooks and curriculum, too! (4) It appears that if this practice of discrimination in textbooks and curriculum continues the Federal Government may be involved in this area, too. (5) Local school boards are again playing the children's game "button, button, who has the button" in assuming the responsibility in this matter. Several county and city school boards are already stating that they must follow the approved library list and the basal textbook requisition list to the book without variation. (6) The VCHR has urged the State Board of Education and local school boards (in some cases) to take a positive course of action to avoid some of the trends that could happen as a result of their continued policies. Certainly, we hope that Educators can forsee the danger in avoiding this crucial issue. We refer you to an editorial in the Virginian Pilot, Friday, February 11, 1966, "Listen to the Mockingbird."

Under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, there is provided additional federal funds and assistance for educationally deprived children. As of February 3, 1966, there had been 20 projects approved by the Virginia State Board of Education. In some southside counties local Negroes and Civil Rights workers are viewing this as a means to encourage the Negro to remain in the all Negro schools. Already several school boards have been challenged. Certainly these new funds and projects need our attention to see that they are not administered in a manner which will encourage segregation, yet we must also recognize the purpose of Congress in passing this law.

In conclusion we must say this about education in Virginia in relation to Human Relations----there has been much progress, most of it has come by court cases and new laws passed by Congress, but we must also keep in mind the new trends that are in the making which make our task still difficult.

Textbooks on Va. Criticized

(First of a series)

By WILLIAM K. STEVENS

Virginian-Pilot Staff Writer

Two Virginia history textbooks used in the state's junior and senior high schools glorify the "cavalier" past and are slanted toward a conservative political outlook at the expense of learning.

A sizable body of Virginia educators thinks so. Some call the two state-prescribed books out-and-out propaganda.

Some parents, particularly those born and reared outside Virginia, feel the same way.

So do some teachers, many of them Virginians.

The authors themselves say the books were written to appeal to "the Virginia point of view." Two say the books were "purified" by state censors. They cite examples. This will be discussed in the third story of this series.

The books are:

● "Virginia: History, Government, Geography," written by Francis Butler Simkins, Mrs. Spotswood Hunnicutt Jones and Sidman P. Poole, published by Scribner's.

● "Cavalier Commonwealth," written by William Edwin Hamphill, Marvin Wilson Schlegel and Sadie Ethel Engelberg, published by McGraw-Hill.

The Simkins-Jones-Poole book is the basic history text in the 7th Grade.

"Cavalier Commonwealth" is designed as a supplement in the 11th Grade American history course and 12th Grade American government course.

A third state history book is in use in the 4th Grade, but it has not drawn as much criticism as the others. It is "Virginia's History and Georgraphy," written by Raymond C. Dingledine Jr., Lena Barksdale and Marion Belt Nesbitt, and published by Scribner's.

All three books were written and published in the 1950s under the direct supervision of the Virginia History and Government Textbook Commission. The commission was created by the 1950 General Assembly for the purpose of getting the textbooks written. They are the only comprehensive histories in the state's schools.

Chairman of the commission, which has since gone out of existence, was former Del. Cecil W. Taylor, a Lynchburg lawyer. He was asked about the question of bias.

"We never thought we had the privilege to say to the authors what should be put into the books," he said, "but let me put it this way:

"That commission was appointed by the governor, who was John Battle, who was well known to be a conservative. Sen. Garland Gray and I were pretty well known to be conservatives." Gray, a top-ranking member of the Byrd Organization, was a member of the commission.

Taylor said the temper of the nine-member commission was conservative.

"I feel sure the publishers and authors felt they were writing for a group that was more conservative than liberal," he said. "How much that colored the books, I don't know."

The 7th Grade and senior high textbooks are in wide use throughout the state. The degree of use varies.

The 7th Grade book in Norfolk and Hampton, for example has become secondary to lessons prepared locally and presented through educational television. "Cavalier Commonwealth the senior high book, is issued to stu- in Norfolk it is struck in the dents in some communitites. But high school libaries and used as a reference book.

"The teachers send students to it to look up more or less foolproof facts," said one librarian.

Because the Simkins-Jones-Poole book is a basic text, it has perhaps drawn the most criticism.

"If they'd only quit glorifying and give us some meat," one Tidewater public school administrator said. "There's not enough about government in it."

Directors of instruction or superintendents for 18 local school systems throughout Virginia were surveyed by The Virginian-Pilot to find out how the junior and senior high books are regarded. The systems were selected to give a reasonable cross-section of the state.

Sixteen responded. Of those, three were non-committal. Of the 13 who expressed an opinion, nine said they thought the two books were slanted in some degree.

All nine were in populous areas. Only one of the large city systems surveyed, Roanoke, found no bias in the books. The other three who found no bias were Southside Virginia localities. Southside is generally regarded as the most conservative area of the state.

Some comments from those who found the books slanted:

John Klousia, director of instruction for Norfolk city schools:

"Obviously it (the 7th Grade book) is set up to glorify Virginia and a political point of view. We ought to be teaching kids to think critically. Instead, this book glorifies a past that never was."

Dr. Franklyn Kingdon, general supervisor for Chesapeake city schools:

"Parents who come from other areas of the country have objected strongly. Even some of our teachers, Virginia-born, Virginia-bred and who when they die'll be Virginia-dead, have found certain passages (of the 7th Grade book) objectionable.

"My own child is in the 7th Grade and reads it. I'm doing my best to counteract some of it. . . ."

Kingdon was spokesman for a four-city committee of Tidewater educators who flatly refused, two years ago, to use a geography supplement prepared for the 4th Grade text. It was said to have too many inaccuracies.

From Dr. Robert R. Marks, assistant director of instruction for Henrico County (Richmond suburb) schools:

"I've had no complaints from parents, but I'm sure there must be some. You sit down and look through those books and you can tell they're slanted. I think they are, too."

Lucien D. Adams, director of instruction for Richmond city schools:

"The books are written by Virginians for a Virginia audience. You have to admit that. I assume it was done purposely."

Harold Ford, director of instruction in Fairfax County:

"It's time the whole thing was re-examined, and the public ought to be in on it this time. The books have served their purpose. We've always used them as supplementary because of the way they were written. They were commissioned and written with no competition."

James Laughlin, director of instruction in Lynchburg city schools:

"Some of the people who come here from other states, like Pennsylvania, have complained the books don't say enough about the contribution of other nationalities, like French and Germans, to this part of Virginia. The impression is that evoluton started in Tidewater."

Charles B. Shreeves, director of instruction in Newport News city schools:

"I think we have rather assumed the books would be slanted. We had assumed they would be written to glorify Virginia's past."

Dr. Joseph H. Lyles, director of instruction in Hampton city schools:

"There is a little of that (slanting), and I suppose any state has a right to put its best foot forward, almost like a product you're selling. You're going to attempt to put it in the best light. That's about what they've done in these books.

"When they make opinions into statements of fact, that's when I begin to lose patience with a book. There are a few cases where these books do stretch a point to where it's more opinion than fact."

Lyles said his main criticism of the situation is that the books are all the state provides.

Dr. Kingdon of Chesapeake also criticizes the existence of only one set of books. In all other subjects, school systems are given a choice of three or four textbooks.

"The existence of only one text in each grade gives the state a terrific responsibility to make sure the books are accurate," Kingdon said. "The best thing would be to have a choice of books."

(The second and third stories will deal with the contents of the textbooks, and how they got that way, and what the authors have to say about them.)

Book Board No Longer In Business

The Virginia History and Government Textbook Commission was characterized by its chairman as basically conservative in outlook.

The commission went out of existence in 1958 after completing its job of producing textbooks for prescribed use in the state's public schools. The books still are in use throughout Virginia.

Members of the group, appointed by Gov. John Battle, were:

Cecil W. Taylor of Lynchburg, an attorney and former member of the House of Delegates Appropriations Committee, chairman.

Dr. Thomas P. Abernethy of Charlottesville, chairman of the Department of History at the University of Virginia.

Mrs. Wyndham Blanton, a Richmond civic leader.

Daniel A. Cannaday, chairman of the History Department of Radford College. He died in 1961.

J. R. V. Daniel of Richmond, a member of the History Division of the Virginia State Library. He died in 1952.

State Sen. Garland Gray of Waverly, a top lieutenant in the Byrd Organization.

J. Edward Moyler, a school administrator in Franklin.

Charles J. Smith of Salem. He resigned because of ill health in 1950, shortly after the commission was appointed.

Joe P. Snead, a public school administrator in Fork Union.

Today's History Lesson:

Books Say Slaves Had a Fair Deal

This is the second of three articles on Virginia history textbooks used in the state's public school system. The first discussed criticism of the books by leading educators in Virginia.

By WILLIAM K. STEVENS

Virginian-Pilot Staff Writer

"You are to study this course because your state thinks you should and has directed that you must do so," says the introduction to "Cavalier Commonwealth," prescribed for use in 11th- and 12th-grade history and government classes of Virginia high schools.

The book includes such statements as:

"(The slave's) condition had its advantages. He usually worked the accepted workweek of the colony — from sunrise to sundown daily except Sunday. But he enjoyed long holidays, especially at Christmas.

"He did not work as hard as the average free laborer, since he did not have to worry about losing his job. In fact, the slave enjoyed what we might call comprehensive social security.

"Generally speaking, his food was plentiful, his clothing adequate, his cabin warm, his health protected, his leisure carefree. He did not have to worry about hard times, unemployment or old age."

Dr. Marvin W. Schlegel of Longwood College, one of three authors of the book, told The Virginian-Pilot that the Virginia History and Government Textbook Commission expurgated from the book's original manuscript whole paragraphs on the dark side of slavery.

Another passage:

"Although Virginia remained chiefly a rural state, she attained a balanced economy. And she did so without sacrificing her people's traditional adherence to fiscal sanity, to local and individual responsibility as opposed to federal aid, to a stable society characterized by conservative changes or moderate reforms, and to the fundamental virtues of rural life." This was a description of Virginia on the eve of the Civil War.

"Cavalier Commonwealth" is one of three state-prescribed textbooks for the study of Virginia history in the public schools. It is meant to be used as a supplement to basic texts in American history in the 11th grade and American government in the 12th.

It has drawn criticism on grounds of bias, glorification of the past, and political cant, but not as much as a companion volume, "Virginia: History, Government, Geography," designed as the basic text for seventh graders.

The seventh-grade book's authors are Francis Butler Simkins, Mrs. Spotswood Hunnicutt Jones, and Sidman P. Poole.

The history portion of the Simkins-Jones-Poole book ends with a brief section headed "The Spirit of Virginia":

"A majority of Virginia families have been in the state for nearly 200 years. As a people, Virginians think and act much alike. It is for this reason that the Old Dominion developed a spirit of its own—without which it would not be the Virginia we know and love.

"This spirit is made up of courtesy, neighborliness, hospitality, a deep religious faith, respect for leadership, and an ambition to promote the public welfare. So long as this spirit of Virginia lasts, so long will Virginia's present be worthy of her past."

The book informs the 12-year-old that Virginians referred to their Negroes as servants and not as slaves and has such things as this to say about slavery:

"It was not difficult for the Negroes to adjust themselves to Virginia life. They had worked hard in Africa, and so the work on the Virginia plantations did not hurt them.

"In Africa they had known a form of slavery more stern than that of the Virginia plantations. The Negroes suffered less from the diseases of the Virginia climate than did the white settlers. In Africa they had become used to the bites of insects that caused sickness, and so they were immune to many diseases.

"It is true of course, that life in early Virginia was not easy for the Negro. He liked Virginia, however, for the same reason the white man liked it. Virginia offered a better life for the Englishman than England did, and it offered a better life for the Negroes than did Africa.

"In his new home the Negro was far away from the spears and war clubs of enemy tribes. He had some of the comforts of civilized life. He had better food, a better house, and better medical care than he did in Africa. And he was comforted by a religion of love and mercy."

The book sums up the Negro's feelings about slavery this way:

"Life among the Negroes of Virginia in slavery times was generally happy. The Negroes went about in a cheerful manner making a living for themselves and for those for whom they worked.

"They were not so unhappy as some Northerners thought they were, nor were they so happy as some Southerners claimed. The Negroes had their problems and their troubles. But they were not worried by the furious arguments going on between Northerners and Southerners over what should be done with them. In fact, they paid little attention to these arguments."

More space is devoted to such material on slavery than to the role of Virginia statesmen in making the U.S. Constitution.

The book is used in Negro classes as well as white ones.

"Beloved" is a word often applied to Virginia and Virginians. Struggles against "increased federal power" rattles through the book like a drumbeat.

In the Civil War, the chapter on the outbreak of the conflict is titled "Oppression, Secession and War."

President Lincoln is pictured as threatening "to invade Virginia and use force to interfere with the state's own affairs."

The reader is told that "a Richmond magazine said that it was wicked for Mrs. (Harriet Beecher) Stowe to use her imagination in such a bad way" in writing "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

A summary at the beginning of a chapter on modern-day Virginia contains these sentences:

"New and changing times . . . bring problems. Increasing population, complexity of life, demands for public services, and costs of government have affected the state and its politics.

"But Virginia has continued to produce political leaders with the wisdom, courage and foresight to guide the state through a difficult period of growth and change."

"Virginia: History, Government, Geography" has been branded as propaganda by some Virginia educators.

The last article in this series will examine what the authors of it and "Cavalier Commonwealth" have to say and how the books came to be.

A Conservative Rural Audience

By WILLIAM K. STEVENS

Virginian-Pilot Staff Writer

This is the third and last story of a series on state-prescribed Virginia history textbooks used in the state's public school system. The first two reported on the criticism of the books on the grounds of political bias and overglorification of Virginia's past, and the feelings of leading educators in the state about the books.

Two of the authors of Virginia's seventh-grade state history book say they wrote it to appeal to conservative rural Virginia.

Dr. and Mrs. Francis B. Simkins of Farmville last week told The Virginian-Pilot that even so, the Virginia History and Government Textbook Commission changed or ommitted certain sensitive passages of the book.

An example:

"We had a good chapter on Negro disfranchisement under the Constitution of 1902," said Mrs. Simkins. "The commission said the Negro children were going to use the book also, and there was enough hard feeling already, so they took it out."

Mrs. Simkins did most of the actual writing of "Virginia: History, Government, Geography." Dr. Simkins, Mrs. Spotswood Hunnicutt Jones of Gloucester County and Dr. Sidman P. Poole are the official authors. Poole died soon after the project started.

Dr. Simkins is a native of South Carilina now nearing retirement as a professor of history at Longwood College. His wife teaches eighth-grade English at Prince Edward Academy in Prince Edward County, a private school organized as an escape from integration.

Dr. Marvin W. Schlegel was the original author of "Cavalier Commonwealth," prescribed for use in 11th-grade history and 12th-grade government classes of Virginia public schools.

He also wrote "Conscripted City," a history of Norfolk during World War II, and revised the second edition of Thomas J. Wertenbaker's official history of Norfolk.

Like Dr. Simkins, he is a professor of history at Longwood College. There, during the 1950s, Simkins and Schlegel were picked by Scribner's and McGraw-Hill publishers, respectively, to write the school histories. Schlegel and the Simkinses compared notes as they went along.

"Marvin wouldn't change his interpretation to conform with what the commission wanted," Mrs. Simkins recalled. " 'You're foolish to change,' he said. I told him, 'If it takes 10 years, they'll get what they want.' "

The Simkinses and Mrs. Jones wrote what the commission wanted from the start. The result was a book that a sizable group of educators across Virginia criticized as being politically slanted and a glorification of Virginia.

Schlegel, on the other hand, was asked in 1954 to turn his completed manuscript over to the historian of the Virginia State Library for revision.

"The commission decided it was too anti-Virginia," Schlegel told The Virginian-Pilot. "The problem was I hadn't lived in Virginia long enough to be a Virginian."

"There's a feeling that comes in here," says Mrs. Jones, co-author of the seventh-grade book. "You've got to be born with the Virginia feeling to write about Virginia history."

Schlegel is a native of Pennsylvania. He won his doctorate under the eminent historian, Allan Nevins at Columbia University.

Dr. W. Edwin Hemphill, then director of the History Division of the Virginia State Library, was commissioned to revise Schlegel's original manuscript of "Cavalier Commonwealth."

Hemphill was reached last week in Columbia, S.C., where he is editing the papers of John C. Calhoun.

"My understanding is that the (History and Government Textbook) Commission found fault not primarily with fact but with interpretation," he said. "It was rather the tone than the contents.

"They did say to me, through the publisher's representative, they wanted additional authorship to change somewhat the tone and atmosphere."

Was it because the commission thought the book was anti-Virginian?

"I'm afraid there may have been a question along those lines. If they wanted a change of atmosphere and tone, it seems logical a native of Pennsylvania couldn't give it to them."

He said he thought Schlegel's original manuscript "was a really excellent sort of a product. This is a man who knows how to write for a given purpose, who never wrote over the heads of his students. He included basically the important things and excluded the unimportant things. I thought he did an extremely good job."

"I thought the best thing to do was to tell the truth," Schlegel said, "good and bad, so people could appreciate the past without seeing it all as golden. The result was they (the commission) thought I was a Yankee without proper sympathy for Virginia."

Schlegel said the commission expurgated "a good bit" of the parts on slavery. One part, solidly documented, told how Virginia was the primary supply point for the slave market; the breeding ground, so to speak.

"They wern't going to tell me what to write," Schlegel said, "yet they weren't going to approve what I wrote unless it said what they wanted."

The Virginia History and Textbook Commission was created by the 1950 General Assembly specifically to supervise the writing and publication of the books.

Attorney Cecil W. Taylor of Lynchburg was chairman of the 9-member commission, which went out of existence once the books were published.

"From time to time," Taylor said last week, "parts of the books would be submitted by the authors. We'd read them at home. Then we and the textbook committee of the State Board of Education would come together and pool our criticisms.

"Sometimes they'd take our recommendations and sometimes they wouldn't. We made no suggestions on the tone of the books," Taylor said.

"We didn't think it was proper for us to write books for the children of this state. That smacked too much of something we didn't like. The tone of the books was set by the authors."

Mrs. Simkins said the 7th-grade book was written for children "who come from rural Virginia and whose parents may not have gone beyond the second grade.

"If we told them about Jefferson being a Diest they'd turn against him. For most of these kids, the main event in their lives was when they found Jesus.

"When I say the kids wouldn't understand I don't mean they aren't smart. They come from very conservative families," Mrs. Simkins said.

Questioned about sections of the book criticized because they present slavery in too favorable a light, Dr. Simkins said the authors made slavery look perhaps better than it really was because "that's the way Virginians said it was."

"We were trying to be as honest as we could," Mrs. Simkins said, "but if we had given the completely black picture of slavery, the parents wouldn't have let the children have the book and the book wouldn't have been adopted."

She said she appreciated the criticisms, however. "In the next edition maybe we can rectify it," she said. "Maybe we ought to rectify it."

The Simkinses had their conflicts with the commission.

Dr. Simkins recalled that one member, "a real Virginia aristocrat, . . . wanted to emphasize the greatness of Virginia and take out any reference to poor people living in Virginia . . . (The member) told me, 'What you ought to do is make every seventh grade aspire to the colonnaded mansion; and if he can't get there, make him happy in the cabin.'

"To which I replied, 'If I were Charles Dickens I could do that. But if I were Charles Dickens I wouldn't be writing this book.' "

Dr. Simkins said the commission wanted all recent governors of Virginia treated alike.

"I had the idea Mr. Byrd had been governer since 1926 and the rest of these governors, most of them, have been puppets. I wanted to say something like that, but they wanted us to treat every one of these nonentities alike."

The two books have been revised once since their original publication in 1957. The revisions, supervised by the State Board of Education, resulted in no major alterations. The books were merely brought up to date.

Mrs. Jones, a graduate of Longwood College and the College of William and Mary who has studied under the historian Samuel Eliot Morison at Harvard, revised the seventh-grade book.

She was questioned about a passage which reads, "Without giving up the good things of the past, Virginia has successfully met the changing needs of modern life."

"Are you going to teach them there's no hope only by presenting the dark side?" she answered. "We don't want to raise a generation of cynics."

She said the books "represent the best that can be done betwen the academic world, the political world and the educational world.

"My criticism is that the teachers don't know how to use the books," said Mrs. Jones, who has taught a lot of high school history herself. "You know why? They don't know history.

"Unless a book is radically slanted it can do no damage if it's in the hands of a good teacher," she said.

"Before I began to write textbooks I wondered why they were so bad," Dr. Schlegel said. "Now I marvel that they're as good as they are.

"Any text is subject to pressure groups. You can't say what you want to say. You have to print what people will accept.

"The commisison wasn't thinking in terms of high school students but in terms of what other people would think."

He said he believes history as taught in both Virginia schools and American schools generally "is a method of indoctrination. It is taught as a mythology of our society, embodying our ideals."

The General Assembly's stated objective in creating the History and Government Textbook Commission was to improve the instruction of state history.

Schlegel, who sees the results in his college classrooms, pronounced this verdict:

"The students still don't know Virginia history."

Listen to the Mockingbird

The Hanover County School Board member who objected in late January to the novel To Kill a Mockingbird as "immoral" said this week that he had meant to speak against J. D. Salinger's Catcher in the Rye.

Laugh, or weep, if you will at this latest wry turn in the book banning, but whatever title the board member had in mind he did a service in touching off a controversy that disclosed the existence of book screening committees in the Department of Education. And a committee had, indeed, banished the mockingbird from the State-blessed book list, along with 1984 and The Great Dismal Swamp, and other as yet undisclosed titles over the years.

When the Hanover board member announced his error, the only comment from a Department of Education spokesman was that the list was meant as a monetary subsidization, not as an advisory reading list.

That latest word, however, does not agree with a report by Dr. Woodrow W. Wilkerson, Virginia Superintendent of Public Instruction, that the reviewers found the book on the swamp, among other things, "deficient in literary style and quality." That, surely, was an advisory, literary judgment.

The Department's book-buying functions are subject, apparently, to a shifting definition, but we see the operation clearly as both monetary and monitory, and in apparent need of drastic reorganization.

The Department's list is monetary because it dictates the books which local school libraries may purchase with State aid funds, and since the local libraries can't use the State money on such verboten titles as 1984, the list is highly advisory and restrictive.

Meanwhile, the Federal Government is about to enter the picture with $2,095,347 in aid for school libraries. This money, too, will funnel through the screens of the State Department of Education.

The new Federal aid is part of a five-year program, subject to annual authorization by the Congress, and subject also, it would seem, to Title VI of the Civil Rights Act forbidding use of education aid funds in perpetuating discrimination.

What will be the reaction of the Federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare when it realizes that the Federal money is to be distributed to the localities by the Virginia agency that banned, among other titles, To Kill a Mockingbird, because, undoubtedly, a Negro holds a prominent place in the plot? (The committee certainly could not have rejected the Pulitzer prize-winning novel for lack of literary grace.)

The Federal Government has been as unwearying as the hound of heaven in sniffing out and running down evidences of discrimination in other phases of tax aid to education. The prospect of the State's creaking review system jeopardizing more than $2 million in Federal funds is an additional, urgent reason for the State Board of Education to investigate exactly how and why the Department of Education spoon feeds titles to local libraries. The probe ought to be a great deal more vigorous than the recent slight and amiable summary by Dr. Wilkerson and his staff.

The Department's book buying involves more than $500,000 annually in State money. It is a fortunate coincidence that the economy-minded Virginia General Assembly is in session on the Hill. Some of its members may well wish to inquire, too, as to whether so much in State and Federal funds is being distributed to the best advantage among their book-hungry localities.

Federal Textbooks

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON.

Tentative plans are quietly being made inside the Federal Government for a long-range pressure campaign on local school boards and publishers to give the Negro better treatment in history textbooks.

Although no final decision has been made, the top brass of the Community Relations Service — created by the 1964 Civil Rights Act to help mediate racial disputes — is leaning toward adoption of the plan. Indeed, it already has been spelled out in some detail in a confidential memorandum drafted by Ben Holman, head of the service's "media relations" office.

Although the goal of giving the Negro his rightful place in history books is commendable, there is considerable doubt whether the Community Relations Service is empowered by law to perform this function. The 1964 act as to "provide assistance to communities and persons" in settling racial disputes — and nothing more.

The Holman memorandum on textbook revision begins by stating the problem: "Negroes usually are ignored in textbook illustrations, and the Negro's role in history is either ignored or inaccurately presented."

Consequently, Holman concludes, the Community Relations Service should mount "a massive educational and informational campaign" directed at "publishers, school administrators and boards, parents and teachers groups" to get the textbooks changed. Though this scarcely falls within the agency's statutory mission, it seems generally inoffensive.

But the Holman memo goes on to suggest the beginnings of Federal high pressure: "Once the educational and information-al campaign is solidly underway, we should conduct a systematic effort to contact all publishers and school boards to encourage their publication and adoption of textbooks conforming to established standards."

The term "established standards" has a particularly ominous ring. The intervention of many state legislatures (particularly throughout the segregated Deep South) in textbook selection is ominous. But the idea of the Federal leviathan with its incomparable powers of coercion getting into the textbook business is enough to make publishers break out in a cold sweat. It smacks of rewriting history in Orwellian style.

Actually, the textbook project is only the most far-reaching of the Community Relations Service's digressions from its legislative purpose.

The service was originally conceived in 1960 by then Senator Lyndon B. Johnson as a counterpart in racial relations to the Federal Mediation Service in labor relations. The proposal went into the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

In operation, however, the service has relegated mediation to a secondary role. Only a handful of racial mediators are in the field while a Washington-based staff dreams up projects such as the textbook scheme.

Holman also has in preparation elaborate programs to improve the greatment of the Negro in the press, establishing mobile exhibits for use at fairs and exhibitions, and influencing Hollywood.

In a memorandum, Holman has suggested:

"We ought to mount a specific project aimed at Hollywood film makers to produce films for purely entertainment purposes that would help further the cause of better human relations. . . . The current Negro Revolution and the crescendo of the civil rights movement provide a wealth of material for fiction story plot. Plots centered on the problems of intergroup relations are as legion as those for westerns."

This is government propaganda — a domestic "Voice of America" — at its worst. No matter how deep the need, the Federal Government has no right to try to shape the thinking of Americans in such insidious ways. Besides, there is a surplus of work for practical conciliation in every city in the nation for the Community Relations Service.

If textbooks need rewriting, the educators are the people to do it.

Integrated Books: New School Texts Arouse Opposition in the South

making new friends—among them, Tim Wing, Rosa Cruz and the Negro twins Pam and Penny. The newcomers are going to school with Dick and Jane, and everyone gets on famously in after-school play.

Even mathematics books are being integrated. Noble & Noble, Publishers, Inc., instructed its artist to make every tenth person a Negro in the illustrations for its fourth-grade arithmetic text. The company took care not to picture Negroes in the menial roles they so often have been relegated to in literature and movies, as well as in real life. J. Kendrick Noble, Jr., vice president, recalls that the original version of one of the artist's drawings showed a highway construction crew with a Negro in the background with a pick. "We thought that was a stereotype, so we had him do the drawing over," says Mr. Noble. The published picture has the Negro in the foreground as foreman.

Reinforcing Feelings of "Insignificance"

Publishers concede that textbook treatment of the role of Negroes and other minority groups in American history has been inadequate. John T. Sargent, president of Doubleday & Co., says that the resulting "absence of suitable materials on the culture and heritage of minority groups not only contributes nothing towards the development of pride among members of minority groups but also reinforces feelings of personal insignificance and inadequacy. It also gives whites a false feeling of superiority." In January Doubleday began bringing out paperbacks at sixth-grade reading level on the origins, contributions and lives of Negroes, Puerto Ricans, Mexican-Americans and other minorities. The paperbacks are designed to supplement basic social studies texts.

Reassessment of the Negro's place in American history got a big push last year when six historians at the University of California's Berkeley campus declared that seven histories widely used in schools across the country generally ignored and debased the Negro's role. "In their blandness and amoral optimism, these books implicitly deny the obvious deprivations suffered by Negroes," the scholars complained. "In several places they go further, implying approval for the repression of Negroes or patronizing them as being unqualified for life in a free society."

One of the books cited as deficient was the 1962 edition of Story of the American Nation. After the Berkeley report was issued, Harcourt, Brace & World, publisher of the history, brought out a 28-page supplement, America in the Early 1960s, which is sewn into new copies of the text. A third of the supplement is devoted to tracing the history of American Negroes all the way back to the Emancipation Proclamation of 1863, despite the reference to "early 1960s" in the supplement's title. The text also tells of the achievements of such eminent Negroes as singer Marian Anderson and United Nations official Ralph Bunche and discusses the development of the civil rights issue. Donald Stewart, Harcourt senior editor for high school social studies, describes the new material on Negroes as "an overcorrection that is needed for a while until historians get squared away on the Negro's proper role."

Another book criticized by the California historians was the 1961 edition of Trail Blazers of American History, published by Ginn & Co. of Boston. The book contains the biographies of 27 famous Americans. Though one of these is Negro scientist George Washington Carver, the historians felt more attention should have been paid to other oustanding—and more militant—Negroes. Ginn says it took the criticism into consideration in deciding to add the biography of fiery Negro abolitionist Federick Douglass to a new edition scheduled to come out next year.

Ginn is also giving fuller treatment to the Negro in a fourth-grade civics text entitled Your People and Mine, even though the book escaped the historians' censure. In the 1965 edition a chapter called "Marian Anderson Sings to the World" substitutes for "Ford Made Machines Work for Us."

Winning State Approval

Winning Southern acceptance for such integrated textbooks is another matter, however. Each Southern state adopts a list of approved texts for use in the state's schools; no other texts may be purchased. A publishing company often has millions of dollars of sales riding on a state's decision to approve or reject a textbook series. Nationwide sales of elementary and high school textbooks are expected to pass $350 million this year.

Harcourt is not the only publisher to find that racial considerations can influence state education officials' decisions. Ginn says it presumes Mississippi rejected its high school literature series last fall because of the racial issue. The 815-page American literature anthology in the series contained a three-page essay by James Baldwin, the controversial Negro writer. The essay, "The Creative Dilemma," dealt with the role of the artist in the U.S.

Though publishers realize they are risking the wrath of civil rights leaders, a number are publishing "segregated" editions of texts for sale in the South. "It seems economically sensible as well as culturally desirable to have a single edition for the entire country," observes Mr. Moseley of Harcourt. "But the bigger the stakes, the more feasible a special edition becomes."

Ginn is offering two versions of its spelling series, one with both whites and Negroes in the illustrations and the other, for sale in the South, depicting only whites. Scott-Foresman continues to sell the all-white version of its Dick and Jane readers, and the company also publishes both integrated and segregated editions of readers for higher grades. This past December the segregated version won Virginia's official approval.

Differences between the segregated and integrated editions of the advanced Scott-Foresman readers are as readily apparent as those between the two versions of the adventures of Dick and Jane. In a fourth-grade reader, a story in the integrated edition about Negro astronomer Benjamin Banneker is replaced in the segregated edition by a biography of his contemporary Paul Revere. In a sixth-grade text, a story in the integrated edition about the African slave trade and another about a Negro boy who saves a white boy from drowning are omitted from the segregated version.

Since only the segregated edition was adopted in Virginia, Negro children there won't be able to read the integrated books. Integrationists, along with many educators outside the South, regard this as a particularly objectionable result of dual editions and a strong argument in favor of publishers' bringing out a single, integrated edition of textbooks.

School Texts Stressing Negroes' Role in U.S. Arouse the South's Ire

Primers Show Mixed Scenes; Some Publishers Turn Out Special Editions for Dixie

James Baldwin & Mississippi

By A. KENT MACDOUGALL
Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

NEW YORK—Last year education officials of a Southern state approved, sight unseen, a new edition of a series of elementary school grammar and composition textbooks published by Harcourt, Brace & World, Inc. Unbeknown to the educators, Harcourt had "integrated" the text since the previous edition, inserting illustrations of white and Negro children playing together.

When the state officials received copies of the book, they were incensed. "There was an unofficial, implied threat to cancel all our contracts in the state, not just for that series," says Cameron S. Moseley, Harcourt vice president and general manager of its school department. To avoid such a blow, the publisher went to the extra expense of issuing a special version of the text with "de-integrated" illustrations, showing only white youngsters.

Other textbook publishers are finding themselves caught in a similar dilemma these days. On the one hand, they face strong resistance from Southern school systems against books thought to promote "race-mixing" in any way. On the other, they are under mounting pressure outside the South to come up with books that depict Negroes in such a way as to build pride in Negro youngsters and diminish racial barriers. Harcourt's revised grammar and composition texts are one form of response to such pressure. Publishers are also changing history and social study texts so as to take more note of the Negro's contributions to American society.

Northern Cities Act

The demands for textbook revisions originated with civil rights leaders, but others quickly took up the cause in many areas. Boards of education in New York, Philadelphia, Detroit and several other big Northern cities have passed resolutions asking for "multi-ethnic" textbooks.

If anything, pressure for changed treatment of Negroes in school books is likely to intensify in the months ahead. Should the Administration's new education program pass, it would almost certainly have an impact. The program earmarks $100 million for books and other instructional materials, and most of this would go to impoverished areas with large Negro populations. Also, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People plans to open a new campaign this spring to eliminate what it considers biased texts from the schools.

Most educators think that textbook integration could eventually have a significant effect on both the social outlook and academic progress of the nation's Negroes, as well as of other "disadvantaged" groups, such as Puerto Ricans. "There is considerable agreement that the children of poor and alienated families have their feelings of being rejected accentuated by the traditional books used in schools for teaching reading," says John H. Niemeyer, president of Bank Street College of Education here in New York. The college, a graduate school for teachers which also runs an experimental grade school, is preparing a new series of integrated and urban-oriented readers for the Macmillan Co. division of Crowell-Collier Publishing Co.

Progress in Detroit

"Negro children identify more readily with characters in integrated books, and this increases their interest in, and rate of, learning," asserts Gertrude Whipple, assistant director of language education for Detroit public schools. After testing three integrated primers, Detroit concluded they did a better job of stimulating pupils' interest and whetting their appetite for reading than standard non-integrated primers. While this was especially true for Negro children, who make up 53% of Detroit's public school population, it even held for white youngsters.

The changes Scott, Foresman & Co. of Chicago is making in its beginning readers are indicative of the way such books are being revised. From their introduction in 1934 until the new revision, the books have focused on the bland adventures of Dick and Jane, obviously middle-class, Anglo-Saxon types, and their dog Spot. But now Dick and Jane are

'Jeremiah's Black Lamb,' Spirituals Spark Debate

By a WALL STREET JOURNAL Staff Reporter

NEW YORK — "Integrating" a textbook is sometimes easier said than done.

"Negro leaders disagree among themselves on textbook content; some are oversensitive about their image," says Austin J. McCaffrey, executive director of the American Textbook Publishers Institute.

Sensitivity takes many forms. Some Negroes don't want Negro spirituals included in children's song books. A group of Harlem parents recently protested the classroom use of a reader that included "Jeremiah's Black Lamb," the story of a black lamb that is disowned by its mother but befriended by Jeremiah.

The school system in Detroit actually went so far as to order the destruction of 10,000 copies of the city's first integrated primer because of complaints about its depiction of Negroes in slum scenes. Detroit subsequently adopted a new primer built around the life of a Negro family living comfortably in the suburbs.

"Instead of lower-class reality, they wanted a middle-class standard to which the children can aspire," says Robert J. R. Follett, vice president of Follett Publishing Co., Chicago, which published both readers.

MEMORANDUM

TO: STAFF

FROM: MORELAND GRIFFITH SMITH, FAIA

DATE: JUNE 23, 1966

Attached is a rough draft of an outline for a pamphlet on which we would like to get your frank reaction.

Would a short "How to Build or Buy" be of value to the people SRC is interested in?

If so, what other information should we include?

Your reactions will be most helpful.

LET'S BUY A HOUSE

I. Should we buy or rent?

A. We should buy because -

1. We'll get more living area for our money.
2. We'll have increased privacy in our own home.
3. Besides I would like to have a lawn so I can grow radishes and roses.
4. It's time we established roots; the house will give us some permanency.
5. And buying a house is an investment; we'll be building up equity.
6. It will help us establish a good credit rating, and that in turn, may help us at some later time.

B. But we should consider the disadvantages -

1. After all, we probably won't be here the rest of our lives; if we move in a couple of years we may have a hard time selling.

2. If we stay in an apartment we don't have to bother with real estate taxes or with painting the building.

C. What sort of house could we afford to buy - and can we afford to buy?

Compare total income with total expenses and obligations which one would have with a house (housing expenses + living expenses + fixed obligations). [from Philadelphia Council on Human Relations pamphlet]

D. I've heard that the cost of a house is more than downpayment and monthly installments. What are these other expenses we ought to consider?

1. Interest on the loan
2. Taxes - city and county
3. Maintenance - For the house what are the estimated maintenance costs including painting, repairs, etc.?
4. Insurance - necessary to cover the amount of the loan and advisable for the full house investment which would also cover owner's equity.
5. Closing costs - including registration fees, transfer fees, title search, survey, etc. and which must be paid at the time of paper signing.

E. Where will we get the money?

1. FHA
2. VA
3. Conventional loan

II. I think we can afford it. Let's look for a house!

A. What should we look for in a house?

1. Location - neighborhood, nearness to work, good schools close by, conveniently located shopping areas, good transportation facilities and recreation areas
2. Physical properties - floor plan that conforms to family activities, adequate plumbing, electrical system capable of handling appliances and electrical load, sound roof, proper drainage of land, dry basement, sound floors, convenient arrangement of kitchen
3. Room for future growth of family; can a room or so be added?

B. Perhaps we should build -

1. Plans - architect drawn or stock plans from government agencies, home and garden magazines, building material supply houses, financial institutions, builders' magazines
2. Specifications - if FHA or VA financed the house must conform to certain specifications
3. Inspection - for FHA and VA homes an inspector will check periodically to see if plans and materials are the same as those approved by the government agency.

III. We think we've found OUR house, now what do we do?

Precautions before signing the mortgage -

A. Title search - check to see that there are no liens or taxes due on the property and that the buyer would have a clear title.
B. Property survey - to see what the property lines are and to make sure that you are buying what you think you are.
C. Use of services of an assessor to look at the house and give the buyer an appraisal of what the house is worth on the present market and what its general condition appears to be.
D. In case of questions about particular aspects of the building it may be necessary to con on an expert for advice - in roofing, heating, termite inspection.
E. Use of services of a lawyer to check papers, particularly the mortgage before signing!
F. Inquire about city services and regulations

1. Property taxes and whether increases are planned
2. Zoning regulations to see whether the property is protected from industrial or commercial use if this is important to the buyer and to see if any contemplated subsidiary use of the house is forbidden, such as using a room as an office
3. Garbage pick up, sewage service, street lighting, fire and police protection, gas, electricity and water rates
4. Whether the neighborhood might be destined for an urban renewal project or freeway construction
5. Fire and theft insurance rates

G. Take care to read the mortgage terms and specifications

IV. But will we have trouble in buying or building in a neighborhood predominately of another race? We're Negro.

A. Some houses are required to be sold on an equal opportunity basis - FHA and VA financed, FHA and VA repossessed. Prospective buyers can obtain a list of the repossessed houses through _____.

B. Color tax and proof of discrimination. Work through the councils on human relations or fair housing groups, using a white couple to follow up to see that terms and prices are the same for white and Negro.

C. If the builder and/or seller is found to discriminate, and if there is a legal basis to sustain the complaint, write to _____

D. If the Negro home seeker feels that the neighborhood in which he is interested may be hostile to his residence there, some precautions he might consider are -

1. Making a brief and apparently uninterested inspection of the house, then sending an appraiser or friend to make a careful inspection
2. Engaging a lawyer to make sure that the sale and mortgage is in proper order and that the title is clear
3. If the house is not in the equal opportunity group it may be necessary to use the services of a white friend to act as decoy buyer
4. Once the house is bought, notify the law enforcement agencies so that they may provide proper protection of property and life.
5. When moving day comes, move quickly, put up curtains first, then continue activities.

V. Appendix

A. Helpful telephone number and some blanks (to be filled in in part by the local council on human relations)

B. Sources of information about houses, finances, selection and details - a bibliography of pamphlets and books.

"EQUAL HEALTH OPPORTUNITY IN VIRGINIA"

One is appalled at the difference in the health and death statistics between Negroes and whites in Virginia.

For instance --- More Negro babies die at birth than white. More Negro women die at childbirth than white women. The length of life is graded usually in this manner ... white female, white male, Negro female and the Negro male. There are more Negro deaths between ages of birth and age 21 than white deaths during the corresponding age period. Generally speaking, there is a larger percentage of certain illnesses and diseases among Negroes than whites.

When one really has the opportunity to study the health and death statistics by race in Virginia one will realize that possibly two factors do exist..... economics or the ability to pay for quality medical services, and the possibility of gross discrimination against Negroes in hospitals, clinics, or other types of medical facilities, institutions (T.B. and mental, etc.) and sometimes in the actual medical service rendered. In completing this report it was significant to note that the statement was made by various individuals in administration and medical services --- "you obtain the medical service for which you are able to pay."

This therefore causes us to review first.....

I. Previous Discrimination in Virginia's Health Opportunities

A. The Role of the Federal Government in Continuing Discrimination:

The original Hill-Burton Act provided that in adopting implementing regulations the Surgeon General should "direct the State plan shall provide for adequate hospital facilities for the people residing in the State without discrimination on account of race, creed or color," but the Surgeon General was authorized to accept as compliance with this regulation the provision of "separate hospital facilities...for separate population groups" if "equitable provision on the basis of need for facilities and services of like quality" were provided for each population group. Thus, Congress statutorily incorporated the "separate but equal" concept into the Hill-Burton Act prior to the 1954 Supreme Court decision in the School Cases declaring the "separate but equal" doctrine unconstitutional.

The Surgeon General (U.S. Public Health Services) continued to operate under the "separate but equal" doctrine until 1964 in almost all cases in Virginia. Little, if any, effort was made to determine whether medical facilities and services of the white or of the Negro were equal or just separate. It appears that the Surgeon General's regulations made no provision for reviewing the State plans in this regard, or providing for non-discrimination in health opportunities.

During the period prior to 1964 another policy developed. As an alternate to the "separate but equal" health facility, the Surgeon General approved "non-discrimination" facilities. Nearly all Hill-Burton Projects were of the so-called nondiscrimination class. But! the Surgeon interpreted the nondiscrimination statutory provision to require only that "no person.. will be DENIED ADMISSION to the proposed facilities as patients because of race, creed or color."

Under this interpretation it allowed --- 1/ The segregation of patients within the facility; 2/ The denial of staff privileges to professionally qualified persons on the grounds of race, creed or color; 3/ The denial of services other than "essential services to patients; and 4/ The State to determine whether a Hill-Burton facility was complying with its nondiscrimination assurance.

B. Discrimination in Virginia's Health Opportunities:

Due to the Federal Government's role in Health Opportunity and the attitude of the State of Virginia, a number of general conditions arose, many of which still continue.

In the Virginia State institutions, mental patients have generally been kept at separate hospitals. "Virginia's Negro mental patients are confined to the Central State Hospital at Petersburg, an overcrowded institution lacking in specialized facilities. The State's white mental patients are assigned to a variety of institutions throughout the State which are capable of providing specialized services." (Title VI...one year after, a survey of desegregation of health and welfare services in the South, U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, 1966, page 9). The 1966 General Assembly approved money to bring only one such mental institution into accreditation, it will be the predominately white institution.

In the hospitals one would have noted, until just recently, that there existed separate drinking water fountains, waiting rooms, restrooms, dining rooms, wings or wards, and other physical evidence of gross discrimination. For instance --- until recently the only place a Negro patient could be assigned a bed in Norfolk, Virginia, was...in a Negro wing at one hospital, a basement in another and they were refused admission in another, or a Negro could go to the City Community Hospital (which was small). In Richmond, the situation was similar ---- some hospitals refused to admit Negroes, another had a separate building for Negro patients, or a certain area (the basement) of another hospital for Negro patients. In Lynchburg, again we discovered that several hospitals would not admit Negroes or in the case of the hospital which did admit Negroes the space area (i.e., number of beds, etc.) was smaller than for the whites and was confined to a certain location. In Roanoke, one hospital assigned Negroes in the attic and another received Negroes but had segregated units.

The Cities of Lynchburg, Norfolk, Richmond and Roanoke, for instance, have hospitals which refuse (in the past) to serve the Negro public. There are possibly other hospitals within the State which operate on this policy. In some of these hospitals it has been discovered that they have or now are receiving federal funds in some way (directly or indirectly). Generally speaking, this was not true of hospitals which have received Hill-Burton funds.

When one examines the staff privileges of the predominently white hospitals throughout the State one is confronted with two other facts --- the lack of staff (full and courtsey) privileges by the Negro physician and the lack of the Negro student in the Nursing and Medical training programs. Most of the Negro student Nursing Programs (Licensed Practical Nurses and Registered Nurses) have been in Negro institutions or colleges.

Therefore, to meet the needs of the Negro student who wanted to enter Nursing one had to go generally to Hampton Institute or Norfolk Division of Virginia State College. There were some other hospitals, usually religious institutions, which did allow some limited number to train. Previously, the Piedmont T.B. Hospital had Negroes training for a T.B. Nursing Program, but is now discontinued. There was also a St. Philips School of Nursing which appeared to be in conjunction with MCV of Richmond, Virginia. One of the recent changes at this institution has been a change from R.N. to L.P.N. It has been almost impossible for the Negro student to be allowed to be trained in Virginia as it has been possible for the white student. This is not to minimize the great work done previously by the all Negro institutions. The important factor to remember is Negro prospective nurses must be trained in previously all white schools due to the cut back in such programs, i.e. MCV, Piedmont, etc.

Traditionally, the Negro has been unable to obtain his medical training as a physician (or specialist) or as a dentist. The two schools of Medicine (University of Virginia, Charlottesville, and the Medical College of Virginia, Richmond) would not previously admit a Negro or claimed they could find the qualified applicants. This condition has changed slightly, the answer given now is -- "we cannot find qualified Negro applicants." Thus, the Negro has had to go outside of the State of Virginia for his medical training to prepare for a career as a dentist or physician. It appears that these institutions still do not have a strong program or policy which would encourage more Virginia Negroes to be trained in Virginia.

Negro Staff Privileges (courtsey and full time) are in question in most cases in Virginia. The two local medical associations (Negro and white physicians) had little contact with each other in the past. Few predominently white hospitals allow Negro physicians and dentist to have staff privileges. There is the Old Dominion Medical Society for Negro physicians. The Medical Society of Virginia for white physicians. Locally for instance, in Norfolk you have the Norfolk County Medical Association for the white physician and Norfolk Medical Socity for Negroes; while in Richmond you have the Richmond Academy of Medicine for white physicians and the Richmond Medical Society for Negro physicians.

The admission policy and bed assignments in Virginia hospitals still, to date pose a problem.

"Commission staff members noted desegregated rooms and wards, including the obstetrical ward, when they visited Richmond Memorial Hospital at Richmond, Virginia, in July. Segregation was still in evidence in the nursery, however, where Negro babies were kept in a separate room. The hospital also administers Sheltering Arms, a non-profit, privately endowed charity hospital for the medically indigent which had previously accepted only white patients. The hospital administrator said a new policy allowed the admission of Negro patients to the Sherltering Arms. Only one Negro had been accepted as a patient, however. (In January 1966, the administrator of Richmond Memorial Hospital reported that the nursery was desegregated soon after the Commission field team pointed out that Negro babies were confined to one room of the hospital nursery. He also reported a slight increase in the admissions of indigent non-welfare Negroes to the formerly all-white Sheltering Arms.) (U.S. Civil Rights Comm. Report 1966, p.7.)

"There are four separate buildings - Medical College of Virginia Hospital, St Philip Hospital, Memorial Hospital, and E.G. Williams Hospital - in the Medical College of Virginia hospital complex in Richmond. St. Philip, a 177-bed facility across the street from Medical College of Virginia Hospital, was built in 1919 for Negro patients. In July 1965, it still was used only for Negroes. Officials of the hospital told Commission representatives that St. Philip patients requiring surgery or other medical services not available at St. Philip were taken to Medical College of Virginia or other hospitals in the complex for the necessary service and returned to St Philip... However, Negro patients receiving emergency treatment at Medical College of Virginia Hospital were transferred to St. Philip as soon as their condition permitted." (USCR Report 1966, page 8.) It should be pointed out that changes have been made at MCV which appear to have the admission and bed assignments in compliance with the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Title VI, Section 601.

It can be safely stated that no hospital had a complete nondiscrimination policy in all of its phases of operation until just recently (1966) in the State of Virginia. This means that in the School of Nursing Program, Staff privileges, Staff assignments, admission policy, bed assignments, dining room facilities, waiting rooms, etc. -- some phase of the hospital's operation was out of compliance with the CRA-64, Title VI, Section 601. It has been stated unofficially that, as of May 7, 1966, 17 of 150 public and private hospitals in Virginia have been given clearance by the Federal government as satisfying civil rights requirements for providing care under Medicare. There have been two court cases against hospitals in Newport News. One demonstration several years ago against a hospital in Suffolk. As of April 1, 1966, there were 13 hospitals which had complaints filed against them for non-compliance. As of March 1966, one hospital in Richmond was out of compliance and undecided about its status. Three hospitals in Richmond were out of compliance and not anticipating a change.

II. Laws and Court Decisions Which Should Provide Equal Health Opportunity in Virginia

A. Fourth Circuit Court Rules Hospitals Must Stop Discriminatory Practices

The Simkins vs. Cone decision (323 F. 2d. 958, Fourth Circuit, November 1, 1963, Certiorari denied by Supreme Court of the United States, March 2, 1964, 84 S. Ct. 793) has very significantly advanced the doctrine of equal access to health facilities. This case was brought in the Federal District Court in North Carolina by Negro physicians, dentists, and patients, all of whom alleged discriminatory practices by two Greensboro hospitals and their administrators and directors. Both hospitals had been constructed with Hill-Burton funds under the "separate but equal" provision. The Negro plaintiffs asked the Court to--

(1) Order the hospitals to cease denying Negro physicians and dentists the use of staff facilities on the ground of race;

(2) Restrain the hospitals from denying and abridging admission of patients on the basis of race;

(3) Restrain the hospitals from refusing on the basis of race to permit patients to be treated by their own physicians and dentists in the hospitals; and

(4) Declare the "separate but equal" provision of the Hill-Burton Act and implementing regulations of the Surgeon General unconstitutional under the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment and the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment.

The District Court decided against the Negro plaintiffs. On appeal, the Fourth Circuit Court reversed the lower Court's decision and granted the relief sought by the plaintiffs. The U.S. Supreme Court refused to review the case, thereby leaving intact the ruling of the Fourth Circuit which held for the Negro plaintiffs.

B. Guidelines For Compliance With Title VI of The Civil Rights Act of 1964

Hospitals in compliance with the Act are characterized by absence of separation, discrimination or any other distinction on the basis of race, color or national origin in any activity carried on in, by or for the institution affecting the care and treatment of patients.

Specifically, the above would include (but not be limited to) the following characteristics:

1. The hospital provides inpatient and outpatient care on a non-discriminatory basis; all patients are admitted and receive care without regard to race, color or national origin. Declaration of an open admission policy may not be sufficient to effectuate compliance in some instances, particularly where the hospital has previously served only or primarily patients of one race. Where there is a significant variation between the racial composition of patients and the population served, the hospital has a responsibility to determine the reasons and take corrective action if they are due to discriminatory practices.

2. All patients are being assigned to all rooms, wards, floors, sections and buildings without regard to race, color or national origin. In communities with non-white population, this results in bi-racial occupancy of multi-bed rooms and wards and use of single bed rooms on a non-discriminatory basis.

   Patients are not asked if they are willing or desire to share a room with a person of another race. Transfer of patients is not used as a device to evade compliance with the Act.

3. Employees, medical staff and volunteers of the hospital are assigned to patient services without regard to the race, color or national origin of either the patient or employee. Courtesy titles (Mr., Miss, Dr.) whenever used, are being used throughout the hospital including patient care areas and news releases announcing admissions, births, deaths, etc.

4. The granting of permanent or temporary staff privileges is carried out in a non-discriminatory manner. Staff privileges are not denied professionally qualified personnel on the basis of race, color or national origin, or on the basis of non-membership in an organization which discriminates on the basis of race, color or national origin. Removal of staff privileges and other disciplinary actions shall not be based on race, color or national origin.

5. Non-discriminatory practices of the institution include all aspects of training programs, and require recruiting and selection of trainees at both predominantly white and Negro schools. The same recruiting procedures are used at all such institutions. Third parties are not permitted to select trainees on a basis which, if done directly by the hospital, would be violative of the Civil Rights Act. These requirements apply to interns (medical, dental, OT, PT, dietician), residents and training programs such as graduate nurse, practical nurse, medical technology, x-ray technology, etc.

6. All services rendered by the institution, its employees or vendors to patients or others are provided without regard to race, color, or national origin. This would include:

   A. Administrative services (admission, medical records, fiscal, etc.).

   B. Medical and dental care for inpatients and outpatients (all specialties-clinical, diagnostic and other pathology services).

C. Paramedical care and ancillary and supporting services (food, pharmacy, social services, laundry, toilet facilities, waiting rooms, entrances, exists, snack bars, gift shops, visiting hours, doctor's lounges). Patients and visitors are using all cafeteria facilities without regard to race, color or national origin; no dining facilities are used only by non-whites by "custom" or "preference".

D. Ambulance services.

7. Employees and medical staff have been notified in writing of the hospital's policy for compliance with Title VI of the Civil Rights Act.

8. Hospitals which have recently changed from discriminatory practices have taken steps to notify those who previously had been excluded from hospital services (e.g., letters to Negro physicians or physician organizations and Civil Rights leaders, notices to newspapers, posting of signs in hospitals, etc.).

9. Hospitals which have had dual facilities to affect racial separation have either converted one of them to a different purpose or have taken steps to change the traffic flow so that they are actually used biracially.

III. Some Areas of Major Concern Which Still Exist Toward Accomplishing Equal Health Opportunity in Virginia

A. The Role of the Federal Government in Requiring Full Compliance:

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare, -- Public Health Services, Office of Equal Health Opportunities, has launched a major effort to seek compliance with all health services obtaining federal monies. In Region III, OEHO, PHS, DHEW, 200 Seventh Street, Charlottesville, Virginia, Civil Rights Compliance Officers have been working since April 1966 to review each hospital which is seeking to apply for Medicare, using Federal Funds, or anticipating the usage of Federal Funds.

These questions remain -- will the Federal Government be strict in requiring compliance, will the U.S. Department of Justice sue a municipal government (Title III, CRA-64) for failure to comply or will the Federal Government sue for collection of Federal Funds by a state or local government, or a medical institution when they refuse to comply?

Will the Federal Government strengthen the case against discrimination in the employment of personnel by health institutions and services? Will there he a stronger guideline in the area of employment as there has developed in the field of education by recent court decisions on faculty and administration? Will there develop future court cases initiate these cases, or will it still be the burden of the person or group who is being discriminated against to file suit?

Let us not overlook the many accomplishments which have been achieved through DHEW, PHS, and through the efforts of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights by their surveys and reports, by Civil Rights Organizations, by the Medical Associations, and by the hospitals themselves. May we point out that many hospitals and medical associations have been willing to comply. Granted there are some in Virginia who will do as little as possible and as much as is necessary to comply.

B. The Role of the Virginia State Agencies in Requiring Compliance:

Again, this is another area where it has been unfortunate that the State was not willing to exercise States Rights to move from the unequal and separate phase of health opportunity to an equal health opportunity. The State, in many respects, has failed and is continuing to be slow in providing equal health opportunities for all of the citizens in the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Since the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, there is possibly developing an even more tragic story -- the lack of a positive policy, in some cases program, and a plan of action by the Virginia Department of Welfare and Institutions, the Department of Public Health, and other related Virginia State Agencies which are responsible for Health Opportunity.

This is not to say that medically the State did not perform its function. But the State operated by the philosophy "separate" which by its very nature in many cases did not produce the equal health opportunity for all. There are too many statistics one can produce which give evidence of a possible gross injustice by the State and local government, and private institutions in providing equal health opportunity in Virginia.

The General Assembly probably has contributed to this factor by not requiring a positive plan of action and policy which would provide Equal Health Opportunity to ALL citizens residing in the Commonwealth... regardless of their race, color or national origin.

The many State Agencies which signed HEW Form 411 Compliance last year and required local agencies which receive Federal Funds to sign the same compliance ARE in most cases paper compliance! There is ample evidence to prove that to date (May 10, 1966) several State Agencies have allowed separate facilities and services to continue with little change by the local hospitals, Schools of Nursing, Medical Training, Mental Institutions, and other related health services and institutions to change their policy and practices so that in actual practice discrimination would cease NOW! There is evidence when cases of actual complaints were filed by CORE, NAACP and others against hospitals, etc., and the U.S. DHEW officials investigated and found facilities were in non-compliance (by the existing visual evidence), and apparently the DHEW recommended to the Virginia State Agencies not to continue the use of the facility in question (because the State Agency was administering Federal Funds and had signed a compliance form too); YET, there is little evidence that the State Agencies ever ceased to use the facility in question. It could well be that there might be evidence of gross illegal usage of federal funds as it is related to the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Title VI, Section 601, and the directives and policies which the State Agencies have agreed upon by signing HEW Form 411 Compliance.

It would also appear, if this is a proven fact, that the State of Virginia has a legal and a moral responsibility to cease such practices as it relates to Equal Health Opportunity in the administration of federal funds as required by the Civil Rights Act.

It would further appear, if this is a proven fact, that the U.S. Department of Justice has the legal responsibility to protect all of the citizens residing in the Commonwealth of Virginia by filing suit to cease such practices by the State of Virginia, certain local governments, and certain private health institutions and services.

We hear so much today -- "We are law abiding citizens." Yes, it is hoped that we are. It is also believed that so should the Commonwealth of Virginia and local governments be law abiding as they achieve the greatest and best Health Opportunities within this Commonwealth.

22. Do you feel that most of the white citizens in your area who have not already accepted constructive attitudes toward race relations can be effectively reached? Yes xx No _____ Please comment:

Most-- but far from all

23. Please comment on the programs, policies, and interests of your organization regarding race relations and closely related issues which may not have been covered fully by the above questions.

Our organization, from its beginning, has been inter-racial. It has never been an issue as far as membership is concerned. But since the membership picks what specific governmental issues they wish to study, unless race relations happens to be chosen by the members, very little attention is given to it.

24. To the extent that you have been formerly concerned with race relations, do you feel that there is any point in continuing to pursue this concern, or do you feel that the issue of race relations has already been amply dealt with?

25. Do you have an adult education program on race relations that is aimed specifically at the white citizens of your area? Not to my knowledge

QUESTIONNAIRE: WHO SPEAKS TO THE WHITE SOUTH?

(Please print or type)

1. What is the main purpose of your organization?
1- Rural Community Development among Negroes in the South
2- Low-cost, interracial conference center

2. Does your organization try to communicate with the general public about race relations? Not on an organized or intentional basis, most of our work is done within the Negro community

3. On the issue of race relations, do you try to reach a sizable number of: (Check appropriate blocks)

A. Upper income whites ☐
B. Upper income Negroes ☑
C. Middle income whites ☐
D. Middle income Negroes ☑
E. Lower income whites ☐
F. Lower income Negroes ☑

A. Whites with grammar school education ☐
B. Negroes with grammar school education ☑
C. Whites with high school education ☐
D. Negroes with high school education ☑

4. What methods do you employ to reach the white citizens of your area on race relations?

A. Door-to-door campaigns ☐
B. Rallies and town meetings ☐
C. Local radio or TV broadcasts ☐
D. Distribution of literature ☐

1) Your own ☑
2) Other sources ☐

Please specify: We have tried newspaper stories explaining our work but have been hampered by a hostile or frightened press.

5. On the issue of race relations, what hindrances to your work do you encounter in your area? Fear and lack of initiative on the part of white people who know better / a general attitude among whites of the county that we are communist oriented.

6. Are there organized groups that are active in opposing the implementation of civil rights in your area?
Yes ✓ No ~~✓~~. Please comment: not so much organized for that purpose (as K.K.K.) but school board, hospital board have shown resistance. A private school has been organized. There is a small and ineffective Klan chapter (so they say)

7. How effective do you judge the activities of such groups to be? in discouraging progress.

A. Highly influential ☐
B. Influential ☑
C. Somewhat influential ☐
D. Almost without influence ☐

8. Have such organizations hampered the success of your own organization on the civil rights and race relations issues? Yes ✓ No ____. Please comment: Particularly in getting O.E.O. programs started.

9. On race relations, what are the problems that you encounter within your own ranks? We have conflict of opinion sometimes as to approach, but this doesn't constitute a problem.

10. Do you have ways to gauge the effectiveness of your efforts to reach the white citizens of your area on race relations? Yes _____ No ✓. Please comment and specify such methods, if any: _____

11. How do you rate your organization in its ability to influence white citizens on race relations?

A. Highly influential ☐
B. Influential ☐
C. Somewhat influential ☐
D. Almost without influence ☑

12. Does your organization take an active part in protests or demonstrations which involve the issue of race relations? Yes _____ No ✓.

13. Do you feel that demonstrations have a positive or negative effect on the white citizens of your area?

Positive _____ Negative ✓

This type effort has not been followed through and has thus been unsuccessful.

14. Do you feel that demonstrations alert the white citizens of your area or areas to an awareness of problems on the issue of race relations?

Yes _____ No _____. Please comment: Hard to say. Demonstrations in the form of boycott have had no public recognition and have generally been poorly organized.

15. Does your organization make appeals to civic and public officials on the issue of race relations?
Yes ✓ No _____.

Are the responses to such appeals generally handled satisfactorily? Yes ✓ No _____. Please comment:

16. On what other issues besides race relations has your organization achieved significant progress? In upgrading the economic and community life of Negro citizens through a program of community development. Also in sponsoring interracial conference and advising local civil rights efforts.

17. Is the handling of race relations relegated to a special committee or sub-committee of your organization? Yes _____ No ✓. Please comment:

18. Is your organization a membership organization?
Yes _____ No ✓.

19. If so, what percentage, roughly, of your membership is actively engaged in race relations activities?

20. What is the size of your organization? Please specify whether this size represents the local, state, regional, or national level.

		Local	State	Reg'l	Nat'l
A. 1,000 +	☐
B. 500-1,000	☐
C. 100-500	☐
D. - 100	☐

21. Do you feel that there has been a change in the attitudes of white citizens in your area on the issue of race relations within the last five years?
Yes ✓ No ____

The last two years?
Yes ✓ No ____

Please comment: Public accommodations have been opened, the schools have desegregated, jobs are begining to open, pay scales have improved. Negroes are in political office.

22. Do you feel that most of the white citizens in your area who have not already accepted constructive attitudes toward race relations can be effectively reached? Yes ____ No ____ Please comment: Most people "go along" with the law. Few have really changed their attitudes. Younger people will continue to grow in their attitudes and older people will continue to withdraw or resist and slow down progress.

23. Please comment on the programs, policies, and interests of your organization regarding race relations and closely related issues which may not have been covered fully by the above questions.

We find that projects that come out of our Community Development program find both white & Negro citizens participating because of the benefit to them. For instance an agricultural marketing Coop. and a rural water system. Thus there is interracial cooperation without reference to "race relations"

24. To the extent that you have been formerly concerned with race relations, do you feel that there is any point in continuing to pursue this concern, or do you feel that the issue of race relations has already been amply dealt with? It is possible that we can do more - mostly in the area of educating people and giving out information.

25. Do you have an adult education program on race relations that is aimed specifically at the white citizens of your area? no -

We have no chapters formed in Louisiana at this time.

QUESTIONNAIRE: WHO SPEAKS TO THE WHITE SOUTH?

(Please print or type)

Paid

1. What is the main purpose of your organization?

Implementation of the Bill of Rights.

2. Does your organization try to communicate with the general public about race relations? We do, but indirectly.

3. On the issue of race relations, do you try to reach a sizable number of: (Check appropriate blocks)

We work for civil liberties for all and try to reach every area of our society.

A. Upper income whites ☐
B. Upper income Negroes ☐
C. Middle income whites ☐
D. Middle income Negroes ☐
E. Lower income whites ☐
F. Lower income Negroes ☐

A. Whites with grammar school education ☐
B. Negroes with grammar school education ☐
C. Whites with high school education ☐
D. Negroes with high school education ☐
E. Whites with college education ☐
F. Negroes with college education ☐

4. What methods do you employ to reach the white citizens of your area ~~on race relations~~?

A. Door-to-door campaigns ☐
B. Rallies and town meetings ☒
C. Local radio or TV broadcasts ☒
D. Distribution of literature ☒

1) Your own /X/
2) Other sources /X/

Please specify: Newsletters, local and national; pamphlets from national; mimeographed and printed flyers.

5. On the issue of race relations, what hindrances to your work do you encounter in your area? Ignorance and bias of community; ignorance of newspapers, generally; ingrained bigotry of officialdom.

6. Are there organized groups that are active in opposing the implementation of civil rights in your area?
Yes X No _____. Please comment: Klan, Citizens Council, officialdom.

7. How effective do you judge the activities of such groups to be?

A. Highly influential /X/
B. Influential /_/
C. Somewhat influential /_/
D. Almost without influence /_/

8. Have such organizations hampered the success of your own organization on the civil rights and race relations issues? Yes _____ No _____. Please comment: Very difficult for this organization to answer. We operate on a fully integrated basis; use example rather than precept. The only hindrance to our operation is in finding facilities for integrated activities, and this problem is rapidly being alleviated, at least in the New Orleans area.

9. On race relations, what are the problems that you encounter within your own ranks? Virtually nil. Our biggest problem is attracting Negroes to membership in our organization, but this is also true, generally, of Whites.

10. Do you have ways to gauge the effectiveness of your efforts to reach the white citizens of your area on race relations? Yes X No _____. Please comment and specify such methods, if any: We are a predominantly white organization, but at our last public meeting at least ½ of the audience was colored.

11. How do you rate your organization in its ability to influence white citizens on race relations?

Have no way of telling. I suspect we primarily attract those who are already disposed to our way of thinking, and make few converts.

A. Highly influential ☐
B. Influential ☐
C. Somewhat influential ☐
D. Almost without influence ☐

12. Does your organization take an active part in protests or demonstrations which involve the issue of race relations? Yes _____ No _____. Not as an organization, but many of our individual members do.

13. Do you feel that demonstrations have a positive or negative effect on the white citizens of your area?

Positive _____ Negative _____ Difficult to say; I suspect negative on some (particularly bigots and officialdom), positive on others.

14. Do you feel that demonstrations alert the white citizens of your area or areas to an awareness of problems on the issue of race relations?

Yes X No _____. Please comment: This is a personl rather than organizational opinion. I feel that demonstrations tend to point ~~up problems, but also tend to heat up emotions and make rat~~ional discourse difficult if not impossible. Education and attitude changes must be achieved by other methods after the problem has been exposed and ~~emotion has cooled.~~ (this is not to argue against lie ins, sit ins, marches, etc., but I think it essential that they be followed up with ~~intense educational campaigns.~~)

15. Does your organization make appeals to civic and public officials on the issue of race relations?
Yes X No _____. Whenever the situation demands it. Our principal concern in this regard is equality of treatment for all citizens.
Are the responses to such appeals generally handled satisfactorily? Yes _____ No _____. Please comment:
A mixed bag. Usually we are first ignored, but sometimes we detect progress after face-saving delays.

16. On what other issues besides race relations has your organization achieved significant progress? Our most significant progress has been in our area of chief concern, fair trials. Poor whites get ganged up on in the courts, too, but most usually it is a Negro who gets railroaded, almost a matter of course in mixed race capital cases.

17. Is the handling of race relations relegated to a special committee or sub-committee of your organization? Yes _____ No X. Please comment: We are not a civil rights organization and do not deal with race relations on a separate basis.

18. Is your organization a membership organization?
Yes X No _____.

19. If so, what percentage, roughly, of your membership is actively engaged in race relations activities?
Hard to say, but I would suspect the percentage is rather high, particularly for a predominantly white, Southern organization.

20. What is the size of your organization? Please specify whether this size represents the local, state, regional, or national level.

		Local	State	Reg'l	Nat'l
A. 1,000 +					80,000
B. 500-1,000				Unk
C. 100-500		250	350
D. - 100

21. Do you feel that there has been a change in the attitudes of white citizens in your area on the issue of race relations within the last five years?

Yes X No _____ I have only recently moved to New Orleans, but I believe New Orleans is the most fully integrated city in the nation and will have public segregation problems whipped within a decade or less. (housing is something else, although there is progress here).

The last two years?

Yes _____ No _____

Please comment: Public transportation is fully integrated, as are libraries, beaches, etc, although there is a tendency (natural, I think, for the birds to flock together. Many restaurants are completely integrated, and present few problems. Schools are slowly coming around, housing even slower. (Little of this applies to Louisiana, which is distinct from N. O., but some progress can be detected up state). Jobs are opening up for Negroes now, and the main problem here is a lack of qualified Negroes for the better positions. The employment situation is far from solved, but is much improved.

22. Do you feel that most of the white citizens in your area who have not already accepted constructive attitudes toward race relations can be effectively reached? Yes _____ No X Please comment: I think for the most part, die-hard segregationists will die segregationists. The big change in attitudes, if it comes and I feel it will, will be in the next generation or the ones after that.

23. Please comment on the programs, policies, and interests of your organization regarding race relations and closely related issues which may not have been covered fully by the above questions.
To repeat, race relations per se are somewhat peripheral to our primary concern although in all probability our entire membership, as individuals, areinterested in and work toward improving race relations.

24. To the extent that you have been formerly concerned with race relations, do you feel that there is any point in continuing to pursue this concern, or do you feel that the issue of race relations has already been amply dealt with? Definitely not. I doubt that racial bigotry will ever be completely eradicated, and there will always be a need for improvement.

25. Do you have an adult education program on race relations that is aimed specifically at the white citizens of your area? Only in a very general sense of the term.

Mr. Antony Whitfield
Assistant to the Director of Information
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Whitfield:

I have filled out your questionnaire as best I can.

As we are not an organization whose purpose is to affect race relations, I am limited as to how much help I can give you. Such side results which occur, due to ACLU actions, we are happy to achieve, but they are not our primary purpose.

Sincerely,

Florence Diffenderfer

enc. questionnaire

Founded 1920

"I believe with your members that whatever a man's political thinking, whatever his background, environment or education, he must, if he be a real American, respect the aims of organizations such as yours. The integrity of the American Civil Liberties Union and of its workers in the field has never been, and I feel, never will be questioned."

— HARRY S. TRUMAN

"I will continue to combat every threat to our sacred principles of freedom, liberty and equal justice under law . . . . It is good to be reminded that the members of the American Civil Liberties Union and the overwhelming majority of my fellow citizens are working together in this field with steadfast vigor and understanding."

— DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

"Your voice has always been raised clearly and sharply when our liberties have been threatened. America is a stronger nation for your uncompromising efforts. If we are to give the leadership the world requires of us, we must rededicate ourselves to the great principles of our constitution — the very principles which distinguish us from our adversaries in the world. Our nation needs the services of organizations and citizens who will remain vigilant in the defense of these principles."

— JOHN F. KENNEDY

Bergen Evening Record

Hackensack, N. J.

"If the battle for democracy in the United States is ever lost it will be lost, in a manner of speaking, over the dead body of the American Civil Liberties Union . . ."

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

"The American Civil Liberties Union . . has been praised for its work by such men as President Truman, Thomas E. Dewey and Gen. Douglas MacArthur. The ACLU is a group which fights for the rights of men everywhere to free speech, fair trial and equality before the law."

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

"In its long history the ACLU has befriended persons of all shades of political and religious opinion . . Concern for free speech, equal treatment under the law, and a fair trial before conviction is the essence of Americanism, the opposite of Communist tyranny. If this country ever acquiesces in a denial of civil rights to its humblest or most degraded citizen, it has taken a step on the road to despotism."

New York Herald Tribune

"The American Civil Liberties Union has won for itself an acknowledged role as watchdog of the citizen's liberties . . ."

The New York Times

"The American Civil Liberties Union (is a) useful and thoroughly patriotic organization . . . . To equate patriotism with conformity, orthodoxy and name-calling is dangerous nonsense; and this cannot be pointed out too often . . ."

"The American Civil Liberties Union has an essential role at this critical time. It defends the rights of even the most despised to speak, to assemble, and to petition for redress of grievances. It protects the individual's constitutional guarantees of the right to counsel, to confrontation and due process of law. It has come to symbolize racial justice and religion freedom."

— LYNDON B. JOHNSON

The Des Moines Register

"The Civil Liberties Union . . . has defended the rights of free speech, free press, religious freedom, and academic freedom for all sorts of political groups and individuals — including race-baiters, semi-fascists, Communists, and other reactionaries as well as liberals . . ."

Durham Morning Herald

Durham, N. C.

"The ACLU's mission is to fight for the preservation of the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, and it is a fight that's never won. . ."

The Evening Star

Washington, D. C.

"The A.C.L.U. is composed of individuals of varying political faith . . its record is one of steadfast devotion to and defense of the civil liberties which are guaranteed to all of us by the Bill of Rights . . ."

The Washington Post

"The ACLU . . . has proven, over the years, that it knows and understands what true Americanism means."

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH

"The ACLU has established its fearlessly independent reputation and particularly its freedom from Communist control, by years of evenhanded defense of a principle—the freedom principle of the Bill of Rights . . ."

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

"'I do not agree with a word you say,' said Voltaire, 'but will defend to the death your right to say it.' It would be hard to find a more searching test of the genuineness of democratic sentiments than is implicit in this famous dictum. And it would be equally hard to find an organization that subjects itself to this test more often and more willingly than does the American Civil Liberties Union."

San Francisco Examiner

"You may sometimes disagree, as we do, with the ACLU's choice of cases or ts interpretations of the Bill of Rights and other constitutional guarantees. But this is an area where disagreement and dissent have gone on throughout the life of our Nation; if agreement were universal, no ACLU would be needed. The ACLU is worthy of the support of all freedom loving citizens in its current drive for new members and funds to continue its defense of American liberties."

Minneapolis Morning Tribune

"Over a long period of years conservatives and radicals, employers and labor unions, Americans in every walk of life and of every political complexion, have found the ACLU fighting on their side. The only provocation to action has been a civil liberty endangered . . ."

Dear Friend:

Our organization is presently conducting a survey to determine who speaks to the white South.

Basically, our aim is to learn what work is being done by you towards reaching the average white Southerner on the subject of race relations.

All information forwarded to us shall be held in strict confidence. Findings will be presented in generalized terms. Cooperating agencies may be listed separately from the findings but there will be no one-to-one relation drawn between the findings and the cooperating agencies.

We shall appreciate your cooperation in filling out and returning to us the enclosed questionnaire, advising whether it would be feasible to send similar copies to your local chapters and providing us with a list of such chapters.

Thank you.

Very truly yours,

D. Distribution of literature ☐

1) Your own ☐
2) Other sources ☐

Please specify: _____

5. On the issue of race relations, what hindrances to your work do you encounter in your area? None

6. Are there organized groups that are active in opposing the implementation of civil rights in your area?
Yes X No ____. Please comment: Birch Society Cells ~~quietly~~ quietly active — not strong.
Ku Klux Klan is in Florida, but we never hear of them in Dade County. They tried to have a rally here, but it was singularly unsuccessful.

7. How effective do you judge the activities of such groups to be?

A. Highly influential ☐
B. Influential ☐
C. Somewhat influential ☐
D. Almost without influence ☒

8. Have such organizations hampered the success of your own organization on the civil rights and race relations issues? Yes ____ No No. Please comment: ____

D. Almost without influence ☐

12. Does your organization take an active part in protests or demonstrations which involve the issue of race relations? Yes ____ No X.

13. Do you feel that demonstrations have a positive or negative effect on the white citizens of your area?
Positive ____ Negative X

14. Do you feel that demonstrations alert the white citizens of your area or areas to an awareness of problems on the issue of race relations?
Yes X and No X. Please comment: Awareness of the problems in other areas, causing demonstrations. Attitude here is "It can't happen here."
Everyone concerned with problems in communities caused by demonstrations; not too many aware of problems which caused the demonstration in the first place.

15. Does your organization make appeals to civic and public officials on the issue of race relations?
Yes X No ____.
Are the responses to such appeals generally handled satisfactorily? Yes ____ No ____. Please comment:
No response, but we have had no real problems. Any we would tend to have have been well-anticipated and worked out by our local Community Relations Board.

16. On what other issues besides race relations has your organization achieved significant progress? ____
Consumer protection education
Quality education
Support of good metropolitan gov't.
" for better public hospitals.

17. Is the handling of race relations relegated to a special committee or sub-committee of your organization? Yes ____ No X. Please comment: ____
No specific committee. Issues are handled through our Public Affairs Dept. We send representatives to most community committee meetings working on any specific issue.

18. Is your organization a membership organization?
Yes X No ____.

19. If so, what percentage, roughly, of your membership is actively engaged in race relations activities?
2% (?)

20. What is the size of your organization? Please specify whether this size represents the local, state, regional, or national level.

		Local	State	Reg'l	Nat'l
A. 1,000 +	☒	✓			123,000
B. 500-1,000	☐
C. 100-500	☐
D. - 100	☐

21. Do you feel that there has been a change in the attitudes of white citizens in your area on the issue of race relations within the last five years?

Yes X No ____

The last two years?

Yes X No ____

Please comment: School integration, both student and faculty, has been almost completed without fuss or incident. Transportation, hotels and restaurants, ditto. No breakthrough yet in housing, but wide and widespread changing of fringe areas, which are mixed at first and then all-negro.

22. Do you feel that most of the white citizens in your area who have not already accepted constructive attitudes toward race relations can be effectively reached? Yes ____ No X Please comment: ____

This will take at least another generation. The prejudices of the parents are still too ingrained in the family. Church and school need years to complete the already good work they have started.

23. Please comment on the programs, policies, and interests of your organization regarding race relations and closely related issues which may not have been covered fully by the above questions.

Ours has always been an open membership group and any woman interested in furthering our goals and purpose may join by paying dues.

Because we like to work best among people of our own kind and because we believe in human dignity, we are proud that our local N.C.J.W. has this year organized the 1st Chapter of the Nat'l Council of Negro Women in Dade County (maybe in the State of Florida.)

24. To the extent that you have been formerly concerned with race relations, do you feel that there is any point in continuing to pursue this concern, or do you feel that the issue of race relations has already been amply dealt with? We must continue with this issue in order to educate the gen'l public. We cannot, of course, erase prejudice quickly, but we can erode continuously. The problem of race relations will be with us for many years to come, so we must learn to make bad race relations a sin, a vice, a crime.

25. Do you have an adult education program on race relations that is aimed specifically at the white citizens of your area? N.C.J.W. Schools for Community Action. Study groups for members only.

Dear Mr. Whitfield:

The enclosed brochure will explain the purpose, program and activities of the League of Women Voters of Florida for you. You will notice that race relations per se are not a part of any of these items. Therefore, I find that the QUESTIONNAIRE: WHO SPEAKS TO THE WHITE SOUTH? cannot be answered.

If there is some other information which you would like to have me furnish, I will be glad to do so if it is pertinent to League program.

Sincerely yours,

THE LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS OF FLORIDA

WHAT IT IS . . . WHAT IT DOES

composed of members of all local and provisional Leagues in Florida and part of the League of Women Voters of the United States. It is a volunteer organization. No salaries are paid to its officers and directors.

MEMBERSHIP

is open to all women citizens of voting age who believe in representative government. More than 3,300 members present a typical cross-section of political, professional, educational, economic, ethnic, racial, religious and social backgrounds.

LEAGUE PROGRAM

teaches members how the democratic processes work in our society and government through their participation in study, discussion, decision-making and action.

SERVING THE VOTERS

before elections League provides nonpartisan information about candidates for state and local offices; distributes basic facts about important state election issues. Local Leagues publish citizen's guide booklets about the structure of their local governments.

MANY VOLUNTEER HOURS are spent by League members doing research, interviewing public officials and employees, compiling and digesting information, planning and executing membership meetings, public meetings and educational campaigns, publishing and distributing material and communicating with elected representatives.

AT CONVENTIONS AND COUNCILS

delegates from local Leagues meet every two years to adopt League program, elect officers, discuss and plan League work for the biennium. Delegates meet at Council in off-convention years to review progress and plan additional work.

IN TALLAHASSEE

during the Legislative sessions, State Board members lobby in the public interest on positions attained from League studies; arrange for and conduct seminars where members from all over Florida learn first-hand about state government operation.

LEGISLATIVE HEARINGS

state commission and interim committee meetings dealing with items of League interest are attended by League members whenever possible and testimony is given when authorized by the State Board.

PARTICIPANTS IN GOVERNMENT

League members attend local government sessions as observers; serve in the public interest with other organizations; stimulate community awareness of local problems and issues.

MODEST ANNUAL BUDGET

is about $20,000, most of which comes from voluntary local League pledges. Dues are purposely low so as not to preclude anyone from membership. The remaining part of League income is from contributions made by members and by public-spirited citizens who value the services of the League.

ACTIVE IN FLORIDA SINCE 1939 . . . . LEAGUE HAS WORKED FOR:

Revision of the Florida Constitution • Equitable apportionment of representation in the Legislature • Establishment and support of a Department of Water Resources • Central Purchasing Agency • Permissive jury duty for women • Adequate financial support of the public schools • A State Tax Commission • Better facilities for care of dependent and handicapped children • Improved laws for health and welfare • Annual sessions of the Legislature • Correction of inequities in the tax structure • Establishment of the Florida Merit System • Permanent personal registration • Local self-government for cities and counties.

THE PURPOSE OF THE LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS OF FLORIDA IS TO PROMOTE POLITICAL RESPONSIBILITY THROUGH INFORMED AND ACTIVE PARTICIPATION OF CITIZENS IN GOVERNMENT.

STATE PROGRAM 1966-1969

CURRENT AGENDA

Revision of the Florida Constitution

CONTINUING RESPONSIBILITIES

1. Support of measures which correct inequities in the present tax structure.
2. Support of equitable apportionment of representation in the Florida legislature.
3. Strengthening and extending the Florida Merit System.
4. Repeal of the party loyalty oath.
5. Support of improved legislative operations including an increase in salaries for legislators, expansion of the Legislative Reference Bureau, registration of all lobbyists and a Code of Ethics for legislators.

PROGRESS REPORT: WHO SPEAKS TO THE WHITE SOUTH?

TO: Paul Anthony and Pat Watters

FROM: Antony Whitfield

Largely, the questionnaire returns have reflected a curious assortment of responses. Specific items in the questionnaire have generally elicited varied answers. This would seem to suggest that no clearly defined area of concensus exists among the respective organizations on the issue of race relations.

Also, significant contrasts in the relative aims of each respective organization seem to further preclude generalizations on the merits of such aims as those which relate specifically to race relations.

Perhaps the most outstanding feature in the returns has been the vigorous assessment of current problems now existing within the respective camps of the organizations, i.e., "black power," school textbooks, and fair housing.

Dear Mr. Whitfield:

I have your letter of July 8th relating to a survey in connection with the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for peoples in the South.

The organization which I head as president is a federation of Catholic Women's organizations throughout the State. Our meetings are integrated and we have several all Negro parish council groups as members. Negro women are invited and urged to come to our meetings and participate in our activities - also they are made welcome when they do attend.

We are keenly interested in the implementation of civil rights throughout our diocese and only recently participated in a massive letter writing campaign urging our senators, congressmen and others, to support the pending Civil Rights bill in Washington. We had representation at the Human Relations Council held this Spring in Memphis and have participated in other inter-racial panels and meetings. Our members are also actively engaged in working in the WICS organization along with members of the Council of Negro Women, Jewish Women and United Church women. I assure you that the Catholic women of the State of Tennessee are working diligently, honestly and sincerely for the equal opportunity of all the people in the South, both Negro and white.

I have not completed the forms which you forwarded in your letter as I do not feel that many of the questions are applicable to our members; however, I hope the foregoing will give you a good picture of our organization and its stand on Social Justice.

With best wishes,

Very truly yours,

Mattie L. Krenson
Diocesan President.

Dear Mr. Whitfield:

I am sorry to have delayed in replying to your letter concerning your survey on who speaks to the white South. I wanted to discuss your request with my State Board which met last week. The Board agreed with me that the state office could not really answer the survey for its various local Leagues where situations in regard to race relations vary widely.

We are sending you a list of the local Leagues and of their presidents so that you can send copies of the survey to them. Not all may wish to reply and certainly none could answer all the questions. We are asking that they reply to the best of their knowledge and ability.

The last two years?

Yes ✓ No ____

Please comment: Integration is a fact here now and has the majority public support. Housing is the most critical shortage although there has been some improvement.

22. Do you feel that most of the white citizens in your area who have not already accepted constructive attitudes toward race relations can be effectively reached? Yes ✓ No ____ Please comment: This is not a typical community as so many residents come from all over the U.S. and the level of education is very high. Although there are groups with hardened attitudes I think the constructive attitudes of others is rubbing off. The violence and rioting in the cities, however, are not helping the cause.

23. Please comment on the programs, policies, and interests of your organization regarding race relations and closely related issues which may not have been covered fully by the above questions.

24. To the extent that you have been formerly concerned with race relations, do you feel that there is any point in continuing to pursue this concern, or do you feel that the issue of race relations has already been amply dealt with? Of course this issue hasn't been amply dealt with. Unless the moderates continue to lead, however, we are in for trouble.

Dear sir,

Your single set of a ten(10) page questionnaire entitled "Who Speaks To the White South" was received at the office of the League of Women Voters of Virginia recently.

I am not taking time to fill in this very large questionnaire for the rather good reason that the aims and the objectives of the State League and of the local leagues in Virginia are the same in the matter of civil rights; equality of opportunity in education and employment:and are based on our National current agenda study item on the Development of Human Resources. This is a matter that your Coun Council should be aware of since there is obviously communication between your office and our National office.

Since we have both white and negro members, and since we accept both under membership qualifications that are simple, direct and clearly stated , I think that any further statements from me would be unnecessary.

Cordially yours,

Dear Mr. Whitfield:

Recently I received a questionnaire re race relations from you. Since my organization is a state organization made up of local Leagues these questions did not apply directly and were difficult to answer.

Our organization encourages all people regardless of race to vote and to be an informed voter. All local Leagues strive to get voting information material to all voters and do a good job of it. We worked hard to do away with the poll tax as a requirement for voting and were able to keep a literacy test requirement out of our new permanent registration system. We got information on registering to negro people.

Our membership is open to all races and most local Leagues have had a few colored people join. Sorry to say only a few remain active for any length of time. Negro leaders are overworked and have to limit themselves. They have dropped their membership but look to the Leagues for voting material which they can pass on to their people. Usually they attend open meetings which we sponsor.

One of our national items is Development of Human Resources and the League has kept this item including all races. Several local Leagues worked hard in Headstart programs. Also several years ago Leagues in Arkansas worked hard to defeat proposed amendments setting up school placement laws - laws which would have permitted students to transfer to all white schools.

The League probably has been criticised for accepting negro members but we ignore such criticism and to date it has not hurt us. I think this will continue. We do not participate in demostrations but we do not take any stand for or against. To us they are fellow citizens and that is the way we treat them.

Sincerely,

Mrs. E. E. Elkins

Dear Mr. Whitfield:

I am very grateful that your organization contacted me in relation to the enclosed questionnaire as I am vitally concerned with the issue with which it deals. I am afraid, however, that the organization with w hich I am connected in this regard, the League of Women Voters, does nothing in the area of race relations. In fact, I know of no white group in the Charleston area that has this as a main concern.

Aside from other groups to which I belong, I have been relatively active, if not very active, in the civil rights movement in the Negro community here, probably because there was no other way or group thru which to express my concern. I am constantly faced with the question, however, as to the white persons role in the movement: Is there a role for the white person or should all his efforts be directed to trying to change the attitude of those in the white community? I would be perfectly happy to work in this area, but feel that one is most effective working thru or with a group and as I said, I believe there are no such groups in Charleston (and I am not an organizer!) If you were ever to have a free moment I would appreciate very much your comments on the question of the white persons role in the civil rights movement especially as it finds expression thru Negro groups.

I would also appreciate a copy of your findings from this questionnaire when it is printed. It might be helpful in starting something within the white community here.

Sincerely,

Barbara R. Kingston

21. Do you feel that there has been a change in the attitudes of white citizens in your area on the issue of race relations within the last five years?

Yes ✓ No ____

The last two years?

Yes ✓ No ____

Please comment: Jobs for Negroes are opening up that were not available 5 or even 2 years ago. Film such a Patch of Blue would not have been shown 5 years ago; now they are seen by integrated audiences.

22. Do you feel that most of the white citizens in your area who have not already accepted constructive attitudes toward race relations can be effectively reached? Yes ✓ No ____ Please comment: In time, but how I do not know.

23. Please comment on the programs, policies, and interests of your organization regarding race relations and closely related issues which may not have been covered fully by the above questions.

24. To the extent that you have been formerly concerned with race relations, do you feel that there is any point in continuing to pursue this concern, or do you feel that the issue of race relations has already been amply dealt with? The issue of race relations will never have been dealt with adequately until it is no longer an issue, until equality is a fact, until we are - in any community - one community

25. Do you have an adult education program on race relations that is aimed specifically at the white citizens of your area? No.

United Church Women

PURPOSE

"To unite Church Women in their allegiance to their Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, through a program looking to their integration in the total life and work of the church and to the building of a world Christian community."

To provide a means for Christian fellowship across denominational lines on a state-wide basis.

To promote and extend the cooperative work of church women in local churches and communities and to further the development of units of United Church Women according to patterns suggested by the Department of United Church Women.

3. On the issue of race relations, do you try to reach a sizable number of: (Check appropriate blocks)

A. Upper income whites ☑
B. Upper income Negroes ☑
C. Middle income whites ☑
D. Middle income Negroes ☑
E. Lower income whites ☐
F. Lower income Negroes ☑

A. Whites with grammar school education ☐
B. Negroes with grammar school education ☑
C. Whites with high school education ☑
D. Negroes with high school education ☑
E. Whites with college education ☑
F. Negroes with college education ☑

4. What methods do you employ to reach the white citizens of your area on race relations?

A. Door-to-door campaigns ☐
B. Rallies and town meetings ☐
C. Local radio or TV broadcasts ☑
D. Distribution of literature ☐

1) Your own ☑
2) Other sources ☐

Please specify: Changing attitudes at every opportunity

5. On the issue of race relations, what hindrances to your work do you encounter in your area? Tradition that won't let people change - misunderstanding of Nat'l Council of Churches efforts. Churches keep being narrow & not open their doors to all people -

6. Are there organized groups that are active in opposing the implementation of civil rights in your area?
Yes ✓ No ____. Please comment: Newspapers and City Officials keep things thus way they want it and smother the truth.

7. How effective do you judge the activities of such groups to be?

A. Highly influential ☐
B. Influential ☑
C. Somewhat influential ☐
D. Almost without influence ☐

8. Have such organizations hampered the success of your own organization on the civil rights and race relations issues? Yes ____ No ✓. Please comment: Because they can't control all the women in church organizations

9. On race relations, what are the problems that you encounter within your own ranks? The Negro needs to have more educational opportunities which will raise their own moral levels for on the average in the South they are so ignorant which gives them no help in morals - also they are just now being paid enough to live a little better. The low cent pay keeps them down. I sent my maid to college (because she is Christian & has been so good to help the white) and she is teaching here & makes around $300 a month. Has bought a little brick home and lives well now.

10. Do you have ways to gauge the effectiveness of your efforts to reach the white citizens of your area on race relations? Yes ✓ No ____. Please comment and specify such methods, if any: I see many changing in their former attitudes. I try not to be radical on anything but as I have opportunity (S.S. class, WSCS, friends) I try to drop a pearl here & there to help them see God's plan for all His people & that God is working today, bringing about these changes.

11. How do you rate your organization in its ability to influence white citizens on race relations?

    A. Highly influential ☐
    B. Influential ☐
    C. Somewhat influential ☑
    D. Almost without influence ☐

12. Does your organization take an active part in protests or demonstrations which involve the issue of race relations? Yes ____ No ✓. (only thru our programs)

13. Do you feel that demonstrations have a positive or negative effect on the white citizens of your area?
    Positive ✓ (with some) Negative with the narrow ones who don't want to change.

14. Do you feel that demonstrations alert the white citizens of your area or areas to an awareness of problems on the issue of race relations?
    Yes ✓ No ____. Please comment: ____
    And its the only thing that has helped bring the Negro up. But the riots and lawless ones are hurting the good that has been done by the peaceful demonstrations. The demonstrations have made businesses open to all people (eating places, employment etc).

15. Does your organization make appeals to civic and public officials on the issue of race relations?
Yes _____ No ✓ (only nationally + thru our programs)

Are the responses to such appeals generally handled satisfactorily? Yes ✓ No _____. Please comment:

16. On what other issues besides race relations has your organization achieved significant progress? _____
With migrants
" Mentally retarded
" Juvenile delinquents -

17. Is the handling of race relations relegated to a special committee or sub-committee of your organization? Yes ✓ No _____. Please comment: _____
Christian Social Relations

18. Is your organization a membership organization?
Yes ✓ No _____.

19. If so, what percentage, roughly, of your membership is actively engaged in race relations activities?
80%

20. What is the size of your organization? Please specify whether this size represents the local, state, regional, or national level.

		Local	State	Reg'l	Nat'l
A. 1,000 +
B. 500-1,000
C. 100-500		150	1,000 approx
D. - 100

21. Do you feel that there has been a change in the attitudes of white citizens in your area on the issue of race relations within the last five years?

Yes ✓ No ____

The last two years?

Yes ✓ No ____

Please comment: But the riots in Watts, Cleveland, Chicago, Georgia, Mississippi have hurt - It makes them afraid of "black power" that has recently been emphasized which along with lawlessness that goes on makes them wonder if the Negro did get on equal basis would he be able to be of help to our nation

22. Do you feel that most of the white citizens in your area who have not already accepted constructive attitudes toward race relations can be effectively reached? Yes ____ No ✓ Please comment:

Not for a long time. Some of the die hards have to die out - It will take a long time for some to change but I think using the Negro in TV programs and bringing the educated ones to the front in different areas employing them in business & integrating the schools (from the first grade) will eventually make them to be accepted as a human being - We're not in ~~for~~ inter-marriage

23. Please comment on the programs, policies, and interests of your organization regarding race relations and closely related issues which may not have been covered fully by the above questions.

24. To the extent that you have been formerly concerned with race relations, do you feel that there is any point in continuing to pursue this concern, or do you feel that the issue of race relations has already been amply dealt with? Continue even tho' the government has to force them to do right (as Lincoln did) but continue in an educational peacable way - Some people have to be forced to do the right thing but in God's good time & his plan for our world, it will come about

25. Do you have an adult education program on race relations that is aimed specifically at the white citizens of your area?

Only thru United Church Women
Also Head Start program

P.S. I am a southerner, born in Georgia & lived in Louisiana 64 yrs - but I love all of God's people and want to see them all have dignity as a person (over)

I have helped three Negro girls get scholarship for college from our legislators.

I have talked in Negro churches here for their observance of Woman's Society Day twice -

I have conducted the May Fellowship program in WCW in a Negro church this year.

I have loaned a poor Negro girl money to buy her food at the ~~college~~ cafeteria when she would need it (often)

I have supplied cover for the maid I sent to college ~~after two~~ months to get her teacher training as she had to stay ~~on~~ the campus for two months & I bought her food that two month - Paid her transportation in a car pool to commute to the college for three years (with the exception of the two months renting a room near the campus that I paid for).

I pray for opportunities to serve my Lord and when ~~these~~ opportunities come whether its for white, black, red or yellow I try to use them for His glory and to show the love ~~He~~ wants us to for our brothers over the world. I think example is better than any other way (and do it quietly).

I have sent a young Cohistenian medical student thru medical college to become a medical missionary in his country (if China doesn't take over)

I have sent a Cuban young man thru college & seminary in Cuba to be a Meth. minister & now trying to bring him to America.

I have sent three young Meth. men thru the seminary in Dallas for the Meth. church to be ministers -

As you can see, I try to do what the opportunity presents -

This is not told in a boastful or taking pride in what I have done, but I tell them it is God working thru me and to thank Him and not me -

Dear Mr. Whitfield:

Here is the return of the questionnaire you sent us. We could probably make use of about five to be sent to local councils. Would you send them to us and we could see that they get distributed. We would be as prompt as possible.

I'll probably be seeing you in Atlanta next week and we can discuss this further.

Sincerely yours,

Will C. Allred, Jr.

Dear Mr. Whitfield:

Your letter of July 8 regarding the survey to determine who speaks to the white south reached me upon my return from vacation. This will account for the delay in its acknowledgement.

Since our Council covers the area of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, I would suggest that you either send me ten copies of the questionnaire or write directly to the persons listed on the attached sheet. This coverage will give you a broader factual base of conditions in this area.

If you send me the additional copies, I shall distribute them to these persons with a personal note and speak to them when I visit the respective communities.

Sincerely yours,

Gustave Falk

Dear Mr. Whitfield:

I am sorry that I have to return unanswered the enclosed questionnaire as the requested information is not available.

The purpose of the League of Women Voters is to encourage political responsibility through active and informed participation of citizens in government. So, the things you ask about don't come within the scope of League work.

Many of our members are active in the field of Human Relations; but they're working through other organizations and the League has no record of their activities.

QUESTIONNAIRE: WHO SPEAKS FOR THE WHITE SOUTH?

(Please print or type)

1. What is the main purpose of your organization?

The purpose of the Durham Council on Human Relations is to improve the quality of human relations within the Durham community. The key word is "human." The Council takes the position that the worth of every individual, regardless of his race, religion, or national origin, should be respected because he is a human being.

By-Laws, Art. II.

2. Does your organization try to communicate with the general public about race relations? yes

3. On the issue of race relations, do you try to reach a sizable number of: (Check appropriate blocks)

A. Upper income whites [ ]
B. Upper income Negroes [ ]
C. Middle income whites [X]
D. Middle income Negroes [X]
E. Lower income whites [ ]
F. Lower income Negroes [ ]

A. Whites with grammar school education [ ]
B. Negroes with grammar school education [ ]
C. Whites with high school education [ ]
D. Negroes with high school education [X]
E. Whites with college education [X]
F. Negroes with college education [X]

4. What methods do you employ to reach the white citizens of your area on race relations?

A. Door-to-door campaigns [ ]
B. Rallies and town meetings [X]
C. Local radio or TV broadcasts [ ]
D. Distribution of literature [X]

1) Your own /X/

2) Other sources /X/

Please specify: Our materials have included both those of our own composition and others furnished by local, state, & federal governmental agencies.

5. On the issue of race relations, what hindrances to your work do you encounter in your area? Generally, apathy; but agressive moves by the Council (e.g., in employment and advancement policies & practices) have met more direct resistance. The KKK is active in this state but we detect less overt hostility than covert and circumventing methods of maintaining the status quo ante. Both white & Negro political, economic, & religious leaders need continually to be nudged.

6. Are there organized groups that are active in opposing the implementation of civil rights in your area?

Yes X No _____. Please comment: The KKK is active, but the measure of their activity is uncertain. Less blatantly, but probably more effectively, one would have to include in these groups such professional organizations as the realtors. Groups concerned with housing, employment, & education (in that order) are primary concerns to us at the present.

7. How effective do you judge the activities of such groups to be:

A. Highly influential /_/

B. Influential /X/

C. Somewhat influential /_/

D. Almost without influence /_/

ranking would depend upon the group in question

8. Have such organizations hampered the success of your own organization on the civil rights and race relations issues?

Yes X No _____. Please comment: Hampered in the sense that there is still need for our Council to exist and continue programming in these areas; but no direct threats to our work.

9. On race relations, what are the problems that you encounter within your own ranks? Chiefly tactical in nature, although we have not yet initiated a program which failed to receive the Council's unanimous support.

10. Do you have ways to gauge the effectiveness of your efforts to reach the white citizens of your area on race relations?
Yes X No _____. Please comment and specify such methods, if any: Such assessment has, so far, been mainly in terms of the measure in which we have accomplished our goals. In this regard, we could cite the desegregation of certain agencies participating in the United Fund as a direct consequence of our interest and involvement.

11. How do you rate your organization in its ability to influence white citizens on race relations?

A. Highly influential [ ]
B. Influential [ ]
C. Somewhat influential [X]
D. Almost without influence [ ]

12. Does your organization take an active part in protests or demonstrations which involve the issue of race relations?
Yes _____ No X -. not officially, though members of the Council do individually do participate.

13. Do you feel that demonstrations have a positive or negative effect on the white citizens of your area?
Positive _____ Negative _____ both, though now probably more negative than positive.

14. Do you feel that demonstrations alert the white citizens in your area to an awareness of problems on the issue of race relations? Yes X No _____. Please comment: Demonstrations certainly dramatize problems in race relations, but their present effectiveness apart from calling attention to the problems is very uncertain.

15. Does your organization make appeals to civic and public officials on the issue of race relations? Yes X No _____.

Are the responses to such appeals generally handled satisfactorily? Yes X No X. Please comment: We have met with modest success & modest failure (cf. #10 above). Our appeals to the City Council have, we think, been handled less satisfactorily than those directed to other than public officials.

16. On what other issues besides race relations has your organization achieved significant progress? education, employment -- and we will turn attention in the fall to housing.

17. Is the handling of race relations relegated to a special committee or sub-committee of your organization? Yes X No _____.

Please comment: "Operation Nudge" is our special committee particularly charged with this responsibility. Our group is still small enough, however, that the entire Council can and does participate in this activity.

18. Is your organization ~~is~~ a membership organization? Yes X No_____.

19. If so, what percentage, roughly, of your membership is actively engaged in race relations activities?

rough estimate of about 60%

20. What is the size of your organization? Please specify whether this size represents the local, state, regional, or national level.

		Local	State	Reg'l	Nat'l
A. 1,000 +	/ /
B. 500 - 1,000	/ /
C. 100-500	/X/	X
D. - 100	/ /		X	X	X

21. Do you feel that there has been a change in the attitudes of white citizens in your area on the issue of race relations within the last five years? Yes X No _____.

The last two years? Yes X No _____.

Please comment: The change in attitude we detect is a constructive one and takes mainly two forms: one is simply an increasing willingness to accept change; the other is a willingness to help shape the change that is inevitable.

22. Do you feel that most of the white citizens in your area who have not already accepted constructive attitudes toward race relations can be effectively reached? Yes X No _____. Please comment: One would always want to hold out this hope, though it is probably a more viable hope among the young than the old.

23. Please comment on the programs, policies, and interests of your organization regarding race relations and closely related issues which may not have been covered fully by the above questions.

We have indicated our interest in several of the areas affected by discrimination -- e.g., education, housing, employment. We have undertaken, however, to stress our concern for HUMAN RELATIONS on the grounds that this is both a moreinclusive concept and one which will likely generate more popular support than what is generally connoted by "race relations."

24. To the extent that you have been formerly concerned with race relations, do you feel that there is any point in continuing to pursue this concern, or do you feel that the issue of race relations has already been amply dealt with? Race relations will doubtless continue to be an important problem area in our city for some time, despite the progress made and being made. We detect distinctive needs for continuing our concern in this area.

25. Do you have an adult education program on race relations that is aimed specifically at the white citizens of your area? Not as such; though all that we undertake in the area is hopefully geared to incorporate that interest. Whatever education we accomplish is probably chiefly the result of our involvement in issues.

QUESTIONNAIRE: WHO SPEAKS FOR THE WHITE SOUTH?

(Please print or type)

1. What is the main purpose of your organization?
Lenoir County Inter-Racial Committee- formed in 1952-
"... to promote a harmonious relationship between the several racial groups within our community; to study problems as they arise and to seek to further a right and just settlement of the same."

2. Does your organization try to communicate with the general public about race relations? Not except to keep the public informed of its activities thru local media and to conduct an annual Human Relations Institute at which prominent speakers are brought to the community to speak on race relations subjects.

3. On the issue of race relations, do you try to reach a sizable number of: (Check appropriate blocks)

A. Upper income whites ☐
B. Upper income Negroes ☐
C. Middle income whites ☐
D. Middle income Negroes ☐

C. Local radio or TV broadcasts ☒
D. Distribution of literature ☐

1) Your own ☐

2) Other sources ☐

Please specify: _____

5. On the issue of race relations, what hindrances to your work do you encounter in your area? Extreme right white conservatives and Klan groups.

6. Are there organized groups that are active in opposing the implementation of civil rights in your area?
Yes XX No _____. Please comment: John Birch Society members and local Klan organization.

7. How effective do you judge the activities of such groups to be:

A. Highly influential ☐
B. Influential ☐
C. Somewhat influential /XX/
D. Almost without influence ☐

8. Have such organizations hampered the success of your own organization on the civil rights and race relations issues?
Yes _____ No XXX. Please comment: except that at least two of our members have had crosses burned in the yards of their residences. One is a school board chairman, the other is a school principal so the cross burnings were probably related ~~the~~ to the school integration problem rather than to the activities of these two people as members of the Interracial committee.

9. On race relations, what are the problems that you encounter within your own ranks? Lack of a real program of work; Occasional weak leadership; infrequent meetings; not very much white interest unless the "pressure" is really on.

10. Do you have ways to gauge the effectiveness of your efforts to reach the white citizens of your area on race relations?
Yes _____ No XX. Please comment and specify such methods, if any: _____

11. How do you rate your organization in its ability to influence white citizens on race relations?

A. Highly influential [ ]
B. Influential [ ]
C. Somewhat influential [XX]
D. Almost without influence [ ]

12. Does your organization take an active part in protests or demonstrations which involve the issue of race relations?
Yes _____ No XX.

13. Do you feel that demonstrations have a positive or negative effect on the white citizens of your area?
Positive _____ Negative XX

14. Do you feel that demonstrations alert the white citizens in your area to an awareness of problems on the issue of race relations? Yes XX No _____. Please comment: _____

15. Does your organization make appeals to civic and public officials on the issue of race relations? Yes XX No _____.

Are the responses to such appeals generally handled satisfactorily? Yes XX No _____. Please comment: but appeals are generally handled by a small committee going to public officials and discussing problem rather than passing resolutions that appear in the press.

16. On what other issues besides race relations has your organization achieved significant progress? None. Purpose of the Lenoir County Inter-Racial Committee is to operate in Human relations field, and this has come to be restricted to race relations.

17. Is the handling of race relations relegated to a special committee or sub-committee of your organization? Yes _____ No XX.
Please comment: but nearly all effective action from the organization comes as result of special committee work.

18. Is your organization is membership organization? Yes XX No_____.
Self-perpetuating. Limited to total of 36; 18 white & 18 Negro.

19. If so, what percentage, roughly, of your membership is actively engaged in race relations activities? 1/3 to 1/2 takes some part. The remaining members generally only participate by occasional attendance at quarterly meetings of the organization.

20. What is the size of your organization? Please specify whether this size represents the local, state, regional, or national level.

		Local	State	Reg'l	Nat'l
A. 1,000 +	/ /
B. 500 - 1,000	/ /
C. 100-500	/ /
D. - 100	/XX/	36

21. Do you feel that there has been a change in the attitudes of white citizens in your area on the issue of race relations within the last five years? Yes XX No _____.

The last two years? Yes XX No _____.

Please comment: The committee was formed 2 years before the Supreme Court School decisions and has worked quietly since then. Local attitudes have probably been changed more by activities in other parts of the nation and by Federal actions than by activities of the committee locally, but each has played some part.

22. Do you feel that most of the white citizens in your area who have not already accepted constructive attitudes toward race relations can be effectively reached? Yes _____ No XX. Please comment: Attitudes have solidified in that those opposing constructive approaches are no longer likely to be changed. There are no doubt still many uncommitted in the "middle ground" who can still be reached but for the hard core opponents it will take another generation.

23. Please comment on the programs, policies, and interests of your organization regarding race relations and closely related issues which may not have been covered fully by the above questions.

See enclosed programs from recent Human Relations Institutes for our major public project. Probably the biggest service rendered by the committee in early years was keeping open lines of communication between the races and the "training" of some white leadership which became willing to speak out in the early 60's- and willing to serve on publically appointed Mayor's Bi-racial Committee and on local Good Neighbor Council.

24. To the extent that you have been formerly concerned with race relations, do you feel that there is any point in continuing to pursue this concern, or do you feel that the issue of race relations has already been amply dealt with? We still have race problems which no attempt has yet been made to solve- i.e. Open Housing. We still have a long way to go in public school integration and in other areas. Locally we must grapple with the roots of some of these problems- i.e. poverty, etc. so there is really every reason to continue efforts.

25. Do you have an adult education program on race relations that is aimed specifically at the white citizens of your area? No, but one could be very effective if it could be started thru the various local churches via the Ministerial Fellowship.

NO! Must be pursued vigorously. Each organization has its peculiar contribution to make.

25. Do you have an adult education program on race relations that is aimed specifically at the white citizens of your area? Only internally with our own constituency.

Some Tentative Suggestions for Publications and New South Material

These are general suggestions, not hard-and-fast assignment ideas. They would be modified and re-arranged by (a) who might be available to do them, and (b) what is developed by further exploration of the subject matters. Both of these factors can be developed by an extensive talent hunt, as suggested. The subleties and significancies would be developed by talking with people knowledgeable in these areas.

I. Urban planning. Sam's study? Carry through with Atlanta, Richmond, Houston, Little Rock: the inner workings of segregated housing, ghettoization.

II. Fair employment and anti-poverty. Select 100 poorest counties in South and do rundown on what they've gotten from poverty program, and why they have not received more. Profiles of rural and urban poverty, white and Negro.

A summary survey of the employment situation in the South: estimate of amount of equal hiring; kinds of concerns doing it; a thorough discussion of the myth of unavailable Negroes; efficacy of Title VI enforcement; how to get such jobs.

A survey of state employment office practices . . . large sample of large city, small city, small town situation. Possibly with aid of Urban League and NAACP across South.

III. School Integration. Tape record Winifred and Connie on their efforts to encourage Negro parents to integrate schools and results.

Guidelines tightening: southern political and educational reaction; practical effect next fall.

Collection of student descriptions, Negro and white, all grades, of desegregation in action, good and bad.

IV. Welfare Programs. As a start, a rundown on the amounts spent each state, the per person, per family maximums and averages on the various kinds of aid, ADC, etc.

The case against ACD to fatherless children only; relation to Monyhan Report.

Technological unemployment.

Who, how many, what circumstances unemployment?

VI. Community organization and technical assistance. Check out SSOC's efforts with poor whites.

Al's information on efforts to get adequate, decently financed houses.

VII. Other:

1. Higher education in the South. Amount of desegregation; number of faculty ph.d's comparative, now and say 1950; number of graduate students, same comparison; amount federal research grants, same comparison, with explanation of why short-deal, i.e., lack of requests.

2. Whatever became of the southern school of fiction? Assessment of writing generally, including contributions of civil rights writers.

3. Economics. Basics of it: what are the major industries, agricultural products, state of mining, transportation, etc.? Latest per capita, per family income; unemployment, underemployment; birth rate. Assessment of trends, major shifts in above. New industry -- how much and what kind? Prevalence and effect of subsidizations of industry.

4. In terms of above, and other factors, outline a realistic political campaign platform -- in terms of the South's real needs. Offer it to both parties, for state and local use, and for a southern plank in the national convention platform. Moving southern politics, that is, away from race into reality.

5. What is the financial basis of Negro politics in the South? Who is paying the bills of Negro candidates? Are costs comparable with white candidate campaigns? Are these sources entirely different, the same, or merely the black counterpart (business, special interests) of the white power structure? Is there anything in this picture which encourages low-cost campaigning, i.e., a freer political agent?

6. The radicals in the movement. We need to come to grips with this; all-black rationales in staffing and politics, etc. Viet Nam stances. Ask the hard questions.

7. The plight of the Negro teacher. How whites have effectively emasculated the logical leaders of Negro Southerners, the educators. Grade school, high school, college, teachers, administrators -- these have been the most intimidated of all the South's Negroes. And, having been blocked from normal pursuits, they are far more than white counterparts, the elite of Negro society. Is this changing to any extent? Importance on such things as anti-intellectualism in the movement . . . (See civil rights commission hearings, Prothro and Matthews, etc.)

8. In the Black Belt. A good reporter's tour of the Black Belt, its tent cities, cooperatives, political movements, demonstrations, poverty, small towns, changing agriculture, etc. A New South travel piece. Color story.

9. Who speaks to the white South? A survey, perhaps state by state, of what, if any, effective work is being done toward reaching the average white Southerner with the hard truths, the moral truths about desegregation, poverty, etc. The thesis to be proved or disproved would be that, by and large, the field has been vacated to the Birchers.

10. After the run-offs and assuming some victories, a story on a day with the new Negro sheriff of Killnigger County, Alabama.

11. Coalition. What has developed in the way of practical alignment of the forces that logically should be together in the South, politically and otherwise? With attention to the splits, as in Alabama, Tennessee, of labor and Negro politics; assessment of which has delivered most -- i. e., Negro vote more so than labor in Alabama. Implications of inability, ability to join forces.

12. Playing down South. From culture boom, to Atlanta Braves, auto racing and cock-fighting, how does the South re-create itself? Seeking anthropolitical significance.

13. The Continuing Crisis: A hard run-down on economic coercion, intimidation, reprisal. Methods, history, extent, results, efforts to counter. Case histories, lists of incidents.

The battlefields re-visited. Re-visit Albany, Birmingham, Selma, St. Augustine, Bogalusa -- to see the effect on Negro and white communities of the gains made by the sacrifices in each.

14. Survey of the extent of use of prison labor as a resource or source of resource of state governments. . . i.e., convict road gangs, etc. Relation of this to entrenched power of sheriffs, their ability to block needed county consolidations.

15. Labor's role in southern civil rights movement. What has organized labor done? Summary. Where could it do more? Forces working as a brake on further action. Management's lack of leadership as a contributing factor. Political action. Figures on organization.

16. Capital punishment. Why South retains it and why the move for elimination of makes little headway? Use of as a form of racial intimidation. Hard figures + racial breakdown on executions + examples of cases where guilt was questionable.

17. Textbooks and Negro history. Southern history as presented to school children.

18. Prisons. How is North Carolina plan working? Is theory still retaliation, punitive? How much progress toward rehabilitation? State level and federal.

19. The many Souths. (Reflections following state by state research for round-ups.) In Alabama, for instance, the primitive is still much in evidence. Slightly less so in Mississippi and Louisiana. Concern is still for voting rights. In Virginia and Tennessee it moves to more sophisticated plane. Tennessee primary in which both candidates are described as "acceptable" to Negro leadership. Yet across the state lines are Alabama and Mississippi. What are the forces that produced the differences -- political leadership, economics, industry, federal government, northern capital, Negro votes. Dramatic changes in recent years -- Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina. The outlook for the future.

20. Human Relations Councils and militant action groups. Definitions. Is there any basic differences in what they try to achieve or is the difference in means only? The white liberal in the councils, the "respectable" civil rights group. The Negro in the councils.

21. Federal subsidization in the South . . . who gets what, which states get most (include industrial). What has it meant in desegregation or lack of it in highway construction, etc.?

22. Political methods and laws limiting involvement of the poor and the uneducated.

23. Survey of cities where the action was -- how have they changed? A look at former movement figures, e.g., Bob Moses. Contrast their progress or lack of it with political party workers, etc.

24. The use of grand juries and other mechanism for/against racism.

25. The decline in Negro land-holding. Hard figures. Why. How can trend be reversed (Bob Thompson, a good resource).

26. Negro churches -- a new look at their function. Contrast those that accept and those that reject racial status quo. Their leaders.

27. Courts and judges (federal and state) whose decisions generally undercut Supreme Court in racial area. Who are the liberal southern judges. What is right or wrong with system for their election or appointment.

28. The racial "undecideds" -- why they don't take positions . . . the kinds of people they are. Who and what position their lack of decision aids.

29. Occupational distribution -- changing trends, e.g., white replacements for tradional Negro bellboys.

30. The press and race.

31. The return of racism in Florida gubernatorial campaign.

32. Bussing in the South -- how its used to maintain segregation. Contrast with desire to use it for "racial balance."

ADDENDA:

Two suggestions from Al Ulmer:

1. The amount of outright defiance of the public accommodations section of the Civil Rights Law across the South. Restaurants, motels, bathrooms. Documentable. Negroes still have to plan their trips in terms of places they know will accept them.

2. The ominous beginnings in South Carolina and Mississippi of a revival of post-construction statutes allowing local officials to be appointed rather than elected. Will correlate with Negro registration where such has been enacted.

To conserve the human resources of the county. To improve education, employment, housing etc. enough that we can stop the migration drain of Negro youth ~~out~~ from high school age on.

2. Does your organization try to communicate with the general public about race relations? Only by changing the status quo. The public doesn't understand the theories of pronouncements but it is reassured by a smoothly accomplished improvement which, once done, appears to have been natural & logical.

3. On the issue of race relations, do you try to reach a sizable number of: (Check appropriate blocks)

A. Upper income whites ☑
B. Upper income Negroes ☑
C. Middle income whites ☑
D. Middle income Negroes ☑
E. Lower income whites ☐
F. Lower income Negroes ☑

A. Whites with grammar school education ☐ indirectly
B. Negroes with grammar school education ☑
C. Whites with high school education ☐ indirectly
D. Negroes with high school education ☑
E. Whites with college education ☑
F. Negroes with college education ☑

4. What methods do you employ to reach the white citizens of your area on race relations?

A. Door-to-door campaigns ☐
B. Rallies and town meetings ☐
C. Local radio or TV broadcasts ☐
D. Distribution of literature ☐

1) Your own [✓]

2) Other sources [✓]

Please specify: We involve individuals in civic responsibilities which they accept & which we feel furthers our aim of interracial communication and understanding.

5. On the issue of race relations, what hindrances to your work do you encounter in your area? The Senator and City Council members as well as school powers. Antagonism of poor whites, big farmers (some), and middle class housewives who no longer get servants for $2 a day. Many smaller farmers are bitter because they see their mechanization headaches as a race problem.

6. Are there organized groups that are active in opposing the implementation of civil rights in your area?

Yes _____ No ? . Please comment: We have John Birchers, White Citizens Council and Klansmen. But none of them seem to have any particular effect except on their own friends. Unorganized, individual opposition are stiffer.

7. How effective do you judge the activities of such groups to be?

A. Highly influential [ ]

B. Influential [ ]

C. Somewhat influential [✓] But only when the moon is dark.

D. Almost without influence [ ]

8. Have such ~~organizations~~ individuals hampered the success of your own organization on the civil rights and race relations issues? Yes ✓ No _____. Please comment: Senator Richardson still manages not to be able to appoint an OEO committee Washington will approve. The County Education Supt., afraid of the opinion of "big farmers" would not Touch Headstart. We got up a representative committee by the guidelines, incorporated it, big-passed all the county politics & had last summer 1 Headstart, this year 9 schools! Not a farmer has fought it yet.

(temporary, we hope!) →

9. On race relations, what are the problems that you encounter within your own ranks? Small group with every member already too busy. Lack of confidence among Negroes in their own leaders. The success of Headstart is changing this for the first time in history.

Also, we have not been able to get the membership of politically & industrially influential whites whose first concern is what their neighbors think.

10. Do you have ways to gauge the effectiveness of your efforts to reach the white citizens of your area on race relations? Yes _____ No _____. Please comment and specify such methods, if any: Not really. But we do agree on a general sense that the climate is changing and because of projects on which our members have worked.

11. How do you rate your organization in its ability to influence white citizens on race relations?

A. Highly influential ☐
B. Influential ☑ through action (See 23)
C. Somewhat influential ☐
D. Almost without influence ☐

12. Does your organization take an active part in protests or demonstrations which involve the issue of race relations? Yes _____ No ✓ — not as an organization.

13. Do you feel that demonstrations have a positive or negative effect on the white citizens of your area?
Positive ✓ results Negative ✓ more antagonism at first

14. Do you feel that demonstrations alert the white citizens of your area or areas to an awareness of problems on the issue of race relations?
Yes _____ No ✓. Please comment: Personal opinion: Demonstrations desegregated the first stores, and since then pressures well-timed but unseen by the public have steadily increased the desegregation. But white citizens who spoke out saw the problem as their own - dealing with rebellious Negroes now out of place. I never heard one sympathetic comment from a white outside our own group. However, it is true that, whatever the reasons, now that demonstrations are long ago, our middle class whites talk far more calmly about the "problems".

15. Does your organization make appeals to civic and public officials on the issue of race relations?
Yes _____ No ✓.

Are the responses to such appeals generally handled satisfactorily? Yes ✓ No _____. Please comment:
Very good results are often obtained by having just the right member or committee (2 or 3) approach the key person involved in a problem. Even the die-hards will talk to persons privately although they wouldn't dare be known to have been influenced by an interracial council.

16. On what other issues besides race relations has your organization achieved significant progress? _____
1 Headstart in 1965, 9 in 1966 with at least ~~two~~ (2) 9-month Child Care Centers planned for this fall's opening. We sponsored a Speed-up team this summer

17. Is the handling of race relations relegated to a special committee or sub-committee of your organization? Yes _____ No ✓. Please comment: This has seemed too basic to all progress we seek to fail to involve every member.

18. Is your organization a membership organization?
Yes ✓ No _____.

19. If so, what percentage, roughly, of your membership is actively engaged in race relations activities?
100% to a fair degree

20. What is the size of your organization? Please specify whether this size represents the local, state, regional, or national level.

		Local	State	Reg'l	Nat'l
A. 1,000 +	☐
B. 500-1,000	☐
C. 100-500	☐
D. - 100	☑	✓

21. Do you feel that there has been a change in the attitudes of white citizens in your area on the issue of race relations within the last five years?

Yes ✓ No ____

The last two years?

Yes ✓ No ____

Please comment: In most cases where people can change their behavior by laying the responsibility for the change on a higher-up, they seem to relax in their emotions to match their action. There seems to be a lot of indifference now where we had antagonism very recently.

22. Do you feel that most of the white citizens in your area who have not already accepted constructive attitudes toward race relations can be effectively reached? Yes ✓ largely No ____ Please comment: ____

But with much time and great patience. They will accept almost anything once it becomes established as the status quo. I really believe many naturally mild-tempered people are relieved to drop the old role and blame the new day on the Federal government. "They've licked us again."

23. Please comment on the programs, policies, and interests of your organization regarding race relations and closely related issues which may not have been covered fully by the above questions.

Our council was until last year little more than an open communication line between the races & a fellowship of like-thinking citizens. This year we came of age. The year has been spent in setting up a total organization in which each member is able to serve on a particular committee in the field of his choice, these committees meeting as often as desired. They include: education, employment, housing, youth opportunity, Headstart, membership, adult literacy & retraining in skills, finance, The monthly meeting is a clearing house with a special emphasis. These cover most projects - i.e., youth opportunity can employ students in voter registration & education can press for library desegregation, etc.

24. To the extent that you have been formerly concerned with race relations, do you feel that there is any point in continuing to pursue this concern, or do you feel that the issue of race relations has already been amply dealt with? We must pursue it all the harder as our efforts give results and never slack off until citizens cooperate as people with people, with no "issue of race" involved.

25. Do you have an adult education program on race relations that is aimed specifically at the white citizens of your area? No.

Introduction

This pamphlet has been prepared to assist Episcopalians in the Diocese of East Carolina to a greater understanding in our relationships with our fellow-man.

It is designed to bring together under one cover the several statements on race relations resulting from the 1964 Diocesan Convention.

The committee hopes this material may guide us all toward a greater fellowship in Chirst.

The Bishop's Address at 81st Annual Convention

. . . . . RACE RELATIONS

I have been requested by a number of our Clergy and Lay people to have a section of my Convention Address on the subject of "Race Relations" and to spell out, as your Bishop, what seems to me to be the Christian teaching about race, the Church's teaching, and the position that the Church has enunciated, in its General Conventions.

I am glad to do this and let me say, first of all, that I am happy that I am Bishop of this particular Diocese — which is comparatively small in number of people, and where, because of this, the Bishop can know personally and intimately many of its people — both white and Negro Communicants. As all of you know, there are times when I Baptize your children — of both races. I Confirm your young people. I take part in your weddings. And I bury your dead. I feel very close to you, my dear people of this Diocese, and I thank God that it is this intimate kind of Diocese that you and I are working and laboring in.

Moreover, I thank God that I can speak today, in this Convention (of both white and Negro delegates) not in an atmosphere of racial tension and mistrust, such as might exist in other areas and groups, but in an atmosphere of Christian fellowship of understanding and of real concern for the feelings of others.

How happy the relationship between the races has been in our Diocesan family. The wonderful fellowship of our Clergy is widely known, in the Church. The Christian attitude of our Lay people has been long evident in the life of our Diocese. We have Conventions together. We have Convocation meetings together. We have study groups and conferences together. Our Young People worship, plan and study together, in our Youth Division. Now all of this is not new in East Carolina. It is not a product of these times. Much of it has been here for 20 to 25 years. It has grown and developed through the years. This is as the fellowship of Jesus Christ should be. I cherish this relationship, I say. May this Christian spirit between races never be broken, in this Diocese. I thank God for it and I am glad that I can speak today, in the atmosphere of this Convention, in which there is no bitterness, no tension and no mistrust.

Now, having said that, it would be dishonest of me — unfair to you — and in a sense, cowardly, if I let this matter stop here. And if I did not face with you courageously and realistically today the fact that this harmony does not exist, in fact, outside of the organization of the Church and that, in many areas today, there are terrific racial tensions in the nation, in the South, and in our State and section of North Carolina.

About these racial tensions, the Church, above all other organizations, should help men with their thinking — help them "point the way." And that is because religion and life are not in two separate departments of this world. It is where our people live, move, and have their being — all of our people — that religion is concerned. Religion and life are inseparable and always have been. The Old Testament, through the Prophets, spoke out on this. The New Testament, through Jesus Christ, again said this.

Now, let me pause here and re-emphasize and be specific — the New Testament teaches the equality of races. There is not a shred of evidence that points otherwise. The words and teachings of Christ — his story of the Good Samaritan — the answers to questions directed toward him. I do not believe that there is a single New Testament scholar in the world today who does not agree upon this point. Indeed, the first Council of the Church — "The Council of Jerusalem" was called primarily for this purpose — to settle the question of racial discrimination, in the Christian community. It might be interesting for you to know that first heresy in the Church was a heresy — not about matters of abstract theological doctrine — but precisely about the matter of racial discrimination. The earliest recorded conflict between those who want Christianity to adopt the old Jewish law of racial segregation and those who wanted the new message of Jesus and St. Paul, reminds us that from the very start the Christian church took a stand against racial segregation.

Again, we can go a step further. The Prayer Book bears out this Christian teaching. We pray — "Almighty God, who has made of one blood all nations of men." We affirm "There is neither Jew nor Greek, slave nor free. We are all one in Jesus Christ."

Again, the Constitution and Canons of our Church are clear on this. This make no distinction whatever between races.

Again, the Lambeth Conferences, the highest body of our Anglican Communion, spoke out on this in both 1948 and 1958. In its last meeting in 1958, it specifically condemned discrimination of any kind because of race or color.

Again, the Anglican Congress, meeting last summer, urged its members to witness strongly and wisely against all forms of racial discrimination and segregation.

Finally, the General Convention, the highest legislative body of our own Church in America, called upon all of our Church members "to work together toward the establishment, without racial discrimination, of full opportunities, in fields such as education, housing, employment and public accommodations."

And so let us today make no mistake about it. The faith of Jesus Christ and the Church that we live by, some day will die by, teaches that discrimination against any people because of race, color or creed, and segregation of any people because of race, color or creed, is contrary to the Christian Doctrine and contrary to Jesus' way of life.

If there is any doubt about this, my brethren, let us remember that Jesus Christ himself was a man of another race.

Now that I have laid out what seems to me to be the Christian teaching about this matter, the next point is quite obviously — what should we do about it? What should we, as Christians and as Church members, try to do about this? Well, first of all, we should make the Christian faith known, at every opportunity — of the equality of all men, in the sight of Almighty God. Second, we should try, in every way possible to help — through conferences and voluntary persuasion to bring about fair, equal and unsegregated treatment for all of our brethren.

The demonstrations in the streets should be moved inside — around the conference tables. There differences should be worked out. Christian brotherhood and understanding should prevail. Episcopalians, I hope, will give full cooperation to the bi-racial committees of their communities and to other agencies working for peace, harmony, good will and fair play, and seek to be "Beacons of light and understanding" to a troubled time, in the history of America and yes, one might say, in the history of the whole world today.

Now for the third and last point on this subject of race relations. Let me be very objective this morning. I feel that a special sub-committee of our Department of Christian Social Relations would be very helpful, as occasions arise — to give advice to our Clergy, when asked to do so by the Clergyman himself — to meet with Vestries, when asked to do so by the Vestries themsleves. This Committee would be men with some experience in this area. After consultation, therefore, with the Chairman of our Department of Christian Social Relations, the Rev. C. Edward Sharp — Mr. Sharp and I are appointing the following men as members of this "Sub-Committee on Race Relations." Mr. William Page of Kinston, Chairman, the Rev. Richard Ottaway of Greenville, Mr. Wallace Murchison of Wilmington, the Rev. Edwin E. Kirton of Wilmington, the Rev. William Campbell of Williamston, the Rev. Hunley Elebash of Wilmington, Dr. J. H. Horton of Edenton, Mr. Walker Taylor of Wilmington, Mr. George Little, Jr. of Elizabeth City. And, of course, the Rev. C. Edward Sharp, Chairman of the Department, as ex-office Chairman of this sub-committee. I earnestly hope that all of these men will accept this appointment to serve their Church, at this time, as members of this most important and vitally needed group. . . . . .

Kinston, N. C.
January 22, 1964

O God, the Father of all mankind, we beseech thee so to inspire the people of this land with the spirit of justice, truth and love, that in all our dealings one with another we may show forth our brotherhood in thee; for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Almighty God, who biddest thy Church to bring all men to thyself, and to make all mankind one family in thee, make clear to each one of us his part in the task. Fire our minds with a vision of a more perfect society here on earth in which justice and right, peace and brotherhood shall reign according to thy will; and help us, each one, O Lord, to do our part, that thy will may be done on earth as it is in heaven.

Grant O Lord, we pray thee, that as we seek for truth, we may find that the search leads us to thee. Give us the courage to seek honestly, reverence to seek humbly, dignity to hear out points of view other than our own; and when our minds are perplexed and we cannot find peace with the truth, give us patience to go on with our daily duties; thru Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

Resolution

RESOLVED, that the Diocese of East Carolina, in convention assembled, affirms the action of the General Convention of the Episcopal Church as expressed in the following resolution:

"Whereas, we believe in the natural dignity and value of every man, of whatever color or race, as created in the image of God and as one for whom Christ died, that discrimination by reason of color or race between men has as its root human sin; that the Church must confess its own sin in this area; and

"Whereas, we acknowledge that there are no easy answers to the problems created by the effort to apply these convictions to special and local situations, particulary in times of cultural and social change, and that the composite thoughts of Churchmen in conference or convention may or may not be the will of God because we all stand under the judgment of God and not finally under the judgments of fallible men; and also that, despite honest differences of opinion, we are bound together, through our union in Christ and his fellowship of love, to seek God's will; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we call first upon our fellow Churchmen by God's grace to cleanse themselves of all spirit of racial discrimination; and then upon all persons, especially the members of our Church, to work together, in charity and forbearance, towards the establishment, without racial discrimination of full opportunities in fields such as education, housing, employment and public accommodations."

RESOLVED, FURTHER, that this Convention affirms the right and opportunity of every Church member in the Diocese to participate without discrimination in the full life of the Church, consistent with its doctrine, constitutions and canons.

GEORGIA COMMITTEE ON

INTERRACIAL COOPERATION

Block Voting

Politicians, columnists, and a host of dubiously authoritative observers — most of them resembling stone-throwing people who live in glass houses — have had a lot to say these past two years about "the Negro bloc" in Georgia.

Some of their talk has ben malicious, some of it well meaning, some of it no more sinister than bridge club gossip. With few exceptions, however, such talk has been based on no more than superficial knowledge of the facts.

Negroes do vote in blocs, of course. There is as much a Negro bloc as there is a labor bloc, a farm bloc, or a Southern bloc. But this bloc is not formed on the signal of corrupt Negro leaders, as some people would have us believe. In the main, Georgia's Negro leadership has been responsible, sensible, and admirably restrained. Rather, the bloc has been merely the Negro's inevitable reaction to the vicious race baiting of some politicians and to a long history of cultural, economic, and political discrimination.

Since March 6, 1946, when the U. S. fifth circuit court of appeals granted Negroes the right to participate in Democratic primaries, Georgia Negroes have voted in about a dozen elections, including the 1946 state primary. The record is not complete on Negro voting, neither as to its extent nor character. In some counties, purposely, no separate count has been made of Negro ballots. In others, Negro ballots have been deliberately miscounted. In still others, Negroes haven't been permitted to vote at all. Nevertheless, from the record as it stands one can draw a highly significant judgement: to date, the chief result of Negro enfranchisement has been to stimulate the dormant white electorate to a more serious concern for politics, and to aid immeasurably in the accomplishment of needed political reforms.

Perhaps more pertinently, the Negros' voting history of the past two years shows these things about bloc voting:

1. In state elections the solidifying factor almost invariably is the Negro's right to vote. Negroes will vote in a bloc only when white supremacy is the issue.

2. In county and municipal elections Negroes tend to vote in a bloc against candidates who have demonstrated a disregard for Negro rights and aspirations, and for those who have proved themselves sympathetic. Sometimes, too, local issues may force them into a bloc vote, especially when those issues relate directly to the welfare of the Negro communities.

3. In those few counties where the Negro's right to vote has come to be accepted, and it is the practice for all candidates to bid for the Negro vote as earnestly as they do for the white, there is no Negro bloc.

The first Georgia primary to which Negroes were admitted was held in Glynn County in March, 1946, less than a month after the Primus King decision. It was in this election, it will be recalled, that all but one of seven incumbent commissioners were turned out of office.

Even without the not unexpected enfranchisement of the Negro, Glynn County politics would have been in ferment that spring. Very simply, people had grown tired of county commissioners who, in the words of one citizen, had acted for too long "as if the county and the court house belonged to them."

A total of 7,200 persons voted in that election — 2,160 Negroes and 5,040 whites. Except in the election of one Commissioner who had a particularly strong following in the Negro community, white and Negro votes were cast on about the same percentage. The majority of Negroes opposed the old commissioners; so did the majority of whites.

Four months later, when the State Democratic primary was held, Negroes again went to the polls in Glynn County. This time, they cast what probably will become a typical Negro vote. They voted in a bloc against a gubernatorial candidate. who had used white supremacy as his rallying cry. But in the election of Representatives to the General Assembly, they voted proportionately as white citizens voted, scattering their votes among all candidates; in this race no candidate had pitched his appeal to prejudice.

The Richmond County primary of April, 1946, was in many ways similar to the earlier primary in Glynn. Here, however, the reform movement was rooted in more than resentment against incumbent office-holders. In opposition to the entrenched Cracker Party, which had dominated the city of Augusta for 34 years, a well-organized Independent party had sprung up with a long-range program for municipal progress.

The extraordinary interest with which Richmond County Negroes viewed the campaign was considerably heightened during its last ten days by the injection of the Negro issue. In posters, leaflets, and speeches, the Crackers repeated that the Independents were a bunch of "niggers" and "nigger-lovers", whose election was sure to bring a mixing of the races on public vehicles and in the schools. This was a lot of nonsense, of course. The Negroes, quite intelligently, sided with the insurgents, but how little the Independents owed them for victory was shown conclusively when the ballots were counted. The total number of votes cast was 20,241, of which only about 2,500 were cast by Negroes. The three Independent candidates for the legislature won with an average majority of 5,022 votes — a white majority of 3,526, a Negro majority of 1,497. Cracker Party candidates, to whom in times past many Negroes had looked for jobs, received an average of 474 Negro votes, and actually carried the Negro vote in Augusta's Fourth Ward. Thus, the Independents won with a white majority that was greater by a thousand-odd votes than the total number of Negroes voting. They would have won even if every Negro vote had gone for the Crackers.

In Chatham County, coincident with the 1946 state primary, the Negro bloc expressed itself similarly in a local election that saw the successful beginning of a movement to replace the oldline Administration machine with the Citizens' Progressive League. It was not so much the race issue that caused Negroes to oppose the Administration, although they had ample reason to distrust an Administration tax collector who had tried, unsuccessfully, to block Negro registration. Savannah Negroes had been plugging for some specific benefits for a long time, and they figured merely that their chances for getting them were better with the CPL.

Both the CPL and Administration made bids for the Negro vote. The Administration, though, got a polite turndown. Negro leaders had little faith in the promises of Administration forces who in 25 years had failed to provide anything more than bare minimum services to the Negro community. With the Citizens Progressive League however, they talked straight politics. The Negroes would like some Negro policemen to patrol colored residential districts, several Negro matrons in the city jail, some paved roads, more street lights, better schools, and better health facilities. The CPL said it would do its best.

As it turned out, Negroes voted in a bloc for CPL candidates for the legislature, who won, and voted in a bloc for an independent candidate for judge (a woman lawyer who had declared herself unequivocally in favor of the Negro's right of ballot), who lost. In the legislative race, CPL candidates polled an average of 23,005 votes, and against 13,359 for the Administration slate, giving a total majority of 9,646. The CPL's white majority was 4,542, its Negro majority 5,106. Administration candidates received an average of 1,463 colored votes. The majority of Negroes did vote for the Citizens Progressive League, but, significantly, so did the majority of whites.

Despite the irrefutable evidence of the returns, there is a persistent opinion, encouraged by some of the defeated candidates, that the Negro vote alone was responsible for the reform victories in Chatham, Glynn, and Richmond Counties. Negro participation was an important factor in those victories, but for an entirely different reason. It was important because, in each instance, it brought to the whole electorate — predominantly white — a new sense of civic responsibliity.

This was manifested particularly by some phenomenal increases in registration. The result was that in all three counties registration lists soared far beyond the limits of machine control. In Glynn, registration went from 3,500 to 9,157 (2,400 Negroes); in Richmond, from 9,000 to 26,541 (4,716 Negroes); in Chatham, from 15,000 to nearly 60,000 (19,000 Negroes). Then, sometimes to their mutual surprise, the newly franchised Negro and the newly registered white found themselves on the same side of the political fence.

Since present Georgia laws do not provide for educational qualifications for voting, since most rural Negroes are poorly educated and kept in poverty, it is undeniably true that in some Counties Negroes, like many whites, can be controlled and "voted" — just as in others they can be controlled and not allowed to vote. They can be bought exactly as any oppressed, dependent people can be bought — by threats, by cash, by deceptive promises, sometimes by a simple display of kindliness.

The Georgia Association of Democratic Clubs, the statewide Negro group for political action, has recognized this danger and has consistently fought to avert it. From the beginning the Association has resisted the impulse to rush the Negro population politically beyond the natural limits of its preparedness for citizenship. Wherever feasible, the Association has set up regular orientation classes, their purpose being to acquaint eligible colored voters with the mechanics of the election process and to teach them some simple principles of democracy. It has insisted that Negroes look to their own leaders for political guidance, rather than to white politicians. To further reduce the Negroes' vulnerability, it has maintained that all programs with political implications be financed exclusively by the Negro communities. To preclude the charge of "outside control", the Association has scrupulously avoided taking any partisan stand in local elections.

Yet it has been charged, not without substance, that a recent election in Liberty County was swung by a Negro bloc controlled by a white politician.

Liberty County is one of the 39 Georgia counties where Negroes outnumber whites. It is a coastal county, however, and unlike that of most counties in the Black Belt, in recent years its dominant political temperament has been pro-Rivers, or anti-Talmadge. In 1946 it was perhaps the only county in the Black Belt where no effort was made to purge Negroes illegally from the registration lists. It is the only such county where Negroes have voted in strength.

The outstanding political figure in Liberty is Sheriff Paul Sikes, part owner of the Lilberty Oil Company and an employer of many Negroes. Whether his reasons were laudable or not, it was he who championed the Negro's right to vote in 1946. Liberty County Negroes have been grateful ever since.

When Sikes came up for reelection last January, his reputation as a law enforcement officer was hardly exemplary. A citizens' committee had charged him with having conspired in the illegal operation of slot machines and had filed a petition seeking to remove him from office. Nevertheless, he was reelected by an overwhelming majority. He polled 1,500 of the 2,316 votes cast. His nearest opponent received 449.

The Liberty County election seems to be a unique instance in Georgia where a candidate has won entirely on the strength of a Negro majority. It is reported that of the 2,316 voters, between 1,200 and 1,500 were Negroes and between 800 and 1,100 were whites. It is impossible to know exactly how, or in what percentage, votes were cast, but in Liberty County it is generally believed that all but a few Negroes voted for Sikes—so many that he would have won even if all the white voters in the county had united solidly behind one of his three opponents. Besides the evidence of the election count, indignant white citizens cite the fact that for weeks before the election Sikes had been appealing directly to the Negro population.

Negro leaders do not deny that Sikes actively courted the Negro vote. They do resent the inference that Negroes were "voted." They say that the Negroes supported Sikes primarily because two years earlier, at a crucial time in their political growth, he had defended their right of franchise. Their voting for him indicated only that) they recognized where and with whom their fundamental interests lay. To them, the slot machine scandal—as deplorable as it was—was strictly a side issue.

Such has been the character of local elections during the past two years that Negroes frequently have viewed candidates simply as friend or foe. It may be regrettable that in their support of a friend they have sometimes overlooked what to other people seem to be the superior merits of opposition candidates, but it's nonetheless understandable.

In voting solidly for Lewis Wilson for mayor of Macon last summer, Negroes were voting for a proven friend. Wilson is a progressive-minded grocer who through the years has demonstrated a generous understanding of his Negro customers. They would have voted for him in a bloc, even if his opponent hadn't solidified their loyalties by raising the race issue. "After all he'd done for us," one Negro man said, "we had to back Mr. Wilson. Why, if we hadn't, no white man running would ever again have any faith in us."

In Albany last November, Negroes voted in a bloc against the winning candidate for mayor, because, in their minds, he had proved himself "foe." Of 864 Negro votes cast, 819 were cast against him, a fact The Albany Herald decried as evidence of "thoughtless leadership." On the contrary, Albany's Negro leaders were quite thoughtful. In 1946 Smith had managed Eugene Talmadge's campaign in Dougherty County. On several occasions he had taken the stump for Talmadge and employed the Talmadge brand of race baiting. At a rally in Mitchell County he had presented Talmadge a check for $500. Negroes simply did not have it in them to support such a man, no matter how many worthy municipal reforms he might advocate.

It was this same psychology, of course, that caused some 100,000 Negroes throughout the state to vote in a bloc against Eugene Talmadge for governor. Talmadge ran in 1946 on a white primary platform, and, undisputably, Negroes opposed him with all the strength they could muster. As one legislator has explained it, "They voted against him for the same reason that I would have voted against him if my name were Knucklehammer and he'd said that if elected he would see to it that nobody named Knucklehammer would be allowed to vote."

For Georgia Negroes, these past two years have been a severely taxing transition period. Having finally won a fundamental political right, that of the ballot, they have had to exercise it in a segment of society which had taught them from birth to regard citizenship as the special prerogative of the white man. The amazing fact is that, despite their own unpreparedness and the prevalent hostility of election officials, they have, on the whole, handled themselves in such a way as to be a healthful and constructive influence. That influence promises to be more and more healthful as the fact of Negro participation becomes less and less restricted.

Considering the terribly irresponsible attitude of all too many white voters, it would be impertinent to make any special apology for the voting conduct of Negroes. With respect to bloc voting, the experience of the past two years would seem merely to confirm a verity: the trouble with Negroes is the trouble with whites - and that is, simply, that they're human beings.

Textbook Changes Attacked

By Robert P. Hilldrup, Education Editor

The executive director of the Virginia Council on Human Relations charged today that two textbooks used in Virginia schools have been altered to eliminate stories favorable to Negroes.

The Rev. Robert Lee Combs said he and other members of the council would meet with the state Board of Education's textbook and curriculum committee and Dr. Woodrow W. Wilkerson, the state Superintendent of Public Instruction, tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Mr. Combs said the group would seek to find out who decided to eliminate the stories. In addition, he said, the group planned to appeal for state approval of a wider selection of "multi-ethnic" books which would give favorable portrayal of minority groups.

The two books were identified by Mr. Combs as a fourth-grade reader and a sixth-grade reader, both published by Scott-Foresman and Co.

(Actually, educational sources here said, it is not at all unusual for a publisher to produce on his own initiative more than one version of the text. The so-called "ethnic" version of these Scott-Foresman books, containing the Negro stories, reportedly has never been submitted for approval in Virginia.)

Mr. Combs said the fourth-grade book normally contained a section on the Negro astronomer Benjamin Banneker, but that in copies of the book used in Virginia that section had been replaced with one on Revolutionary patriot Paul Revere.

In the sixth-grade reader, he said, a story on the evils of the slave trade and an account of how a Negro boy rescues a white youth from drowning had been deleted in the Virginia edition of the book.

In previous meetings with Dr. Wilkerson, Mr. Combs said, the superintendent had taken the position that the state simply passes upon the suitability of both textbooks and library books as submitted by the publishers.

"This would lead us to believe that the censoring was not done by Virginia officials," Mr. Combs said.

"However, we want to clear up that point."

The council's challenge thus becomes the latest in a series that has taken the state board and the state Department of Education concerning book selection policies.

The board, which is tentatively scheduled to meet Thursday, already is expected to hear a report from Dr. Wilkerson brought to by two other incidents.

These are the state's refusal to place on the approved list the Pulitzer Prize-winning novel, "To Kill a Mockingbird," and a science book, "The Great Dismal Swamp."

No official reason was given for the first rejection. The second book apparently was turned down because it referred in one paragraph to the swamp as an alluring and seductive woman.

The request the council delegation plans to make for more "multi-ethnic" books on the state-approved list echoes pleas it has made to the state in the past.

A few such books are approved by the state. Urban school systems in Northern Virginia and Tidewater, as well as Richmond, use such texts, which portray both white and Negro youths in their illustrations.

In Virginia, a locality is free to use any book in its school system that local officials wish. However, when a book not on the state-approved list is purchased, the locality can get no state money to help pay for it.

Mr. Combs said the desire for "multi-ethnic" books is not just in behalf of Negroes.

He said the American Indian, Jews and Roman Catholics are as fairly represented in approved texts now available.

"This is a grave injustice and continues a teaching pattern unfair to these minorities," he declared.

Southside Accused Of Blocking Votes

RICHMOND (AP)—The Virginia Council on Human Relations [illegible] Saturday several Southside Virginia counties apparently are [illegible]ng to make it difficult for Negroes and [illegible] register to vote. Immediate denials came from officials of two [illegible]ties cited as examples by [illegible] council.

[illegible] chairman of the Nottoway [illegible]nty Electoral Board, Haynie [illegible]ertson, termed the charge [illegible]sonous."

[illegible] council statement said several counties recently have established central voter registration centers to replace district [illegible]sters in various areas of the [illegible]nties, and the council said [illegible] boards of supervisors have [illegible]o set up extremely short [illegible]urs for the registration offices. The action "appears to be another way of denying the right [illegible] vote to large groups of citizens," the council said.

"The 'subtle' practice now is keep this central registration [illegible]fice closed most of the time during the month . . . this works a hardship especially upon the Negro and the laboring class of whites, who in most cases would have to get off from work in order to register or vote."

The council cited as examples Sussex County, which it says has a registration center open only one day a month; Nottoway County, two days a month, and Lunenburg County, four hours on the second and fourth Thursday of each month.

Officials in Lunenburg County said the county went to the central registration system when nearly two-thirds of the county registrars resigned after the 1964 presidential election.

Equal Opportunity Commission Urged

Staff Correspondence

RICHMOND—The Virginia Council on Human Relations has requested support from Gov. Mills E. Godwin Jr. in its attempt to create an equal opportunity study commission.

Norfolk Sen. Henry E. Howell Jr. has introduced a resolution to create the study commission and have it make a report to the 1966 General Assembly.

Godwin met Thursday with Howell and Sen. William B. Spong Jr. of Portsmouth, a copatron on the resolution, and a delegation from the Council on Human Relations.

Among those in the council delegation were the Most Rev. John J. Russell, bishop of the Catholic Diocese of Richmond; the Rev. William H. Marmion, bishop of the Sothwest Diocese of the Virginia Episcopal Church; David Scull, council president; Dr. J. Rupert Picott, executive director of the Virginia Teachers Association; Moses Riddick, president of the Virginia Independent Voters League, and the Rev. Robert Lee Combs, executive director of the council.

The Howell resolution would direct the commission to include in its study, and report its analysis of, the educational and employment opportunities currently afforded to citizens of minority and racial groups in the state.

Howell said that 42 other states have equal opportunity agencies.

Co-patrons on the Howell resolution are Norfolk Sens. Robert F. Baldwin and Edward L. Breeden Jr. and Sen. Spong, William H. Hodges of Chesapeake and William P. Kellam of Virginia Beach.

Government Jobs Sought For Negroes

VCHR

The Virginia Council on Human Relations has passed a resolution urging the adoption of fair employment policies throughout Virginia's state government.

The VCHR, a biracial organization operating as a part of the Southern Regional Council of Atlanta, urged the appointment of state, county and city officials without regard to race, color or national origin.

"Minority groups in Virginia, particularly Negroes, today face an almost all-white officialdom. . . . This must be corrected to provide more employment opportunities for minority groups and to help insure fair treatment of all citizens before the law and the government," the resolution stated.

"Key state governmental positions do not include responsible Negroes," the VCHR said further in a news release. Recent appointments to state positions have not included outstanding Negro citizens.

The VCHR commended the appointment of Dr. W. F. Reid as a member of the Virginia Metropolitan Study Commission but pointed out the scarcity of Negroes at city hall or local courthouses.

The council is a private, nonprofit group that says it seeks "lawful and orderly solutions of basic problems, with emphasis on education, public accommodations, youth groups, job opportunities, housing and voter registration.

Federal Voting Registrars Not Coming Here

By PAT MATTHEWS

A representative of the Virginia Council on Human Relations says he is "not aware" of any promises plans to bring federal voting registrars into this section of Virginia.

However, he pointed out that if the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights receives 20 or more valid complaints of racial discrimination in voting in a particular county, it would warrant bringing in a federal registrar.

"There are groups working in this area who are aware of this," he said.

The council, which made a voter registration survey last month, pointed out that counties such as Sussex which had a voting record in the 1964 presidential election of 63.6 per cent, Lunenburg with 41.7 per cent, and Nottoway with 49.3 per cent are in danger of having federal registrars. The council spokesman said that the state voting record in the presidential election was 45.1 per cent.

The U. S. Attorney General can order a voting examiner into a county if he decides it is necessary.

The Rev. Robert L. Combs, executive director of the council, said today that "we urge the state, the county and the local governments to emphasize voter registration and voter participation to improve the records within the state of Virginia in order to allow Virginians to handle their own affairs, thus preventing federal registrars from coming into this state to do the work we should be doing without discrimination or intimidation."

The council, the largest biracial organization in the state, has been assisting federal agencies by serving as a fact finding body. The state group, which has local chapters in 30 sections of Virginia, is set up to better human relations, reduce intergroup tensions and conduct an educational program for the improvement of economic, civic and racial conditions in the state.

A council spokesman said the following alleged irregularities in voting procedure and public accommodations have been reported to a team from the federal civil rights commission:

Prince George and Hopewell—testimony has been taken regarding alleged violations in the July Democratic Primaries in both localities.

Dinwiddie — a complaint has been received against a McKenney restaurant.

Petersburg — a formal complaint has been submitted to the Civil Rights Commission against Petersburg General Hospital. No details of the complaint have been made public. Testimony was also taken in Petersburg regarding voting procedure.

Sussex — complaints against manner of handling poll tax and voter registration, and complaints of irregularities in the July Democratic primary have been noted. No formal complaint has been made to date in the public accommodations section.

The representatives of the council explained that information regarding voting violations that occurred prior to the voting rights bill would be filed by federal authorities to determine a pattern of irregularities. Areas with a number of irregularities will be observed closely in the future by the Virginia Council, he said.

The Council has just announced results of a voter registration survey conducted last month. They report the following conditions existing in certain counties:

1. One county has previously marked through the poll tax bill being sent to certain residents of that county "which has been a subtle way to indicate to some people that they did not need to pay the poll tax bill as they paid the personal property taxes."

1. Many county tax collectors have told certain residents that they do not have to pay the poll tax.

1. Other county tax collectors have told certain residents that they did not have the proper receipts to issue for back payments of poll taxes and that the payments would have to return in the future to pay the taxes.

4. Many residents have not received poll tax bills unless they are already a qualified registere voter or demand the bill.

5. Poll tax records are not being kept accurately.

6. County and city officials ar making little or no attempt to collect back poll tax payment which are in arrears.

"The poll tax collection system in the state of Virginia, for the most part, is designed to limit the number of qualified registered voters." Payments of the poll tax for the most part is, the council report says, "a clumsy and outdated method of keeping the voter registration list updated. It is very self evident that the poll tax method used in the state of Virginia is a means to discriminate against potential registration at voters."

Powhatan Group Asks Aid of U. S. Agency

A group of Powhatan county citizens has appealed to the federal Community Relations Service to assist in negotiations with county officials over alleged civil rights grievances.

The request, mailed yesterday, was made under Title X of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

The federal agency is part of the Department of Commerce and is designed "to provide assistance to persons or communities requiring help with civil rights problems where discriminatory practices impair constitutional rights."

REQUESTS OF NEGROES

The request stems from requests presented to the board of supervisors by county Negro citizens in the fall of 1963 and again this month.

The supervisors said they lacked jurisdiction in most of the requests, and took the others under advisement.

A sit-in was held at the courthouse this month in connection with the requests.

In the appeal, the citizens listed the Citizens for Public Education and the Powhatan branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People as private agencies that might be of assistance in settling any dispute.

The names and number of those making the request were not determined.

NEGOTIATION EFFORT

The Virginia Council of Human Relations is a private group that today that it had attempted negotiations among many of the parties concerned.

The Community Relations Service is "authorized to cooperate with both public and private agencies, either on its own initiative or upon request from local officials or interested persons in situations where disputes threaten serious racial relations among the citizens of a community."

Anti-Poverty Progress Questioned

A controversy broke out at a welfare conference session today over just how well the anti-poverty program is doing in Virginia.

The difference was made by Richmond City Welfare Director William E. Waddington of Social Welfare Section of the Virginia Council on Human Relations.

Waddington said that has not been the case in Virginia because of a lack of direction.

Robert Lee Combs, executive director of the Virginia Council on Human Relations, stood up. He told the audience of some 100 social workers that the federal programs have shown little initiative.

The answer, said Kirby, is that for the Economic Opportunity Act to be effective the organizational work in Virginia must be done at the local level. The Economic Opportunity Act does not permit them, he said, to do it.

Combs said further that the federal government has indicated that the Virginia council can do this job in particular.

LOCAL LEADERS

He said the social workers in Virginia could help in the interest and enthusiasm of the participants, Charles W. Prentis, executive director of the Richmond Area Community Council.

Prentis said that the local leadership "is not made up of the people who have been asked to do the same in Virginia.

As for the council, said Combs, this is a field into which it has not ventured before. It has not been encountered in programs in Virginia considering it.

FOREWORD

While many communities in the North, such as Rochester and Harlem, New York, and in the deep South, such as Birmingham, Alabama, Albany, Georgia, and Oxford, Mississippi, have been plagued with discord, tension and rioting during the past several months, Virginia can be proud that we have had only one incident within our State of comparable nature.

While there are so many people of good-will within our State, and many groups which have been concerned with improving human relations, we, the Virginia Council on Human Relations, have been dedicated for the past ten years to the work of building better understanding, between all Virginians, regardless of ethnic, cultural, racial or religious backgrounds and persuasions.

VCHR feels that through our thirty-two local councils, located in as many communities throughout the State, and through our state staff of dedicated workers, we have had a part to play in Virginia's ability to avoid conflict, tensions and misunderstandings among our citizenry.

VCHR, furthermore, feels that the time has come for all concerned Virginians to share in both the knowledge of our work, and to be given an opportunity to participate in the many activities of our organization.

To the Virginia business and industrial communities, we dedicate this brochure with the belief that the information herein contained will serve as a stimuli for your consideration to support the over-all work of the Virginia Council on Human Relations.

AN OUNCE OF PREVENTION

We are living through a time of transition. Sometimes that transition is smooth and gracious. Sometimes it is violent and tragic.

How can we in Virginia preserve what is finest in our heritage while accommodating to new ways for these new days? How can we make sure the transition in race relations is marked by understanding and humanity? How can we protect the Old Dominion from the bloodshed, the violence, the hatred and the fear that have scarred other States?

How, in fact, can we purchase an ounce of that priceless prevention which is worth incalculably more than a pound of dubious or partial cure?

We have tried to indicate some of the answers in this presentation. We hope as you have read it through you felt that the problems raised and the solutions suggested were your direct concern. It used to be that the field of human relations, and of race relations in particular, was the special province of those we refer to with good-humored contempt as "do-gooders."

Today, it is the province of every citizen, every taxpayer, every businessman. For unless each of us accepts a share of responsibility, the positive climate for growth will be jeopardized.

VCHR Serves Virginia Through Its Professional Staff

Community needs and problems are varied - from the Eastern Shore to Southwest Virginia, from the Potomac to South Hill. It is apparant to every thoughtful person that local solutions must be worked out by competent local leaders in every situation. Where counsel and the benefit of wider experience is needed, the Virginia Council on Human Relations is ready to make available competent leadership anywhere in Virginia, with the recognition that the only valid approaches to situations of tension or opportunity are those made by people of the locality.

The Virginia Council on Human Relations works through a seven-member state staff; through its seventy-five member Board of Directors, representing all areas of Virginia; and through over twenty local chapters throughout the state. Through the state staff, VCHR keeps in close contact with state and national agencies which are concerned with issues pertaining to inter-group relations. Furthermore, the state staff maintains working relationships with many private organizations which are committed to the realization of "liberty and justice for all".

Any community within Virginia may obtain assistance in regard to community problems, public relations, negotiation, inter-group adjustments, or the organization, financing and programming of a local chapter of the Virginia Council on Human Relations.

VCHR staff is available to any Virginia Community and has worked for the past ten years—

1. Organizing local councils whereby the local community leaders and interested citizens may build better community human relations.
2. Assisting local councils in programming and developing activities related to their local problems.
3. Working with Mayors, City Councils, Chambers of Commerce and community leaders to keep open lines of communication, thus relieving tensions.

4. Negotiating between community groups for a fair and reasonable degree of progress in opening Hotels, Motels, Restaurants, as well as Theatres, and places of public accommodations to all.

5. Providing State-wide consultations and workshops whereby problems and solutions may be discussed on a larger plane.

6. Serving as lecturers and speakers to Churches, Colleges, Civic groups, professional groups, and community meetings.

7. Serving as speakers on Radio, Television and forums, and through Newspapers to the larger community.

8. Working with private and public agencies to build the larger community of concerned for better human relations within Virginia.

9. Attending National meetings and keeping abreast of the National climate and developments in the human relations field.

10. Working with business and industrial leaders of Virginia, sharing information as to how many firms can implement merit employment practices.

11. Moving into communities such as Danville and Prince Edward County, where tensions build up and seeking to assist in removing both the tensions and the cause.

12. Mailing newsletters and thousands of pieces of valuable information and educational material to state and community leaders in Virginia.

UNDER no circumstances do we advocate or participate in demonstrations, boycotts or picketing.

The Virginia Council on Human Relations works at the local community level through its local councils—

Community needs and problems are varied—from the Eastern Shore to Southwest Virginia, from the Potomac to South Hill. It is apparent to every thoughtful person that local solutions must be worked out by competent local leaders in every situation. The Virginia Council on Human Relations recognized that the only valid approach to situations of tension or opportunity are those made by people of the locality.

Virginia College Council

VCHR's local councils provide for the local community as follows:

PROVIDE a meeting ground for all citizens regardless of race, creed, color, national origin or political persuasion, where dialogue, a rapport and communication may begin to take place and genuine acquaintances can be made.

ENABLE people from varied religious and professional groups to find a means of effective, cooperative action in community human relations enterprises for the common good, when they may sometimes be unable to do this through present structures of their religious or professional bodies.

DEVELOP a climate of respect, understanding and good-will among responsible community leaders and citizens, wherein local issues can be faced and resolved, thereby avoiding critical stalemates and outside intervention.

EFFECT a vigorous and courageous organization, marked by fairness and good-will, which will be so effective in its work and techniques of fact-finding, education, communication, negotiation and persuasion, that it will neutralize extreme and violent elements before they are capable of damaging a community's life.

DEVELOP programs and methods for the maximum, effective utilization of the industrial and professional skills of all our citizens, regardless of race, creed, color or national origin, thereby creating the most fruitful economic development possible.

DEVELOP an organization and programs through which concerned individuals and groups can do something more significant than merely "feeling right" about race relations, brotherhood and the democratic ideal.

LOCAL COUNCILS OFFER OPPORTUNITIES FOR PRIVATE CITIZENS TO DO SOMETHING SIGNIFICANT ABOUT BETTER HUMAN RELATIONS:

I. THROUGH MONTHLY MEETINGS—where all citizens of a community are provided a meeting place where acquaintances and understanding can be realized.

II. THROUGH EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS—where all community problems can be faced and discussed, and methods found to deal with these under the techniques and methods which build better human understanding.

III. THROUGH SPECIAL COMMITTEES—where citizens, who have felt they should do something constructive for the betterment of community problems, have the opportunity to serve with others of similar attitudes.

IV. THROUGH INTER-GROUP DIALOGUE—where persons can develop a climate of respect for those of different ethnic, cultural, religious or racial background.

V. THROUGH NEGOTIATION—where individual citizens can assist in bringing together people of community influence where lines of communication may be opened and good-will established across community lines.

VI. THROUGH BUILDING AN ATMOSPHERE AND CLIMATE—within a community which will neutralize extreme and violent elements before the community's life is damaged.

VI.I DEVELOP MAXIMUM STATE ECONOMY—by community effort contributing toward maximum effective utilization of industrial and professional skills of all citizens, thereby creating the most fruitful economic development possible.

AN INVESTMENT IN VIRGINIA'S PROGRESS

The task of the Virginia Council on Human Relations is to safeguard that climate for growth and to dispel the dark emotions that threaten it.

We ask your support in fulfilling this task. We ask you to invest in us so that we may meet the growing challenge in Virginia.

Whether your investment is $500 or $5,000, it will repay you in the rich dividends of peaceful cooperation and community harmony.

ALL CONTRIBUTIONS ARE TAX EXEMPT

AS AN INVESTMENT in the development of equal opportunities for all the citizens of Virginia and the effective utilization of their industrial and professional skills.

MEETINGS HELD MORE FREQUENTLY

Biracial Group Functions in Prince Edward

By Staff Writer

HAMPTEN-SYDNEY, May 11 About 20 whites and 20 Negroes met near here at Mercy Seat Baptist Church, a Negro church about half a mile south of this college community.

The occasion last night was a meeting of the Prince Edward Council on Human Relations, which affiliated about six months ago with the Virginia Council on Human Relations.

The biracial meeting in the attractive church building, which dates from 1870, was hardly historic or unique.

And it was far from commonplace in Southside Virginia, which has only two formal human relations groups.

But it was an occasion that is recurring with more frequency in Prince Edward county.

The Prince Edward council is an outgrowth of a study group set up about two years ago. The Rev. Arthur M. Field Jr., pastor of College Church, has been a guiding force.

The Mercy Seat Church, with its hard-backed wooden pews and rural flavor appears to be one of five "acceptable" meeting places in the county.

The council says 23 potential meeting sites were surveyed in the county. A spokesman said five churches—three Baptist and two Catholic — agreed to make facilities available. Two groups were reported to have replied "no," and 16 did not answer.

The council meets once a month, except during summer months.

When organized, the council said it had 42 members enrolled. Dr. C. G. G. Moss, the treasurer, says the total now is about 50.

The white members appear to be mainly from the Hampden-Sydney and Longwood College communities.

Dr. Marvin W. Schlegel of Longwood, president since the council was organized, was re-elected last night to a year's term.

Other officers include Edgar Latham, vice president; Mrs. Etta Lee, recording secretary; Mrs. Graves Thompson, corresponding secretary; Dr. Moss, treasurer, and Mr. Field chaplain. All except Mrs. Mrs. Thompson were re-elected.

Last night the Rev. Robert L. Combs, new executive director of the Virginia council, told the group "there are still many battles to be fought. This year in Prince Edward obviously know."

Some battles concerning people of good will "we shall lose, others we shall win. We are still very much in the hell of war for good human relations. . . . But surely we shall win."

Human Relations Unit to Prod Anti-Poverty Programs Here

By WILLIAM LAKEMAN

The Fredericksburg Human Relations Council is going to prod city officials about starting community-action projects here under the federal anti-poverty program.

Letters will be sent to the City School Board, the mayor and the Fredericksburg Biracial Commission after HRC's executive committee gathers statistical evidence of the need for the projects here.

The HRC vote last night followed a board discussion of whether Fredericksburg is slipping into complacency after making large strides in the past two years through the quiet work of its biracial panel.

The executive secretary of the Virginia Human Relations Council told the group "there is entirely too much foot dragging" on anti-poverty programs in several areas of the state.

In some cases committees have formed and lapsed, said the Rev. Robert Lee Combs, and in others there is great publicity given to "Head Start" programs but very little said or done about the many other programs available under the Economic Opportunity Act.

Combs, a former Presbyterian minister of Norfolk, cited the case of his hometown, Charlotte, N.C., which drifted into complacency on inter-racial matters, he said, until it was shaken by a series of bombings last year.

Even in Richmond, he warned, there are trends of complacency and lack of communication between races and classes that he believes could lead to conditions like those in the Watts area in Los Angeles.

In a broad state wide review that touched upon voting rights, education, employment and housing, Combs noted "many things for which to be thankful" and voiced "real hopes" for Gov. Mills E. Godwin's plans to step up aid to education.

But he warned that the Ku Klux Klan is actively organizing in Virginia, and he noted that Attorney General Button is still contesting the Voting Rights Act in the courts and $100,000 in state tax funds is still supporting the Commission on Constitutional Government that was set up in "massive resistance" days to publish states' rights tracts. The state panel is now asking for $250,000, he added, which could be better spent on forming a commission on equal employment or human relations.

The local branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People feels that Fredericksburg is becoming complacent with token desegregation of sales clerks in stores, the HRC meeting was told.

Hopes have turned to launching occupational training programs at Walker-Grant High School, but it has lagged, partly due to a lack of student interest, the session was told.

One Negro family has rented an apartment "in a better neighborhood," it was reported, but another told of a long and unsuccessful search for housing that convinced him "only Mayfield is for the colored man." The Area Ministerial Association is studying a proposal on "open occupancy," but has not acted on it yet, the meeting heard.

Combs suggested that the HRC should invite Reuben Clay of the Federal Housing Authority office in Richmond to speak on the FHA's rules about open-occupancy requirements under the Civil Rights Act.

HRC president Wilbur Chance suggested that a letter be sent to City Council, urging that it look into the need for projects here under the federal "war on poverty" program. The vote, however, called for citing concrete evidence of low-income housing and routing it to the Housing Commission and School Board in launching action here.

Voter Project To Get Assist

The Virginia Council on Human Relations will assist the Southern Regional Council, Inc. Atlanta, Ga., in its voter education project in Virginia, the VCHR announced today.

The VCHR said it will provide grants to local human relations councils and other groups to assist in programs of voter registration, citizenship education and leadership training.

Plans are already under way for programs in Richmond, Roanoke, Danville, Lynchburg, Petersburg and the 4th Congressional district.

Movie Planned By HR Council

A movie titled "No Hiding Place" will be shown at 8 p.m. Thursday at a meeting of the Charlottesville Chapter of the Virginia Human Relations Council.

The meeting will be held at the First Presbyterian Church at 500 Park St.

"No Hiding Place" was the winner of the 1964 Blue Ribbon Award of the Education Film Library Association. It was shown on television as part of the series "East Side. West Side". It concerns integration of a suburban, white neighborhood.

A spokesman for the council said that the film is being shown to dramatize the problem of segregated housing.

500 State Students Fan To Help Negroes In Prince Edward

By Robert Mobley

Free-Dispatch Staff Writer

FARMVILLE, April 22 — Nearly 500 students from colleges in Virginia and other states planned to travel to Prince Edward county this weekend to help Negroes there continue their fight for equal opportunity.

Thursday was the deadline for students from 11 colleges to register for the Prince Edward County Community Action Program for disadvantaged students.

Participating colleges will be represented by students from Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Bridgewater, Longwood, Mary Washington, Madison, Hampden-Sydney, Lynchburg, Randolph-Macon, Sweet Briar, Washington and Lee and Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

Students will be assigned to work in the county with the Prince Edward Council on Human Relations, the local chapter of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the Prince Edward County Community Action Program, and the Prince Edward County Community Center.

Students will be housed in the homes of Negroes who have offered to provide a room where students can sleep and a meal.

The local chapter of the Virginia Council on Human Relations is sponsoring the program. Contact for Human Relations in Prince Edward County, Inc., recording secretary, said that "we have received more than 500 applications from students who want to come to Prince Edward County to work with the Negroes in their fight for equal opportunity."

Students will be expected to pay their own transportation and meet expenses of different responsibilities and meet expenses of different responsibilities and meet expenses of different responsibilities

WHAT THEY SAY ... about the Council on Human Relations.

DR. J. RUPERT PICOTT, Executive Secretary, Virginia Teachers' Association — Effective communication between people is the great need of our times. The Virginia Council on Human Relations deserves hearty congratulations for fulfilling this role.

The Most Reverend JOHN J. RUSSEL D.D. Bishop of Richmond — With inner human problems as with any other, negotiation and mediation seem the best answer. TheVirginia Council on Human Relations has exhibited to me its ability for creating this better understanding among all men.

EMMET ALLEN FRANK, Rabbi, Temple Beth El, Alexandria, Va. — The program and objectives of the Virginia Council on Human Relations are highly commendable. They deserve the wholehearted support and encouragement of every patriotic American in the state of Virginia.

DR. THEODORE F. ADAMS, Pastor, First Baptist Church of Richmond — I am sure that many are grateful for any worthy means of promoting understanding and brotherhood across the lines of color and creed. The Virginia Council on Human Relations provides just such a channel for many men and women of goodwill.

DR. ROBERT P. DANIEL, President, Virginia State College, Petersburg — The Virginia Council on Human Relations makes a significant contribution to the cultivation of wholesome attitudes necessary for the solution of the racial issues involved in community problems. Tensions and misunderstandings can be removed, indeed prevented, by the cooperative efforts of people of mutual respect and goodwill.

COL. BENJAMIN MUSE, Manassas Virginia, Former Ambassador to Mexico, Former Member Va. State Senate. — Membership in the Virginia Council of Human Relations enables us to play a part in the greatest movement of our day. We can help to banish racial discrimination and prejudice from our state and nation.

A Special Opportunity for Every Concerned Virginian

By being a member of the Virginia Council on Human Relations, you will automatically become a member of the local council if there is one in your area, and will receive VCHR's Newsletter, plus other material and special information mailed members from time to time.

The work of the Council is dependent upon concerned Virginians, who are willing to invest of their time, talents and money for this all-important cause of fostering better human relations in our time.

THE AMERICAN DREAM OF EQUAL OPPORTUNITY WAS NURTURED

By Thomas Jefferson, who wrote:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights. . ."—Thomas Jefferson, July 4, 1776.

"Equal and exact justice to all men, of whatever state or persuasion. . ."—Thomas Jefferson's First Inaugural.

. . . . and by other Virginia patriots who laid the foundation for a democratic society.

THE AMERICAN DREAM OF EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IS GROWING

In Virginia. In:

- Public Education
- Public Accommodations
- Merit Employment
- Voter Registration
- Stabilized Residential Areas

Lending information and consistent support in more than 30 communities across Virginia is the Virginia Council on Human Relations, with these local councils and cooperating groups, including high school and college councils on 17 campuses:

Alexandria
Arlington
Blacksburg
Charlottesville
Covington
Danville
Fairfax County

THE AMERICAN DREAM OF EQUAL OPPORTUNITY WILL BE FULFILLED

By Achieving Such Goals As:

—voter participation comparable to the 61.1% national average, contrasted with the 1964 Virginia record of 41.1%.
—expanding areas of public accommodations where every citizen is accorded the dignity of fair and courteous treatment.
—integrated quality education, complying with orders of the courts and offering challenging opportunities for every student.
—equal justice, under the law, with enforcement bodies and the judiciary reflecting the constituency of the community.
—job opportunities without discrimination, and geared to contributing to an expanding economy.
—recreational and cultural facilities provided for and shared in by the total community.
—elimination of poverty and disease as a perennial scourge of minority groups and a blight upon a prosperous state.
—adequate housing for the total population, policies of open occupancy as a guarantee against urban blight and the destruction of economic values —opportunity for every person to rise to the capacity of which he is capable.

Objectives of the Virginia Council On Human Relations

1. The Council is a private, non-profit, voluntary organization open to all Virginians who will approach these objectives through constructive under standing and appropriate action.
2. The Council unites Virginians of common purpose to seek lawful and orderly solutions of basic problems and to help create a climate in whic men and women of goodwill work together for the welfare of the entire community.
3. It uses fact-finding, education, negotiation, persuasion and publicity to advance the legitimate aspirations for all citizens without regard to rac creed, color or national origin.
4. It works through a professional staff, more than 30 local chapters, and members representing all walks of life and many religious groups.
5. It cooperates with civic leaders and public officials at all levels in seeking equal opportunities and justice for all citizens.
6. It is linked in cooperation with similar councils in the other southern states, all related to the Southern Regional Council, Inc., in approachin Southwide problems with a common understanding and shared resources.
7. It seeks to keep open lines of communication with business and professional leaders and it maintains close liaison with Federal agencies an private organizations.
8. It relies for financial support on membership dues and the generous (tax-deductible) contributions of concerned Virginians who are committed t the realization of America's democratic idea.

The VCHR is concerned about:

EDUCATION
PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS
YOUTH GROUPS
EQUAL JOB OPPORTUNITIES
FAIR HOUSING
VOTER REGISTRATION

You can find an opportunity to help with these and other significant enterprises in your local chapter.

NUMBERS COUNT—If you can become only a member, this helps.
DOLLARS COUNT—If you contribute financially, this helps. (Tax-deductible)
IDEAS COUNT—If you are able to help solve even one part of one problem, this helps.
INFLUENCE COUNTS—What you think and how you act will have a telling effect on countless other people.

THE MISSISSIPPI STORY

A Comprehensive Post Report

"I was sure that if I were killed, somebody else would take my place someday." These were the thoughts of James Meredith as he stood at the very center of a historic national crisis with the world watching.

In the following pages:

- Meredith tells his own story for the first time: what it is like to be a living target of threats and hatred; what he has heard and thought and felt as the drama on the Ole Miss campus was played out around him.
- Post Editor Robert Massie, who saw the sudden, chilling violence and then traveled the state searching for the deeper meaning, reports the story behind the crisis.
- John Faulkner, brother of the great Mississippi novelist, describes the attitudes and reactions of his fellow townsfolk of Oxford.

"I'll Know Victory or Defeat"

By JAMES H. MEREDITH

If you asked me when it all began—what brought me to the campus in Oxford that first week in October—I guess I would say it began when I was a boy in Kosciusko, up in the hill country of Mississippi, where I was born. I used to lie in bed and dream about a city—I didn't know what city or where it was—I just knew it would be different from Kosciusko, because I didn't like the way things were there.

Kosciusko isn't altogether typical of Mississippi, I would say. It is an area of small farms, and most of the farmers, Negro and white, own their own places. I think the Negroes there might be a little more progressive than in some other parts of the state. Some Negroes there—my father, for example—have been voting for as long as I know of. I think you'll find that many progressive Negroes come from an area like this, where they own their own land. Still, I certainly can't say I liked it in Kosciusko. They tell me I was always strong on the race issue when I was young. For example, I remember a wealthy white man who used to go around town handing out nickles and dimes to Negro children. I never would take any.

In Kosciusko I grew up between things. Part of my family was much older than I was, and part was much younger. It was like being an only child. I really only got to know my brothers and sisters later. Also, I lived in the country and went to school in town. In small towns in the South you're either a "city boy" or a "country boy," but I wasn't either. I got used to taking care of things by myself.

When I was 16 I left Kosciusko to finish my last year of high school in St. Petersburg, Florida. I had a desire to go to a better school, and I had an uncle and a sister living there. I graduated from high school in June of 1951 and enlisted in the Air Force the next month. I had a brother in the Air Force, but that wasn't the reason I joined. It was common knowledge among Negroes that the Air Force was a better branch of service for them.

Influence of Air Force Duty

Certainly my Air Force days were the most influential time of my life. I served in nothing but integrated units. It seems to me the integration of the armed forces is one of the most important things that has happened to the Negro in the United States. For that reason, I thought it was particularly unfortunate that the Army apparently resegregated its units in Oxford after the night of campus rioting. If Negroes could fight side by side with whites around the world, they should be able to serve with them in Mississippi.

I never had any "bad" incidents when I was in the Air Force. There were occasional small things, reminders that a Negro was a Negro. I remember when I was in basic training at Sampson Air Force Base in New York State, all of us were invited to spend weekends with families in Syracuse. I spent a weekend with a white family there, and they were very nice, but they kept reminding me in subtle ways that they were being unusually nice—in other words, they didn't have to do this; it was just a favor. There is always that air of difference about being a Negro that you can never quite touch.

But life was pretty good in the Air Force. As I say, I served in nothing but integrated units, and everything was OK as far as promotions went too. I remember very well one particular hearing for promotion, when I was up for staff sergeant. I was to go before a board of three colonels. Usually they question you about your qualifications and try to decide whether or not you can take on the responsibilities of the next rank. I came up before the board just two months after the Supreme Court school-desegregation decision in 1954, and they didn't ask me anything about my qualifications. All they asked about was my opinion of the decision, what my family thought about it, and all that. Well, I told them. I'll always remember that when it was over and I had made staff sergeant, they told me they were with me in the struggle but that "the outcome will depend on you." I took that "you" to mean Negroes, all Negroes, and I guess it has been sort of a badge of responsibility ever since.

"Look in a Mirror to Remember"

In 1955 I reenlisted. I always had it in mind to come back to Mississippi and study law, but I didn't think I was ready then for the responsibilities I would have to face, so I reenlisted. I was in Japan from 1957 till 1960, and there isn't any doubt that this was the settling-down point for me. I decided not only what I wanted to do, which I have known for a long time in a vague way, but how to go about doing it.

Being in Japan was an amazing experience. Negroes say, "When you're in Japan you have to look in a mirror to remember you're a Negro," and it's true. Japan is the only place where I have not felt the "air of difference."

I was surprised that the Japanese people were so aware of the racial situation in America. For instance, I met a boy—I don't suppose he was more than 12 or 13—and he knew more about Little Rock than most American kids that age. He was amazed when I told him I was from Mississippi and that I intended to go back. This kind of reaction further convinced me that I would go back to Mississippi and try to improve these conditions. I was discharged in July, 1960, and by the end of the month I was back in Kosciusko.

I entered Jackson State College, a Negro school in Jackson, and quickly met other students who felt as I did—that Negroes in Mississippi did not have the rights of full citizens, including the right to the best education the state offered. Someone had to seek admission to the University of Mississippi, and I decided to do it. But there were many of us involved. Although the lawsuit was mine, the others were with me, and I sought their advice on every move I made.

As soon as I filed application for admission, I contacted Medgar Evers, Mississippi field secretary for the N.A.A.C.P., and through him I asked for N.A.A.C.P. legal aid. Mrs. Constance Motley, associate counsel of the N.A.A.C.P. Legal Defense Fund, came to my assistance. The N.A.A.C.P. was prompt and efficient, and that was of prime importance. There was a great morale factor here, and every time we called them, they were there.

The court fight was long, and there were times when I wondered if it would be successful. I kept winning in court, but I didn't get any nearer to the university. Finally, after the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals had said I should be registered, I felt the responsibility was the Federal Government's; it was out of my hands to do anything.

People have asked me if I wasn't terribly afraid the night we went to Oxford. No, my apprehensions came a long time before that. The hardest thing in human nature is to decide to act. I was doing all right in the Air Force. I got married in 1956, and my wife was able to work as a civil servant on the same bases where I was stationed. I had to give this up, this established way of things, this status, and try something new and unknown. That's where the big decision was—not here, last month, but there, a couple of years ago. Once I made that decision, things just had to happen the way they happened.

I think maybe a quote from Theodore Roosevelt that I read somewhere was more important than anything else in helping me make this decision. I think I read it around 1952, and I clipped it out, and everywhere I've gone since then—every place I've lived or everywhere I've worked—I have put that saying in front of me. I guess I must have read it two or three thousand times by now. It says, "It is not the critic who counts. . . . The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena, whose face is marred by dust and sweat and blood . . . who at the best knows in the end the triumph of high achievement, and who at the worst, if he fails, at least fails while daring greatly, so that his place will never be with those cold and timid souls who know neither victory nor defeat." At different times different parts of that quotation have been important to me, but when I made the decision to return to Mississippi and later to enroll at the university, the part I kept seeing was the part about "cold and timid souls who know neither victory nor defeat." I didn't want to be one of those.

Fear Is Just Another Obstacle

As far as fear of death or personal injury goes—and I consider this most important for everybody to understand—I put death or the fear of getting hurt in the same category with legal objections to my entering the university, or moral objections, or objections on grounds of custom. They are all on the same level. They are all just ways to keep me out of the university, and no one is any more important than any other. It wouldn't matter if I stumbled and fell and couldn't go to classes or whether I cut my finger and couldn't write for a month or whether I was shot and killed—they're all just things in my way. I might do quite a bit to put a stop to the act of being killed. I have done this several times already—I've taken the advice of the Federal marshals on several occasions, for instance. But this was because, if something happened to me, it would have put everything back as far as the Negroes in Mississippi are concerned. If I have lost an hour's sleep in recent weeks, it has been over some philosophical point, or through apprehension of not succeeding in entering the university, and of discouraging others from trying if I failed, but not over what might happen to me personally.

Author Meredith: "They tell me I was always strong on the race issue when I was young."

With his wife, Mary June, in the kitchen of a friend's home at Jackson, Meredith pores over the letters and telegrams which have deluged him. Most support his cause; a few threaten his life.

I was sure that if I were harmed or killed, somebody else would take my place one day. I would hate to think another Negro would have to go through that ordeal, but I would hate worse to think there wouldn't be another who would do it.

I had an older brother who was scary as a boy. Back home he wouldn't go certain places after dark or walk here or there. I always walked wherever I wanted. I walked four miles to Scout meetings at night, and I always went through all the hollows and the places where you were supposed to be afraid to go. I must admit my hair has stood up on my head at times, but I never ran. They used to say, "If you see a 'hant' put your hand on it." Most of the time you find it isn't there. I think it's an utter waste of time to worry about dying. It's living that matters—doing something to justify being here on God's green earth. I do what I do because I must. I've never felt I had a choice. There is some urge that I can't explain easily—I guess that's as close as I can come to defining it.

There is something else here, too, and it's hard to say right. People can misunderstand it. But it's this—generally at home I was always thought to be pretty smart. I wasn't particularly proud of it; it was just almost a fact of life. There was an expectation or a more or less acknowledged fact that I was one of the sharpest in the group. I was a champion in my group in Mississippi, but then, when I went to Florida to change high schools, I wasn't a champion at all. I had to fight to keep up. I hadn't been prepared. Since then, one of the biggest things in my life is that I have always felt I was never able to develop my talents. I have felt many times that, given the opportunity, I could develop into practically anything. Many times I have been angry at the world for not giving me an opportunity to develop. I am sure this has been a strong motivating force with me, and I'm sure it is with many Negroes. Since then I've always tried to see myself in relation to the whole society. Too many Negroes see themselves only in relation to other Negroes. But that's not good enough. We have to see ourselves in the whole society. If America isn't for everybody, it isn't America.

Through all that has happened I have tried to remain detached and objective. I have had all sorts of reactions to things that have happened, but mostly they have been personal reactions and realistic reactions, both at the same time. When I was in the middle of the force of marshals being gathered to take me to Oxford I thought, personally, how utterly ridiculous this was, what a terrible waste of time and money and energy, to iron out some rough spots in our civilization. But realistically I knew that these changes were necessary. I knew change was a threat to people and that they would fight it and that this was the only way it could be accomplished.

I have tried to be detached and realistic. When we were turned away the first time I tried to register at the university, and especially the second time, at the State Capitol in Jackson, I saw the mobs and heard them jeering, "Go home, nigger" and that stuff, but I never recognized them as individuals at all, even those who showed the greatest contempt for me. I felt they were not personally attacking me but that they were protesting a change and this was something they felt they must do. I thought it was impersonal. Some of them were crying, and their crying indicated to me even more the pain of change and the fear of things they did not know. I feel the people were keyed up by the actions of their leaders. With Gov. Ross Barnett taking the position he did, the people were bound to act that way, and it didn't really have anything to do with me personally. That's the way I saw it.

I might add that I thought the governor put on a pretty good performance. The first time, when he turned us away at the university, he reminded me of Charlton Heston, I believe it was, in a movie about Andrew Jackson. Very dramatic.

I don't think I have had a real low point in recent weeks. It always seemed to me it was the Government's job to carry out the court order and it would be done. The most annoying time was when there was so much talk about a possible deal between the Federal Government and Governor Barnett. But when the Federal officers told me we were going that Sunday, just a few minutes before we took off for Oxford, the annoyance disappeared.

When we landed in Oxford it was almost dark. We got in a car and I remember seeing a truckload of marshals in front of us and one behind. I went straight to the university and was taken to my rooms—an apartment, I guess you could call it. Since they knew some Government men would be staying with me, I had two bedrooms and a living room and a bathroom. The first thing I did was make my bed. When the trouble started, I couldn't see or hear very much of it. Most of it was at the other end of the campus, and besides I didn't look out the window. I think I read a newspaper and went to bed around 10 o'clock. I was awakened several times in the night by the noise and shooting outside, but it wasn't near me, and I had no way of knowing what was going on. Some of the students in my dormitory banged their doors for a while and threw some bottles in the halls, but I slept pretty well all night.

I woke up about six-thirty in the morning and looked out and saw the troops. There was a slight smell of tear gas in my room, but I still didn't know what had gone on during the night, and I didn't find out until some marshals came and told me how many people were hurt and killed. I had gotten to know these marshals pretty well in recent weeks, and I was so sorry about this. Some supposedly responsible newspapermen asked me

"If I can't live in Mississippi, I very definitely intend to leave the country."

With his father, whom the author found a "progressive" example. Moses Meredith, 71, has voted for years though many other Negroes are barred from the polls.

if I thought attending the university was worth all this death and destruction. That really annoyed me. Of course I was sorry! I didn't want that sort of thing. I believe it could have been prevented by responsible political leaders. I understand the President and the attorney general were up most of the night. They had all the intelligence at their disposal, and I believe they handled it to the best of their knowledge and ability. I think it would have been much worse if we had waited any longer. Social change is a painful thing, but it depends on the people at the top. Here they were totally opposed—the state against the Federal Government. There was bound to be trouble, and there was trouble.

Monday morning at eight o'clock I registered, and at nine I went to a class in Colonial American History. I was a few minutes late, and I took a seat at the back of the room. The professor was lecturing on the background in England, conditions there at the time of the colonization of America, and he paid no special attention when I entered. I think there were about a dozen students in the class. One said hello to me, and the others were silent. I remember a girl—the only girl there, I think—and she was crying, but it might have been from the tear gas in the room. I was crying from it myself.

I had three classes scheduled that day. I went to two, and the third didn't meet because there was too much gas in the room. No marshals were in the classrooms with me, nor were they all week.

I have received hundreds of telegrams and more than 1,000 letters, most of them expressions of support. One guy sent me a piece of singed rope, and another sent a poem, I guess you'd have to call it:

Roses are red, violets are blue;
I've killed one nigger and might as well make it two.

But most of the letters and telegrams have supported me, and some of them have been really touching—letters from 10- and 11-year-olds who think I'm right and offer me their help and that sort of thing.

As far as my relations with the students go, I make it a practice to be courteous. I don't force myself on them, but that's not my nature anyway. Many of them—most, I'd say—have been courteous, and the faculty members certainly have been. When I hear the jeers and the catcalls—"We'll get you, nigger" and all that—I don't consider it personal. I get the idea people are just having a little fun. I think it's tragic that they have to have this kind of fun about me, but many of them are children of the men who lead Mississippi today, and I wouldn't expect them to act any other way. They have to act the way they do. I think I understand human nature enough to understand that.

It hasn't been all bad. Many students have spoken to me very pleasantly. They have stopped banging doors and throwing bottles into my dormitory now.

One day a fellow from my home town sat down at my table in the cafeteria. "If you're here to get an education, I'm for you," he said. "If you're here to cause trouble, I'm against you." That seemed fair enough to me.

Marshals Are a Distraction

I am taking five courses—Colonial American History; a political science course called American Political Parties, Theories and Pressure Groups; French literature; English literature; and algebra. I expect to be able to get my B.A. in history, with a minor in political science, in two semesters and one summer, if everything goes right.

I'm not sure what I will do in the future. A lot depends on how things go at the university. We are just at the beginning of a process of change in Mississippi. I would like to help that process along, and that probably would mean some kind of job in public life. Whether this will be possible in Mississippi or not we'll just have to wait to see. I do know this: If I can't live in Mississippi, I very definitely will leave the country.

If the decision is made to keep the marshals and troops on the campus until I complete my course, it is all right with me, but certainly I hope that won't be necessary. I think the marshals have been superb. They have had an image of America—that the law must be obeyed, no matter what they may think of it or what anybody else may think of it—but they are certainly a distraction on the campus. The thing that grieves me most about all this is that the students are not getting the best college results because they're spending too much time looking on at these various events involving me. I didn't get much studying done that first week, and I don't think anybody else did.

Personally the year will be a hardship for me. My wife will be in college in Jackson. Our son John Howard, who will be three in January, is living with my parents in Kosciusko. I expect to see them both very often, but I don't think families should live apart. On the other hand, this is nothing new to my wife. We spent most of our courtship discussing my plan to come back to Mississippi some day, and I guess you could say her understanding that I would try to do this sometime was almost part of the marriage contract. She has been truly marvelous through all of it. I called her three nights after the trouble, and she picked up the phone and was so calm you'd have thought we just finished a game of 500 rummy and she won. She's a remarkable woman.

I don't think this has had any effect on my family in Kosciusko. I have talked to my father. He asks me how I am, and I ask him how he is. He knows what I mean by the question, and I know what he means by the answer. That's the way it is in our family.

I don't pretend that all the problems are over. But, whatever the problems are, I don't expect them to be too much for me. Nobody really knows where his breaking point is, and I can't say I know where mine is. But I know one thing—in the past the Negro has not been allowed to receive the education he needs. If this is the way it must be accomplished, and I believe it is, then it is not too high a price to pay. THE END

What Next in Mississippi?

In Oxford's aftermath, moderates ask for time to prepare for further integration. Negroes say "Now." Extremists cry "Never."

When the violence erupted at Oxford, Post contributing editor Robert Massie was a closeup witness. He secured candid comments from all principals—students, townspeople, rioters and the "Feds." When the campus was quiet again after the incredible hours, Massie crisscrossed Mississippi to search out the reasons why the disaster had happened, and what Mississippi's future holds. Here is his dramatic report.

From eight o'clock Sunday night, September 30, 1962, until nine o'clock the following morning, a second American Civil War was fought on the campus of the University of Mississippi and in the nearby small town of Oxford, Mississippi. Although the final outcome was never in doubt, there were moments when even the President of the United States, listening to reports of the battle over an open telephone line into a university building, wondered whether the forces he had committed would be overwhelmed. In the end, 500 United States marshals and 60 Mississippi National Guardsmen, along with bayonet-wielding U.S. military police, beat off a mob of 2,500 Mississippians, and several critical issues were settled on the spot. It was determined that the state of Mississippi could not successfully defy the Federal Government. It was also determined that 29-year-old Negro James Howard Meredith would attend the University of Mississippi.

But a number of things were not determined, and in the wake of the violence some agonizing questions still remain. How could a civilized country have allowed this situation to develop? Who was to blame? More important, what effect has this had on the people of Mississippi, and on the rest of the troubled South?

These questions were forced into the open on the evening of a day that had begun in deceptive calm. At four o'clock that golden Sunday afternoon, the students on the campus and the people of Oxford looked up to see four-motored U.S. Air Force planes circling overhead. By tuning their radios, they discovered what was happening—United States marshals were landing to prepare for the registration of James Meredith at Ole Miss. This was a shock. Three years before, Mississippi had elected a governor who had promised: "Ross Barnett will rot in jail before he will let one Negro ever darken the sacred threshold of our white schools." The governor, Barnett, had constantly repeated his promise.

Curiosity Changes Rapidly to Hate

What most Mississippians didn't know was that Ross Barnett, at noon that day, had told the President of the United States that he would order the Mississippi State Highway Patrol to stop blocking Meredith's entrance to the campus. For most Mississippians, however, this reversal came too late. Four times the previous week the state police had physically prevented the marshals from having Meredith registered. Now, the Ole Miss students saw the state troopers escorting "the Feds" on campus. By five P.M. the marshals were drawn up before the Lyceum building. In their white helmets, with their tear-gas guns cocked skyward, they became an object of a curiosity that changed rapidly to anger, and hate.

The spark that brought violence was the sudden arrival on this twilight scene of news photographers. As flashbulbs popped in the milling crowd of students, there were attacks on photographers and their equipment was smashed. Students began kicking and rocking a car occupied by television cameraman Gordon Yoder and his blond wife, who happened to be from Jackson, Mississippi. "Nigger-lovin' Yankee bitch," the boys screamed. One Ole Miss coed giggled nervously and asked her date, "Lord, Joe, what are they gonna do to that woman?" "Kill her, I guess," the boy said. "She's a nigger lover, isn't she?" Finally three state troopers hurried Mrs. Yoder away.

Students Besiege U.S. Marshals

The mob pressed forward toward the Lyceum, jeering at the marshals. Eggs and lighted cigarettes arched onto the three army trucks parked before the building. A student wrenched the fire extinguisher from the cab of one of the trucks and fired it into the face of the Negro driver. Other students slashed at the tires. A state patrolman stood by, grinning. The marshals made no move. Emboldened, the students switched to bottles and rocks. Finally, when a piece of lead pipe caught a marshal on the helmet, knocking him down, Chief U.S. Marshal James P. McShane gave the order: "Gas." "It was terrible, terrible," he said later. "I prayed we wouldn't have to use gas. But we had no other choice." Just as the first pellets came sputtering on the grass, spewing their choking fumes, President Kennedy's voice was heard over dozens of car radios parked before the Lyceum. The President announced, "The orders of the court . . . are beginning to be carried out. Mr. James Meredith is now in residence on the campus of the University of Mississippi." With an ear-splitting rebel yell, the mob picked up rocks, bricks, bottles and charged the marshals. This was the first mass assault of the night.

Among the few men who tried to talk sense to the mob that night were Rev. Duncan Gray, of St. Peter's Episcopal Church of Oxford, and Rev. Wofford Smith, the University's Episcopal chaplain. They moved through the crowd, taking bricks and rocks from temporarily sheepish students. Near midnight, Father Gray recognized ex-Maj. Gen. Edwin Walker standing by the tall Confederate statue near the foot of the Grove. Four days before, Walker had issued a radio call over a station in Shreveport, Louisiana, proclaiming, "It is time to move. Rise to a stand beside Governor Ross Barnett. Ten thousand strong from every state in the Union." Ten thousand didn't come but Walker himself did. "I compliment you on what you are doing," he shouted hoarsely to the rioters. At this point Father Gray tried to talk to Walker. Walker turned to the crowd and said, "There is an Episcopal priest here who wants you to go home. He makes me ashamed to be an Episcopalian."

The madness grew. Lights shining from the Lyceum illuminated clouds of gas and silhouetted wave after wave of attackers running behind Confederate flags. The flare of burning cars would catch a student in a full Confederate uniform. It was not James Meredith who was the target that night—it was the Yankees, the Federal Government that had conquered the South and was about to inflict James Meredith on them. "Shoot the Yankee, shoot. Give me your gun if you won't shoot," one boy implored three state patrolmen running before a gas barrage. As two other boys hurried toward the battlefield, their arms loaded with rocks, one said to his red-headed companion, "I'm with you, Red, you know I'm with you. If we can just kill one, I'll be happy." For several hours it seemed as if the mob would succeed. They battered at the marshals with a bulldozer, a fire engine, streams of water from a fire hose, shotgun blasts and rifle fire. At about 2:30, the marshals were reeling from exhaustion; 166 were injured and tear gas was running low. But already small groups of Federal troops were filtering in, and almost imperceptibly the tide of the battle began to turn.

No Grief for Those Who Died

With dawn a gentle rain began to fall. Driven from the campus, vicious remnants of the mob roamed the town, hurling bottles and rocks at Army trucks, stopping cars and demanding to know the drivers' sympathies. By noon the town square had been cleared, and General Walker was under arrest. The cleanup began.

There were two bodies. One was that of Ray Gunter, 23, a local Mississippian. The other dead man was Paul Guihard, a French reporter, who was found shot from the back at close range—there were powder burns on his shirt. Since Guihard, with his accent and red beard, was obviously a foreigner, it is not too far-fetched that he may have been challenged, and then simply marched off and executed. There was no grief at the deaths. "The real hell of all this is that all the girls are leaving," declared one boy.

Who started the riot? In Mississippi the view crystallized immediately that the marshals had caused it. "Trigger-happy marshals," Governor Barnett charged on TV, had "fired point-blank into the backs of state police" and "into groups of young people." Rev. Wofford Smith disagreed. "Those marshals were the bravest men I ever saw," he said. Thirty-eight members of the Ole Miss faculty signed a resolution protesting the attempt to blame the marshals. The marshals themselves, many of them Southerners, were astonished to find that they were being held responsible for the riot. "Those people were savages. It was war," said one marshal.

It also rapidly became accepted in Mississippi that the riot was caused by "outsiders." University provost Dr. Charles F. Mayeard blamed "men like General Walker." "I didn't see a single boy I recognized," said Sidna Brower, the girl editor of The Mississippian. "That's absurd," snorted one Ole Miss professor, when he heard the claims. "They were all students, at first. Of course, as the night went on, a lot of outsiders did come in." These were the lean men from the shacks in the hills, who began to come into town with rifles and shotguns in the trunks of their cars. Yet, paradoxically, often the same student who claimed that "outsiders" had caused the riot would say, when asked what would happen to Meredith if he were left unprotected on the campus, "We'd kill him." Many said they would do the job themselves. One said he had a friend who was saving two hand grenades.

Mayor's Calls for Help Unheeded

A sizable portion of blame must go to the gray-uniformed men of the Mississippi Highway Patrol. "Those bastards just walked off and left us," said one top official of the Department of Justice. When one group of boys began beating a photographer before the gas attack, an Oxford woman rushed over to a state trooper. "Aren't you going to stop them?" she cried. The patrolman grinned at her. "I don't see nothin', lady, do you?" Even Oxford's mayor, Richard Elliott, could not get help from the Highway Patrol. "They said they had no authority. That's why I called for the Army." On Monday morning three carloads of troopers sat passive in a filling station while a mob threw rocks and bottles at passing Army trucks. An old Negro drove up to the stoplight. An empty bottle case shattered the truck's window, and the Negro started through the light. A highway cruiser pulled in front of him, blocking his way. Desperate, the Negro escaped by backing up and speeding between the pumps of another filling station. Later in the week the state senate resolved that by "their faithful and courageous efforts to maintain peace and order, the Highway Patrol and other officers reflected credit on themselves and the state of Mississippi."

How could an entire state rally to keep one man out of a university? Why was there no serious effort by any prominent man in the state to convince Mississippians that they were embarked on a futile crusade? One answer lies in the fact that Governor Barnett and the politicians around him had created a climate of total disbelief that the United States Government would ever enforce integration in Mississippi. The governor rested his legal case against James Meredith's admission to the university on the theory that Mississippi in its supreme sovereignty could "interpose" itself between the Federal court and the university. Barnett was aware this was thin. When one of the university's lawyers told him that interposition was invalid as a legal argument, Barnett said, "Of course I know interposition is invalid. I'm bluffing. But you wait and see. I'll bluff the Justice Department into backing down."

In his bluffing game, however, Barnett needed allies. When university chancellor J. D. Williams was threatened with a citation for contempt of court, Barnett reminded him of his own promise to go to jail before seeing Ole Miss integrated and added, "I hope you'll go to jail with me. Remember that I have a lot of influence with those fellows in the state legislature. If you will stay with me in this fight, I'll see that the legislature doubles your salary." The chancellor was too shocked to answer, the governor smiled, and the matter was not raised again.

Secession Petition Is Offered

Along with his legal maneuvers, Barnett spent the weeks before the riot flooding the airwaves and the newspapers with oratorical calls to battle. As the arch segregationist Jackson Clarion-Ledger saw Barnett: "The humble plowboy from Standing Pine, fearless in his refusal to yield principle to compromise, stands assuredly today on the blazing pages of American history. . . . The next move is up to the Kennedy brothers, a pair of Washington officeholders on loan from the swimming pools of Boston to the swimming pools of the nation's capital." State Senator E. K. Colling declared, "We must win the fight, regardless of the cost in human lives. Meredith cannot be enrolled in the university as long as there are red corpuscles in the bodies of true Mississippians." Yet, when one state senator, Jack A. Pace, of McGehee, offered "a petition to the United States Congress to sever relations between the Union and the state of Mississippi," the senate was quickly adjourned. A group of Pace's colleagues hurried him off to lunch and argued him out of his resolution. "I don't know what happened to ol' Jack," said another senator. "Usually he's not that crazy."

By the weekend of the riot automobiles across the state had blossomed with Confederate flags tied to radio antennas and with stickers saying, HELP ROSS KEEP MISSISSIPPI SOVEREIGN; HELP ROSS BEAT L'IL BROTHER, and THE CASTRO BROTHERS ARE IN THE WHITE HOUSE. Mississippi's few moderates were helpless. The Delta Democrat-Times of Greenville, Mississippi, a paper made famous by Hodding Carter and now run by his son, Hodding Carter III, a former Princetonian and Marine Corps officer, did raise one of the few brave voices. In an editorial headlined SEDITION, Carter said that Barnett had come close to committing sedition and that if he actually did, the governor "should be jailed."

Ross Barnett, of course, did not singlehandedly rouse Mississippi to defy the Federal Government; the seeds of that defiance had been planted more than 100 years before. Mississippi has had more than its share of troubles, all of which have had their effect on Mississippians.

Today Mississippi is the poorest state in the Union. Its 2,100,000 people (1,200,000 white, 900,000 Negro) have an average per-capita income of $1,173. Yet before the Civil War Mississippi's wealth, based on cotton, made it one of the richest states. The War devastated Mississippi. Sherman ravaged the state on a kind of trial run for his subsequent march through Georgia. From Jackson, Sherman wrote to Gen. U. S. Grant: "We have made fine progress today in the work of destruction. Jackson will no longer be a point of danger. The land is devastated for 30 miles around." The word "Yankee" never quite shook off its connotation of "destroyer." And in the Reconstruction period that followed, with uneducated Negroes, all former slaves, in the state legislature, white Mississippians developed an abiding fear of what they call "racial submergence." Mississippi has the highest percentage of Negroes (43 percent) of any state. In some rural counties, the percentage of Negroes runs to 60 or 70 percent. To preserve their mastery in these areas and, as they claimed, to protect their white women, white men turned easily to violence. The Negroes remained submissive, and to this day, any Negro who gets "uppity" risks a beating, and if he persists, the threat of worse. By the standards of men who think this way, James Meredith is "uppity" beyond their wildest imaginings.

Race hatreds were intensified by the state's grinding poverty. White men worked hard to scratch a living from the red-clay hills that covered much of the state, but their constant reward was defeat. The only satisfactions Mississippi's poor whites had came from fire-and-brimstone evangelical religion and the grim knowledge that there were others—the Negroes—whose lot was worse.

Demagogues' Stamping Ground

In other Southern states the bitterness and prejudice that spring from poverty were partially dissipated as great cities grew up and industries moved in, bringing jobs. In 1940 Mississippi's largest town was Jackson, the capital. It had only 40,000 people. Jackson today is a city of 150,000, with no other town in the state even a third that size. With no urban bastions against racial extremism, Mississippi became the stamping ground of the demagogue. Men got themselves elected by being more pro-segregationist than their opponents.

As one white-haired Mississippi lawyer put it last month, "What the Negroes want is race mixing. Nigger men have a thing about white women. Look what happens when nigger soldiers go overseas. In the South we like niggers. The N.A.A.C.P. won't give a scrap of food to stray niggers but we do and we're glad to do it. Niggers have no morals. Half their kids are illegitimate. Now we just can't have our white children going to school with a pack of nigger kids." As for the constitutional argument, the lawyer went on, "The North has been using the Constitution against us for years. Everything they're doing now is clearly unconstitutional. But I'm not surprised. All the justices on the present Supreme Court are ignorant men."

Because most Mississippians share these views, they were outraged in 1954 by the Supreme Court's momentous decision that public schools in the United States should be desegregated. That summer a Citizens Council was organized to fight the Court decision. Most people hurried to join; others needed a little push.

"I'll tell you why I joined the Citizens Council," said one small-town businessman. "Three men came to see me and asked me to join. One was my banker, who holds the mortgage on my house. One was my lawyer. And the third was my wife's brother."

"Our Mississippi Way of Life"

The man running the Council was William J. Simmons, a tall, soft-spoken professional racist. Simmons bases his own race views on what he considers to be scientific data: "The average Negro brain has a cerebral cortex fourteen percent thinner than that of the average white brain." Simmons quickly took the offensive to purge the state from within. Council members were urged to be on the lookout for any sign that neighbors or acquaintances did not wholly support "our Mississippi way of life." The Council arranged its own weekly radio and television forums, conducted high-school essay contests on such subjects as "Why I Believe in Segregation and States' Rights," and produced a 30-minute film titled The General They Couldn't Muzzle. The general was General Walker.

In 1959 the Council went into gubernatorial politics. It backed tall, slightly stooped Ross Barnett, a 61-year-old damage-suit lawyer who had tried politics before and failed. Barnett stumped the state shouting to audiences on courthouse lawns that Negroes had "sloping foreheads" and "small brain cavities." Never, he promised, would Mississippi be integrated.

Barnett won, and the outgoing governor, a moderate named J. P. Coleman, invited the governor-elect to come in for a chat. Afterward, a dismayed Coleman reportedly told a friend that he had never met a high public official so completely uninformed of history, politics and government. With Barnett in power, the Citizens Council, a private organization, began receiving a monthly subsidy of $4,500 from the state treasury. The money was appropriated by the legislature to an official State Sovereignty Commission which simply turns the money over to the Citizens Council.

Rebel flags fluttered, but students were social rather than seething when they entrained for Jackson to see Ole Miss play a football game a few days after Meredith's enrollment. Back at the campus, the tough MP's had things well in hand.

N.A.A.C.P. Secretary Evers:
"We're not going to wait any longer for Mississippi to comply with the law."

Businessman Mounger:
"We adult leaders have failed our children. We have allowed them to be incited."

Citizens Council Chief Simmons:
"If they put Negroes in high and grammar schools, it will take millions of troops."

At present it is widely believed in Mississippi that Barnett has his eye on the U.S. Senate seat currently held by Sen. John Stennis. Some even say that Barnett staged his whole show of defiance to present himself to the voters as the martyred savior of the state. For the moment, of course, he has been successful. "Ross could have beaten Jesus before the riot," said one Oxford restaurant owner.

"Bill" Simmons is far from downhearted at the turn of events. As he looks at the governor's mansion in Jackson from an office across the street, he argues that Meredith's registration "doesn't mean that Ole Miss is integrated. It's occupied. And it took 15,000 troops to do it. If they plan to put one Negro in each of the ten white colleges in this state, it will take 150,000 troops. And if they want to go ahead and put Negroes in the high schools and grammar schools, it will take millions of troops. I don't like violence, but I am far more upset about what caused the violence than about the violence itself."

Bill Simmons is not alone among Mississippians in his readiness to continue the fight. But the shock of the battle at Oxford has had a profound effect across that state. A number of Mississippi's most prominent men have realized that if Mississippi is going to prosper economically, law and order must be maintained. And, for the first time in years, they have begun to speak up.

Even before the riot, a group of Ole Miss alumni who felt Barnett was using the university as a political football began to organize. "We tried to reach the governor," said one, "but Simmons and that crowd had him all blacked out." Seventy business leaders met anyway on the Saturday before the riot and tried to agree on a resolution asking for law and order. They failed to agree on wording. Coincidentally, that same day in Oxford a small group of professors ran into the same kind of deadlock.

The first powerful voice of reason came with dramatic timing and effect. On Monday morning, October 1, William H. Mounger, president of Jackson's Lamar Life Insurance Company, awoke at six o'clock to hear on the radio that fighting was still going on in the streets of Oxford. Mounger, a former FBI man, had a son at Ole Miss and he was deeply worried. He dressed, drove to the studios of WLBT-TV, a station owned by his insurance company, and announced that he wanted to go on the air immediately. He walked on camera at 7:40 A.M. and said, "As a citizen of Mississippi, I apologize for not having spoken out. . . . We adult leaders have failed our children. We have allowed them to be incited to the point where they themselves have caused violence and resisted the United States of America." Mounger repeatedly urged Barnett to go to Oxford and speak to the mob. Then he said bluntly what no man had said to a large audience in Mississippi for a long time. "We are a part of the United States of America, and we must obey the laws of the United States of America."

The reaction to Mounger's talk was 95 percent favorable. At eleven A.M. the following day 127 prominent Mississippians met in the Crown Room of Jackson's King Edward Hotel. There was intense argument. A few wanted to censure Barnett outright. In the end the men agreed on a compromise, damning the Supreme Court's 1954 decision but calling for obedience to the law. Afterward a smaller group met to begin building a permanent committee which would prepare Mississippi to accept peaceably the further shocks that the desegregation battle will bring.

The one thing these moderate leaders need if they are going to recapture Mississippi is time—and time is the one thing that Mississippi's aggressive Negro leadership is no longer willing to give. Mississippi Negroes, even the humblest, are aware that changes that will affect them are coming. A laborer working on the Ole Miss campus said, "Yessuh, I'se for Meredith if that'll raise my wages." Among the Negro leadership some, like Dr. E. P. Burton, a surgeon in Mound Bayou, speak amiably. "We aren't asking for integration for integration's sake, but my son wants to be a doctor, so I send him to school in New York. Don't you think that if he could get a good education in Mississippi, I'd rather have him here with me at home?"

State's Isolation Is Ending

But Medgar Evers, the husky and articulate young Mississippi Field Secretary of the N.A.A.C.P., shows no inclination to hold back now. "After eight years we're not going to wait any longer. As a matter of fact, we are going to file suit this fall to desegregate the public schools of Jackson." Evers senses, perhaps better than most whites can, the speed with which Mississippi's long isolation is ending. "Whatever the different sizes of their houses," he explains, "the Negro sharecropper and Ole Massa have the same size TV antenna. On television, Mississippi Negroes see Negro entertainers treated as equals, they see African diplomats being given ticker-tape parades. They learn that there is a different world outside Mississippi."

Of all the changes in store for Mississippi, the one with the most profound future implications has already begun—the mechanization of the state's agriculture. Today more than half Mississippi's 2,100,000 people draw a living from the earth. The cotton fields are still filled with armies of Negroes. But now the most prominent sight at almost every Delta crossroads is the farm-machinery store with its big red and yellow machines parked outside. Farms worked by machinery are more productive and require far fewer Negro field hands.

"Already eighty-five percent of the cotton in our county is machine picked," says one Delta farmer. "The only thing we use Negro field hands for is to chop weeds. But when some of these new chemical weed controls now being worked on are perfected, we just won't have any use for Negroes. We'll be farming as they do in the Midwest, with just a few skilled men to operate the machinery. The Negroes will have to go. There simply won't be any jobs for them."

Intrusions of the Space Age

In Sharkey County where this farmer lives, the Negro population has dropped 23 percent in the last decade. Thirty thousand Negroes are leaving Mississippi every year. If the exodus continues at that rate another 50 years, Mississippi's race problem will automatically vanish.

In the meantime, however, Mississippi is getting a strong tug into the mainstream of American life from the industrial development. Today nuclear submarines are built for the U.S. Navy in the Mississippi Gulf coast town of Pascagoula. In the flat Mississippi coastlands NASA has acquired a 13,300-acre tract as a test site for moon-rocket engines and plans to spend in Mississippi $200,000,000 to $400,000,000.

The giant intrusions of the space age will not replace all of the shacks with ranch houses. The new factories will not all have integrated unions. The public schools will not be immediately desegregated. But in time these things will come. It was with something like this in mind that James Meredith declared that his enrollment at Ole Miss was "more for America than for me."

Resistance to integration has not ended in Mississippi. The majority of Mississippians are not even very contrite about the wrecking of their finest university and the deaths of two men. "We are licked but not beaten," shouted one Jackson newspaper. But the Battle of Oxford did achieve two things: It shattered the dogma that the Federal Government would never demand that Mississippi obey Federal laws. And it spurred a small group of prominent Mississippians to realize that, since integration is coming, the best way they can serve Mississippi is to lead the state through the period of readjustment. In the success of their leadership lies Mississippi's hope for a calm and prosperous future. THE END

Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett, "the humble plowboy from Standing Pine." Still defiant weeks after the murderous campus riot, Barnett has declined to repudiate his actions in the Meredith case. "My conscience is clear," he said.

"How Much Hate There Is Now!"

By JOHN FAULKNER

William Faulkner's brother, a lifelong Oxford resident, tells how his town reacted.

Oxford is a small town. We occupy a square mile in the middle of Lafayette County. We call it LaFAYet. The university has the square mile to our west. Our lines adjoin, but a railroad runs between us.

Oxford is an old town. Our history goes back almost to the beginning of the white man's progress across the Western world. Four hundred and twenty-one years ago DeSoto went into winter camp just 30 miles to the east. Spanish spurs of that period have been found near Wilson's Millpond, 10 miles from our courthouse.

Our cemetery, St. Peter's, is filled with names and dates that could be taken straight from history books. There's the Jacob Thompson Circle, ringed in ancient cedars, where lies buried a boy who died of "congestive chills" on his way to the war with Mexico in 1846. Two students from the university's first class are out there, buried in Ole Miss's first Winter. The rainy season had started, and they could not be taken home because of muddy roads. That was 1848.

A boy who was wounded at Murfreesboro on the last day of 1862 was brought to Oxford and died here and was buried in St. Peter's. Lucius Quintus Cincinnatus Lamar, Interior Secretary and U.S. Supreme Court Justice, who sought to reconcile both sides after the Civil War, lies there, along with William Delay, who fought in the War of 1812. And there's my brother, whose death was noted far beyond our tiny limits.

By our university golf course is the Confederate Cemetery. About 600 men from Shiloh who died in our University Chapel, made over into a hospital, are buried in its walled enclosure. Some are our own men; some, Yankees. We know 130 of their names; the rest sleep in anonymous comradeship.

Impressive Scroll on the Square

The Lyceum, our university's centerpiece, was a convalescent ward in 1862. A century later—on the night of September 30, 1962—the riot took place before its columned front.

In our courthouse square we have a marker and on it a scroll of our dead from World War II. An MP sergeant stood there a day or two after the rioting and read the double column of names. "That's quite an impressive record," he said.

Like most small towns, we have our gossip exchanges. We meet for coffee break at our drugstores and lunch counters and discuss ourselves and the national situation and our golf scores and China and Cuba and tell our latest jokes and talk politics

Morning Meeting at Leslie's

My hangout is John Leslie's, our Walgreen store. A cross-section of the town meets there every morning—almost everyone from our side of the square, and others too. There are merchants and farmers and doctors and lawyers, our own Federal marshals, men from the Government bureaus—the Soil Conservation Service and such—folks from over to the courthouse, students and coaches and a sprinkling of professors from the university. I guess you could call these the responsible citizens of Oxford. Of the riffraff who actually engaged in the riot, Oxford supplied its few, as did the towns around, but these are not the men who meet every morning at Leslie's.

We took vocal interest in the Meredith case from the start. We argued States' Rights against Federal power and nobody ever won because everybody stuck to his own point. Then someone would say, "States' Rights? We lost that fight a hundred years ago." We would all laugh and begin getting up. It was our tag line. It meant coffee break was over, and it was time to be getting back to work.

During the week when they tried four times to enroll Meredith, we could still joke about it. One of us said, "If they are bound and determined to integrate us, they ought to let us have some say-so about who they do it with. I vote for Lenny Moore. We need a good running back to take to the Sugar Bowl with us."

Expecting a Peaceful Sunday

We watched that week while Meredith was turned away by the reading of a piece of paper, and we thought our troubles were over, that the Federal government was through and that our differences would be settled in a legal battle over constitutional law. Some of us remembered Little Rock, but that was supposed, by now, to have been a mistake. It would not happen again. True, Federal troops had been moved into Memphis, but they were just a housekeeping outfit for the marshals who surrounded Meredith. We were in the hands of our topmost political leaders, our President and our governor. They would take care of us. The welfare of the people was their principal responsibility. We had nothing to worry about. We went off to Jackson for the Kentucky-Ole Miss football game.

I talked to a reporter Sunday, after the National Guard had been federalized. "How much violence do you expect?" he asked. "Violence?" I said. "This is all maneuvering to get this thing on a courtroom floor and settle it once and for all." "What about the Guard being mobilized?" he asked. "That's campaign stuff for next election," I answered. "The President can claim he did it so the governor couldn't get his hands on the Guard and so he forestalled violence." "Then you don't think there might be violence?" the reporter asked again. "No. And neither does the President. It's a grandstand play. This is headed for court."

A few still shook their heads, but most of us went our peaceful way that Sunday—to church and to the golf course at the country club. None of us foresaw what would happen that night. We did not think it possible. We believed laws to be so constructed as to constitute a shield behind which we could go our daily ways and live at peace with our neighbors.

About an hour after dark we knew we were wrong. Cars had been streaming back from the football weekend in Jackson, but I noticed how many of them had out-of-state licenses.

Yelling began on campus. It was not much different from a pep rally except it was the wrong time for that and there were no organized cheers. The university property line runs right in front of my yard. Between the campus and my property there's a bridge. A few of us had gathered in my yard—a banker, an oil distributor, a high-school principal, a Catholic priest and myself—and now we walked up toward the bridge.

We were only about 1,000 feet from the rioting. We could see and hear it all—the yelling, the tear gas floating against the light. We couldn't believe it. The Highway Patrol was there. They were checking students in and turning away the rest. Cars were soon parked against the curbs on both sides of the street as far back as we could see. Teen-age boys, with an older man here and there, came walking fast up toward the bridge. We asked each other, "Who are these people?" They were young, but they were the kind you would hate to come on after dark. They looked like they needed a square meal and a bath. They had on tight pants with their shirttails out. There were some ducktail haircuts among them, like teen-age gangs in the movies. The Highway Patrol stopped them, but then they slipped down a side street and crossed over the railroad tracks in the dark.

We were watching when the showdown came. The marshals were pinned down with only 20 minutes' tear gas left, and the only men available to save them were the 63 men of the Oxford National Guard unit who had been back at the armory, two miles away, under orders since eight o'clock that morning. They did it. They had 23 casualties, but they broke through 200 yards of mob and got to the pinned-down marshals. They have been decorated with a combat unit citation by the Secretary of the Army for that. All of them call Oxford home.

Next day our square was closed at noon, and we were advised to stay home. One hundred and fifty rioters had been identified by then. Some of these 150 came from as far as 500 miles away. None came from Oxford.

"What Hate There Is Here Now!"

Things are quieter now, and we are back at Leslie's every morning, but we'll be arguing this for 100 years. Everybody's talking like they're infected with talk. I think most of us feel that the law of the land brought the Negro to the campus and set off the riot, so there must be something wrong with the law of the land.

It's true the Guardsmen saved our university, the very buildings on it, and the Army saved our town. But the stench of what happened here will remain with us whose home it is as long as we shall live. Two giant politicians, a President and a governor, stoked a fire on our campus that boiled a pot of tar, and the tar flowed across the railroad tracks to stain everybody in town. What tension, what hate there is here now! And then for days over the radio we listened to them plead with us before the nation to cease rioting, return to reason, come to law and order; this to us, the responsible people of Oxford, who raised no finger against any man.

Now our preachers have gotten in on the show. We have been called to our churches for penitence meetings. We are to ask forgiveness for our parts in bringing on the riots. I shan't go. If all the sin I have to answer for is my part in bringing on what happened here that Sunday and Monday, then I relinquish my place to someone more needful of forgiveness than I.

When we gather at Leslie's drugstore now, everybody is saying, "To hell with both of them, the governor and the President, who let this happen to us." And we have a new tag line: "Lord have mercy on us all." THE END

Dear Mr. Wolfson:

Under separate cover we are mailing you the items you requested.

Regarding the Klan, for your paper in Sociology, I can list some sources of materials that you can look up, and copies of a few of the more comprehensive news clips. You might write to United Klans of America, Inc., Box 10753, Atlanta 10, Ga. and request materials from them. These would give you an idea of the sort of things they publish and pass out at meetings.

In January, 1961 the ADL pamphlet mentioned above said, in an estimate of Klan strength: "in sum the total southwide Klan membership is no more than 50,000 and may be about 35,000 or somewhat less." Klan membership has widely fluctuated since 1954, and estimates are usually too high, since the Klan has a habit of going way overboard in claiming membership, habitually counting people who have long since ceased to belong (and in some cases long since ceased to be). There has been a slight increase in Klan strengh in some areas this past year, but nothing significant. In Alabama and Georgia, the two states with the largest Klan membership, KKK has held its own this year in Alabama; it has shown definite signs of increase in Georgia in 1962 up to September and October, but has very probably fallen off since the old political order has collapsed. Klan meetings in recent years have been shunned by responsible political figures and attended only by the die-hard locals and state has-beens.

We hope you will find this of help to you.

Mr. Jimmie Campbell

Richmond, 19, Va.

Dear Mr. Campbell:

Your letter to Mr. Ralph McGill has been referred to us for reply.

We do have material in our files on the Klan, but we only have one copy and we do not have any published pamphlets or materials to mail you.

From the January 1961 Anti-Defamation Leggue pamphlet, Facts, January, 1961, Vol. 14, No. 1, "The Ku Klux Klans," in an estimate of Klan strength: "in sum the total southwide Klan membership is no more than 50,000 and may be about 35,000 or womewhat less." Because so much of the Klan literature is anti-semitic, the Anti-Defamation League has kept up with actitivities of the Klan for some years. We try not to duplicate the research and programs of other agencies, but work in other areas and use the information they have gathered. We can tell you, however, from scanning all materials and news clips we have, that Klan membership has widely fluctuated since 1954, and estimates are ususally too high, since the Klan has a habit of going overboard in claiming membership, habitually counting people who have long since ceased to belong (and in some cases long since ceased to be). There has been a slight increase in Klan strength in some areas this past year, but nothing significant. In Alabama, and in parts of Georgia, the two states with the largest Klan membership, KKK held its own in Alabama in 1962-1963; showed definite signs of increase in Georgia up to the fall of 1962 but has very probably fallen off since the old political order in Georgia collapsed. Klan meetings in recent years have been shunned by responsible political figures and (noticiably in Georgia) have been attended only by the die-hard locals and state has-beens. In Mississippi the Citizens Councils are strong and the Klan is not very active. There were some cross-burnings during the past year, notably on the lawns of the parsonages of the 28 young ministers who signed the "Born of Conviction" statement in January, 1963.

If you need more information than this for your book review, you could look up the following in your library:

KKK Here Pickets Integrated Places

Atl. J&C 1/12/64

Desegr. Orgs. KKK

By PAUL VALENTINE

Ku Klux Klansmen, many of them robed and carrying signs, picketed a number of desegregated restaurants and hotels in Atlanta Saturday afternoon.

The Klansmen's appearance—their first overt activity in Atlanta in several months—will continue "indefinitely" on a daily basis, declared Calvin Craig, Georgia grand dragon of the United Klans of America, Incorporated.

The Klan action started as the Atlanta Summit Leadership Conference was meeting at Allen Temple AME to determine whether the city's Negroes should continue negotiations for their demands or start full-scale demonstrations.

MR. CRAIG, dressed in a business suit, toured the various locations where Klansmen picketed during the afternoon. The pickets passed out handbills saying: "White customers — warning—this store is integrated." They also carried various signs telling passersby that the owners of the picketed establishments are "integration leaders."

Picketed were Davis Bros. restaurants on Luckie Street and at Marietta and Forsyth streets, the Americana Motel, the Biltmore Hotel and Herren's Restaurant.

The number of pickets ranged from three to six at each location. Police patroled the areas.

MR. CRAIG explained the picketing "is to protest the breakdown of law and order in Atlanta and the advocation of it by the city administra-

He said police "have refused arrest" recent waves of uthful Negro demonstrators o have sat-in at various segated eating establishments the city.

"It's dangerous for white people to come into Atlanta at night," the Grand Dragon observed. He said there have been reports of white persons injured in establishments where Negroes demonstrated.

He said Mayor Ivan Allen's plea for voluntary desegregation and his support of a national public accommodations law leaves Atlanta businessmen with "two alternatives: either you accept it, or you go out of business."

HE WARNED: "This public accommodations thing is going to be in the streets and out of the hands of the lawmakers before the next inauguration. I believe it will lead to violence."

In fact, he said, "We've already had violence." He was referring to reports of injured white persons at segregated eating places recently visited by Negro demonstrators.

Starting Monday, he said, Klansmen will picket all integrated public accommodations in the city. "We plan to hit the hotels at night," he said. The list of targets also includes The Atlanta - Journal - Constitution building, he said.

A spokesman said the KKK expects "moral support" from "other organizations" in the city during the current picketing activity. "You bet we will," he said, "just ask Jack Callaway (president of the Atlanta Citizens Council)."

Mr. Callaway, contacted by telephone, said, "As far as moral support is concerned, they (the Klan) have our belief . . . We don't like white people to integrate any where, any way. We don't believe in it, just as you could say the other crowd doesn't."

He said he knew of no present plan by the Citizens Council to join the picketing Klansmen. "I can't make that decision," he said. "It would be up to the national board (of directors)."

KLAN PARK RALLY APPROVED BY CITY

The City of Atlanta, after deferring the decision for more than a month, has acknowledged the Ku Klux Klan's right to use a public park for a rally without first revealing its membership.

The aldermanic Parks Committee, responding to advice by the city attorney, voted Tuesday to grant a request by the Klan to use Hurt Park as long as the date the Klan chooses does not conflict with other activities there.

Mayor Allen, in earlier correspondence with Georgia Klan Grand Dragon Calvin Craig, said he would recommend the Parks Committee deny the permit request unless the Klan revealed its membership and clarified its relationship to other Klan groups on the U.S. attorney general's subversive list.

Craig retorted that the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled private organizations are not required to disclose membership. He also forwarded the mayor a letter from U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman James O. Eastland indicating Craig's group—called United Klans of America, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan—is not on the attorney general's list. Even if it were, Craig told the mayor, the courts have ruled it as irrelevent to the right to use a public park.

LAST WEEK, the Georgia branch of the American Civil Liberties Union leaped to the Klan's defense and sent a critical statement to Mayor Allen. Shortly thereafter, Mayor Allen announced he would refer the matter to the city attorney's office for a determination.

The office ruled in agreement with Craig, the ACLU and the Supreme Court.

Craig has since requested the Parks Committee for use of Hurt Park on March 22 at 2 p.m. In his letter of request, dated Feb. 10, he invited Mayor Allen to be the "principal speaker" at the Klan rally.

"I feel, sir," the Craig letter said, "that you have the right of freedom of speech and the right of peaceable assembly. Your acceptance to be a principal speaker at this meeting will prove to the people all over America that you are a man of broad vision and wise judgment."

On the night prior to the rally, the Klan has scheduled a state convention banquet at the Henry Grady Hotel at which speakers from both Georgia and other states will appear, Craig said. He said the convention relates to Klan business and election or re-election of the state grand dragon.

Klan to Organize Its Own Towns As Havens From Desegregation

Racis. - KKK

By JOHN HERBERS

Special to The New York Times 3/23/64

ATLANTA, March 22—The Knights of the Ku Klux Klan are planning to move—hood, [illegible]—into private Caucasian communities to escape racial integration.

Klansmen, according to the plan, will live with their families in Klan-built houses and have their own schools, churches and parks while continuing to earn their living in the outside world.

This plan is one of several innovations intended by the leaders of the United Klans of America, Inc., the largest of the Klan groups scattered across the South, to give the racist fraternity unity, money and respectability.

The Klan, which has all but died at several periods, recently has had a new spurt of growth, particularly in such areas as North Carolina and Mississippi, where it was almost nonexistent several years ago.

In the process it has been trying to shed the stigma of its reputation as a gathering of uneducated ruffians with violence on their minds.

At recent Klan meetings, for instance, members have been turned away because they had alcohol on their breath, or because they failed to wear a tie and jacket.

"The Klan has gone Ivy League, in its fashion," one observer said. "It has gotten to be a sort of poor man's John Birch Society, while holding on to its radical racism, symbols and costumes that strike terror in the superstitious and uneducated."

In some areas the Klan has become competition for the white Citizens Councils, the nonsectarian organizations that seek the support of the influential members of a community.

The leading Klansman today is Robert M. Shelton, 35-year-old Imperial Wizard of the United Klans of America.

Mr. Shelton is in the air-conditioning business in Tuscaloosa, Ala. He spends most of his time, however, looking after his multitude of klaverns, or local Klan chapters, which, he says, extend from California to Canada.

Unifying Splinter Groups

Mr. Shelton has had unusual success in bringing together the fragmented Klan groups. His modestly furnished Imperial office is on the fourth floor of a Tuscaloosa office building. Unlike the old-fashioned Klan leader, Mr. Shelton readily submits to interviews, talking at length about the "Communist conspiracy" he says is threatening the nation.

Mr. Shelton confirmed reports that the leaders of his organization, the Grand Dragons and the Titans (heads of states and provinces), were planning to build Caucasian communities under private corporations that would not be subject to Federal integration orders.

He said a pilot project was to be established in the Birmingham-Tuscaloosa area on a plot of land to be purchased outside an unnamed municipality. He declined to disclose further details.

"We feel like this is the only way to get away from the Federal Government," Mr. Shelton said.

He was also asked about reports that an insurance company would be established within the Klan organization, with klansmen as full-time salesmen, to give the organization a broader financial base.

"That's something that's been planned for next year," he said.

Except for his service in the Air Force, Mr. Shelton, a slight man with a crew cut, has spent his whole life in Tuscaloosa. He has a high school education, is married and has three children.

Both his grandfather and father were klansmen. He has the bearing of a man with many worries, and seems to be humorless.

Mr. Shelton came to Atlanta today as a klokard (lecturer) at a Klan rally held in a small downtown park.

While numerous kleagles (organizers), klexters (outer guards) and cyclops (head of a klavern) wore hoods ranging from white sheets to red satin, Mr. Shelton wore an expensive gray suit and red tie.

Loudspeakers blared revival hymns, American and Confederate flags draped the speaker's platform and hooded women — members of Klan auxiliaries — roamed through the crowd of several hundred.

A kludd (chaplain) from a small Georgia town prayed that the Almighty "see how we are losing our freedoms" and "bless all klansmen everywhere."

Gets Little Applause

There was little applause as other than the Klan, are active in northern and western states, he said.

"You would be surprised at how much strength we have in California," he said.

The organization's literature is strongly anti-Semitic and anti-Catholic, as well as anti-Negro.

Many other smaller Klan organizations exist, and it is often impossible to tell which organization is involved when there is violence.

Mr. Shelton said his group preached nonviolence, but this was not given much emphasis at meetings.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation recently arrested five Klan members on charges of bombing a Negro home in Jacksonville, Fla.

Racist literature was dropped by airplane in the same area by "the white Knights of Ku Klux Klan of Mississippi."

In North Carolina, the Klan has been dormant for several years. But, as of Jan. 25 of this year, reliable sources said there were chartered Klaverns operating in that state with an over-all membership of 650.

Mr. Shelton said his group neither cooperated with nor opposed other right-wing organizations.

The Klan, organized after the Civil War to restore white rule in the South, enjoyed its greatest strength during the Communist scare of the Nineteen-twenties. It has never been strong since then, and is still opposed by most Southerners.

members of Klan auxiliaries — roamed through the crowd of several hundred.

A kludd (chaplain) from a small Georgia town prayed that the Almighty "see how we are losing our freedoms" and "bless all klansmen everywhere."

Gets Little Applause

There was little applause as Mr. Shelton attacked the civil rights bill pending in Congress and told his audience that Communists were behind the integration movement in the South.

Two Negroes were in the audience. They identified themselves as members of the Black Muslums who had come as observers.

The rally seemed rather dun and out of place in Atlanta. More enthusiasm was generated at a small-town Klan meeting a few nights ago outside Tuskeegee, Ala. Negro voters there outnumber whites and are running for office in the Macon County elections.

Driving late-model automobiles, most of them dressed in business suits, the klansmen gathered at an abandoned airport and set up lights and a loudspeaker.

Sponsors of the meeting had planned to stage a cross burning, but before Mr. Shelton's speech was finished there was a cloudburst.

The audience retreated to automobiles, continued to listen to the speech and honked their horns for applause.

In an interview in his office, Mr. Shelton said that, although the Klan was primarily a fraternal organization of Caucasian Christians, it had become active in politics to carry out a policy of "self-preservation without violence."

He said klaverns, provinces and realms of the Klan screened political candidates and decided on a slate to support. Klan support, he said, gave the last two Governors of Alabama, Mr. Wallace and John Patterson, the margin of victory. Neither Governor disclaimed Klan support.

Mr. Shelton would not disclose Klan membership or the specific areas where the organization was active. He said it was strong in Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, Tennessee and Louisiana.

Klan Using Mails For Call to Arm

4-10-64

By JOHN PENNINGTON

A small Atlanta Ku Klux Klan group, operating under one of four different names, is using the mails to disseminate a document urging citizens to arm themselves for war against "black riots" and "our traitor government."

The same group, all headed by Atlanta attorney James R. Venable, is pursuing the same anti-Negro, anti-Jew, anti-government goal under the following names:

—The National Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc.

—Defensive Legion of Registered Americans.

—Committee of One Million Caucasians to March on Congress.

—Christian Voters & Buyers League.

THE KKK group says in mailed pamphlets that it "is determined to become once again the dominant political force in our glorious country."

The "defensive legion," whose slogan is "We're taking back our country," urges "patriots" to buy rifles, shotguns, pistols, walkie-talkies, food supplies for "war." It says "the people . . . are the government," and urges defiance against "tyrannical government."

The "committee of one million" seeks contributions for a big march on the nation's capitol, 40 per cent of which would go to the committee for its costs, and cites a "list of demands" to be made on Congress. Several of the demands coincide exactly with printed "demands" of the KKK group.

THE "VOTERS and buyers league" is an agency for selling records narrated by Wally Butterworth, who is associated with Mr. Venable. The records discuss Negroes, Jews, federal judges, mental health, the Kennedys — subjects relating primarily to racial matters.

The document of the "defensive legion" urging citizens to arm themselves in preparation for bloodshed covers six legal-size pages.

". . . Blood will surely flow in the streets," the document says. "Let it flow! Let us arm our homes to make sure that Negro-Jew blood flows—not ours."

It goes into the nature of race riots: "There are no battle lines. Defense shooting will be at close range. . . ."

IT RECOMMENDS shotguns 12 gauge, with "00 Double Ought" pellets, for close range shooting, and some high-powered rifles with telescope sights "for distance shooting."

The paper urges "patriots" to set up a budget, taking money from each paycheck, for arming themselves. "When the trouble starts," it says, "and it will because the blacks are already armed, then you can depend on our traitor government trying to padlock the gun stores. Get your supplies NOW. . . ."

A "vast stock" of ammunition is recommended, and the author of the document urges the acquisition of .22 caliber weapons for "women and teen-age kids," with hollow-nosed bullets that "go clear through your game, either two-legged or four."

WALKIE-TALKIES are urged because "telephones will be put out of order by rioters . . . or by subversives . . . in the 'phone company monopolies,' or by the government itself."

The document urges rebellion against "any police agency" attempting "to restrict use of arms. . . ."

"Use it (the weapon) on them to protect your basic freedom," the document urges. "If every good citizen is fully armed, no tyrannical government will be big enough to disarm you."

The call to arm has been sent through the mails, along with advertisement of records and KKK pamphlets.

According to Title 18 of the U.S. Code, it is against the law to use the mail for "any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States. . . ."

THE LEADERS of the group urging an arming of "patriots" are also the leaders of the group attempting to organize a march of "Caucasians" on Washington.

The slogan of the "march" committee is the same as that of the "defensive legion"; "We're taking back our country."

TV Newsman Beaten During Klan Filming

JACKSON, La., April 20 (UPI) — A television newsman was beaten and his life threatened by a group of armed men Sunday as he tried to film a backwoods meeting for a documentary about the Ku Klux Klan.

Bob Wagner, capital correspondent for WDSU radio and television of New Orleans, was seized near a farm house about a mile east of Jackson as he and Robert Schaefer of United Press International were scouting the meeting.

Wagner has been conducting an investigation of Klan activities for several months and is preparing a documentary program on the Klan in Louisiana.

He said he would not press charges against the men who beat him. He was warned that if he told anyone of the beating, he would be killed "within 24 hours."

Schaefer said he counted about 30 armed men when he and Wagner drove past the farm house, on a gravel road in a heavily wooded rural area.

Schaefer said Wagner wanted to take movies of about 15 armed guards at the farmhouse gate and posted along a fence. He drove the car on the return trip, while Wagner sat in the back heat and filmed the men.

WAGNER was dissatisfied with the footage he had shot, Schaefer said. They stopped about a mile from the farmhouse and Wagner tried to walk near the house to take more movies.

In a grove of trees, one of the men stuck an automatic pistil in Wagner's back and ordered him to kneel. Then, Wagner said, the man placed the pistol between his eyes and said:

"You've reported your last story."

BUT INSTEAD of shooting, he called the other men over.

Wagner's camera was confiscated. Then he was forced to run across a pasture to a parking area, where he was beaten with a leather strap. He said several men took turns beating him.

He was forced into a cage normally used to transport hunting dogs and mounted in the back of a pickup truck, taken to the farmhouse and beaten again.

Wagner said some of the younger men were in favor of killing him, but older heads voted to turn him loose with a warning.

Eyes on the Klan

The White Militants, Too, Worry Mississippi; New Legal Weapons

JACKSON, MISS.

Harried Mississippi officialdom, braced for the promised summer "invasion" by civil-rights demonstrators, now finds its rear echelons threatened by mushrooming white supremacist groups. Two recent legislative actions point up the immediacy of the threat.

On May 11, the Mississippi Senate passed a bill to outlaw "criminal syndicalism." Legislative sources said the bill could be used to suppress groups of militant white supremacists who advocate violence. To be sure, the measure could be used against racial extremists on either side.

Under the bill, which is awaiting House action, "criminal syndicalism" was defined as "the doctrine or precept which advocates, teaches, or aids and abets the commission of crime, sabotage, unlawful acts of violence and force, arson, or other unlawful acts or methods of terrorism as a means of . . . effecting any political or social change or for profit."

Then, on May 13, the Legislature completed passage of a bill giving the state highway patrol full police powers, if the governor so orders, and adding 200 men. At present, the patrol has no jurisdiction in towns and cities, but has authority only in state-owned domain. Its principal function is state traffic patrol.

But should the governor decide that local authorities are not meeting their obligations to keep the public peace, the new bill would empower him to order the highway patrol into the area. The state component of the National Guard normally is used by a governor in these instances, but the guard always stands the chance of being Federalized, leaving the governor without troops of his own. One legislator said the bill was aimed more at control of white supremacist groups than at suppressing civil-rights workers.

Behind all the official concern are two main groups—the Ku Klux Klan (KKK) and the Americans for the Preservation of the White Race, Inc. The Klan says it has more than 96,000 members and the preservationists claim more than 30,000.

Watchdog Agency's Warning

On the night of May 16, the KKK held an announced rally at a fairgrounds near McComb in southwest Mississippi. The week of the rally, Erle Johnston, Jr., director of the State Sovereignty Commission, Mississippi's watchdoog segregation agency, issued a warning. In a speech to a Canton, Miss., civic club, Mr. Johnston admonished Mississippians against joining any secret organization that "could get out of hand under emotional leadership."

The comment was significant coming from Mr. Johnston, whose agency was created by the Legislature more than a year ago to preserve Mississippi's segregationist tradition by keeping an eye on groups who hope to undermine it. The agency was provided with a budget and a staff; some of the money has been contributed to groups in Washington that are fighting the civil-rights bill.

Mr. Johnston did not mention any group by name, but said, "If you are approached by a representative from any of these new undercover groups disassociated with any law enforcement agency. . . . politely decline and reaffirm your determination to co-operate with those legally constituted to enforce the law."

The same day, Gov. Paul Johnson, who hasn't held a press conference in five weeks, granted an exclusive interview to the McComb newspaper. In the interview Governor Johnson said, "We will counsel no insubordination whether by white, Negro, or Chinese. We will not tolerate anyone taking the law into his own hand." He added, "This policy is founded in law and order in the preservation of peace, and in avoiding violence in our state. . . . It applies to everyone (including) . . my own brother."

In a paid advertisement, the Klan had predicted 15,000 to 20,000 members would turn up at the Pike County Fairgrounds to hear Imperial Wizard Robert M. Shelton of Tuscaloosa, Ala. Actual attendance was estimated at 1,000 for the rally, which sported none of the usual Klan trappings of hoods, robes, and burning crosses. One leader noted during the rally that a number of law enforcement officers were members of the Klan.

The Friday Night Burnings

For the past six months, cross burnings attributed to the Klan have taken place across the state, becoming almost a regular Friday night affair. The most concentrated effort came three weeks ago when crosses were burned in a reported 64 counties. U.S. Sen. John C. Stennis, Mississippi Democrat, speaking in Cleveland, Miss., condemned the cross burnings and noted that such actions were hindering the efforts of Southern leaders in their fight against the civil-rights bill in the U.S. Senate.

Headquartered in Natchez, in southwest Missisipppi, the Americans for the Preservation of the White Race, Inc. has branched out with about 15 chapters as far north as Hinds County in central Mississippi and two others in nearby Louisiana parishes (counties). A number of Klan members are also reportedly members of this group. Chartered by the state, the group sponsors weekly meetings open to the public in many areas. It is dedicated to "keeping the white man white, and the black man black, like God intended."

In addition to the Klan and the preservationists, some vigilante groups of whites have been organizing secretly in many sections of the state. Several reported racial incidents have been attributed to the white supremacist groups, which deny any involvement. Both Klan and preservationist leaders have stated publicly that their groups do not advocate violence.

Before the resurgence of the Klan and the vigilante groups, the Citizens Council was the unofficial guardian of segregation in the state. The council is officially opposed to both the Klan's return and the establishment of more radical organizations.

The plea of Governor Johnson and Sovereignty Commission Director Johnston to let law officers enforce the law so far goes unheeded, and secret meetings are still being held in deserted fields and abandoned buildings over the state.

Dear Miss Christman:

A book by James Graham Cook, The Segregationists, has a chapter on the Ku Klux Klan. It was published by Appleton, Century, Crofts.

The best source of material on the Klan would be the Klan, and they are always happy to send material to anyone who writes them. Write to United Klans of America, Inc., P. O. Box 10753, Atlanta, Ga.

For fairly recent articles on the Klan, see the following:

Dear Miss Christman:

We do not have regular mailing material on the Ku Klux Klan, but I am sending a column Mr. McGill did last Friday which you might find helpful, and I would also suggest that you refer to his book, "The South and The Southerner", which probably is in your local library. In order that you may have additional material, I am forwarding your letter to the Southern Regional Council, a research organization, and they more than likely will have some material that will help you.

Sincerely,

Secretary
To Mr. McGill

P. S. Mr. McGill will be sorry he was out of town and unable to answer your letter personally.

Dear Mr. Mc Gee.

Can you please send me information or refer me to sources which have information on the founding and history to present day on the Ku Klux Klan.

I would like this information for a term paper in my history class. Our local library has very little information.

Thank you,

Klan Barred from July 4 Parade; Request Too Late, Sponsors Say

The Ku Klux Klan can't be in Atlanta's Fourth of July parade because their request was made too late, the parade's sponsors said Tuesday.

"Actually, a request has not been made directly to us," said a spokesman for WSB-TV, which sponsors the parade. "All we have is the letter which was sent to the mayor."

Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. received a letter from Calvin Craig, grand dragon of the Georgia Klan, asking permission for the KKK to have a 48-man marching unit and two color guards in the parade.

Allen's office referred the letter to WSB-TV, where a spokesman said that the deadline for entries in the parade was May 1. The deadline was established "months ago" in planning the parade, the spokesman said.

Fragmented Klans Getting Together Under Leaders Bent to Violence

7/5/64 WP Resistance Org. KKK

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

FEDERAL and state officials are becoming increasingly concerned over the resurgence of the Ku Klux Klan in the South.

In the past, the Klans were fragmented groups competing against one another. Occasional outrages committed by individual Klansmen were generally decried by Klan leaders. The order's hooded appearances at ritualistic rallies were almost comic.

But today, there is nothing funny about the Klans. They are still generally fragmented, but there is evidence of increasing cooperation, growth and seizure of power by violent leaders.

There are even more ominous signs. The Klans are more bellicose; many Klansmen are heavily armed. Their leaders have directed engagements against civil rights demonstrators with walkie-talkies and two-way car radios.

"For the first time," said a Southerner with long experience in the racial field, "there is a real feeling that the Klan is becoming a terrorist movement."

Newspaper Threatened

THIS ARTICLE on the status of the Klans was prepared from research by this reporter and on-the-scene reports from George Lardner Jr. and William Chapman, reporters for The Washington Post, and Robert Wagner, a Baton Rouge newsman who was flogged by Klansmen during his investigation.

From Mississippi, where he has been covering the disappearance of the three civil rights workers, Chapman reports floggings, bombings and cross-burnings in Pike County against Negroes associated with civil rights groups and whites who have urged moderation.

One of many crosses was burned in front of the McComb Enterprise-Journal, a moderate daily newspaper which had reported bombings and cross-burnings. On June 27, a bottle containing the following message was thrown on the lawn of Managing Editor Charles Dunagin: "Keep anticivil rights action off the front page or move. Work with us or against us and take the hard way. Take heed. KKK."

The Enterprise-Journal put the story of the message on page one.

Chapman interviewed J. Emmett Thornhill, 55-year-old multimillionaire who is Mississippi spokesman for the United Knights of the Ku Klux Klan.

"He is an uneducated man who never passed the third grade but made millions from oil and gas leases bought up during the war years," Chapman wrote.

"Thornhill claims that he quit the local Klan a week ago because hoodlums have resorted to terrorism and he cannot find out who they are. 'That's not the purpose of the Klan at all,' Thornhill said. 'There's not a man in Mississippi who helps the colored people more than I do. If they want money to pay hospital bills, I give it to them. I never get it back.'

"Despite threats, McComb's respectable leaders are generally willing to oppose the Klan in some ways. The McComb Rotary Club recently refused to let Thornhill's KKK use the club's baseball field for a Klan rally."

Chapman reports that the more activist members of White Citizens Councils have dropped out of those groups to form Klans. In some counties, he says, it is believed that law officers either turn their backs or cooperate with local Klans.

From St. Augustine, Lardner reports that "Florida's Klansmen are currently agreed on only one thing: They hate 'niggers, Jews and the Federal Bureau of Integration.'

"Since the Klan built up its membership last year in organizing rallies that went on night after night, there has been dissension. The FBI says the dissension is over who's going to be the leader—the moderate or the violent."

The moderates, explains Lardner, are those who just hate Negroes; the violent ones want to lash out with bombs, arson and guns.

Dragon Overridden

THE UNITED KLAN of Florida is headed by Jason Kersey, about 61, of New Smyrna Beach, a wealthy retired dairyman. Kersey is ill and could not talk to Lardner.

James Crews, former head of the Jacksonville Police Intelligence Division, told Lardner that Grand Dragon Kersey is said to want nothing to do with violence, but violence has been going on in St. Johns County and adjacent Duval County for a year.

Last week, Klansmen were being tried in Jacksonville on charges of conspiracy in connection with the bombing of the home of a 6-year-old Negro boy

Report on the Klan—1964

EDITOR'S NOTE: Robert Wagner, state Capitol reporter for television station WDSU-TV at New Orleans, was assigned several months ago to gather material on the reactivation of the Ku Klux Klan. During his investigation, he was captured, beaten and warned to keep silent. Here is his story.

By ROBERT WAGNER

BATON ROUGE, La. July 18 (AP)—The Klan guard saw me, and told me to walk toward him with my hands behind my head. He had me kneel in the grass, in front of him. He was perspiring. His right hand, holding an automatic, was shaking.

His eyes had a queer glitter. I watched his eyes, and the black bore of the gun—wobbling up and down, and side to side. I wondered if it would go off. Everything seemed incredibly melodramatic.

When caught, I had been trying to get pictures of a barn-like building, 30 miles from Baton Rouge. It was a Sunday afternoon, April 19. The Ku Klux Klan was holding a strategy meeting in the building.

It was difficult to believe anyone would really want to shoot me on such a pleasant afternoon. After all, I'd only tried to get some pictures. Still, he said they would kill me.

And that queer glint in his eyes suggested it was not entirely bluff.

IN THE END I was released after a flogging, a brief imprisonment in a dog kennel, and a solemn warning that they would kill me if I reported what had happened.

This particular meeting was a "secret" business session. No robes or hoods were worn. They are normally used for public rallies, ceremonial purposes, and cross-burnings.

The place had the appearance of a guerrilla camp. Everybody I saw had a gun. Some carried a shotgun in their hands, and had, additionally, a revolver strapped around their waist. Everybody seemed to be prepared for a war.

Exactly what is this secretive organization?

A PUBLICATION called "The People's Voice," put out at Monroe, La., by the "Knights of the Old Original Ku Klux Klan," outlines the Klan "creed," in part, as follows:

"In time of war, many who are innocent must suffer, as you and I have already suffered. If you don't think this is war, you are very wrong . . . and the best tool the Communist can ever have."

Another Klan publication, this one published by the "Original Ku Klux Klan of Louisiana," declares, "The people whom we have elected to run the affairs of this country are either very stupid, or have joined a conspiracy to sell us out . . ."

The Klan movement does have features that suggest an underground movement against the nation's established authority.

Perhaps it's more than a coincidence that the reactivation of the Klan has been accompanied by a wave of beatings, bombings and intimidations.

IT'S DIFFICULT to generalize about the Ku Klux Klan, because there are so many Klan organizations, each with its own policies, each with its own imperial wizard.

Most Klan organizations are anti-Jewish and anti-Catholic, as well as anti-Negro in the sense that they preach the Jewish and Catholic religions are allied with Negroes in a gigantic conspiracy against white Protestant Gentiles.

The Klan has its greatest influence in small cities and towns, and rural areas, usually in areas that have a high percentage of Negroes.

Essentially, it's a reaction against the civil rights movement, a reaction based upon anger, fear, frustration, and a conviction that only harsh methods will stem the tide.

Potential critics are often silenced through boycott, or threats. A typical tactic is to burn a cross in front of the home of a potential critic, as a warning.

A BASIC PART of the Klan strategy is to infiltrate the sheriff's office and the police force; also, to elect to office public officials who are either Klan members, or are sympathetic to the Klan.

In Louisiana, Klan groups are often armed to the teeth everytime they hold a meeting, evidence that they take their role seriously.

The Ku Klux Klan has traditionally been its own worst enemy. It has always had a peculiar attraction for hoodlums and sadists.

Klansmen often say that the Ku Klux Klan had its most glorious moments during the Reconstruction era. The first imperial wizard of the Klan was Gen. Nathan Bedford Forrest, a Confederate cavalry hero.

But nowhere in Klan publications is there any reference to the fact that Gen. Forrest in 1869, about two years after he became the first wizard, found it necessary to denounce the lawless element in the Klan, and ordered the Klan to disband. It was, in fact, wiped out after a few years.

It had degenerated into a terrorist movement, a terror not only to Negroes and carpetbaggers, but to native-born Southerners.

But the Klan lived in legend and myth.

ON THANKSGIVING night, 1915, William Joseph Simmons and 16 followers resurrected the Klan on top of Stone Mountain, near Atlanta. They burned a cross, and took an oath of allegiance to "The Invisible Empire of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan."

Simmons—born at Harpersville, Ala.—later made a deal with Edward Clarke, an experienced Atlanta promoter, to handle Klan promotion. Clarke was made "imperial kleagle," in charge of recruiting.

Clarke took advantage of the anti-Catholic, anti-Jewish, anti-foreign mood of the times to convert the Klan into a movement that was not only influential on a national scale, but also profitable.

The Klan flourished in the early 1920's. But decay set in. Some of the Klan leaders became enormously wealthy from the dues they collected.

Simmons, the imperial wizard, and Clarke, imperial kleagle, were eased aside by Klan reformers. But it was too late. The Klan was already on the decline.

THE KLAN flirted for a time with the German-American Bund in the early stages of World War II, but virtually went out of business after Pearl Harbor.

It revived after the war, especially after the Supreme Court's 1954 school desegregation decision; not as a single, monolithic organization, but as a host of splinter groups, competing with one another.

The Ku Klux Klan has been on the attorney general's list of subversive organizations for years, and is under constant surveillance by the FBI.

James Venable, imperial wizard of National Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, declares, "The Ku Klux Klan is determined to become once again the dominant political force in our glorious country.

"We are taking back our country — politically, legally, socially and economically and religiously and financially. All who don't like it . . . get out."

The Imperial Wizard Explains the Klan

By MARGARET LONG

A RESURGENT Ku Klux Klan rides this summer across the South. This revived Klan wears a motley garb—well-tailored suits and bow ties; the satin robes of Wizards and Cyclops (and the familiar bedsheets of lesser Knights); the threadbare work clothes of poor whites hollering "Kill the niggers!" And it has a new voice, warning of Communist conspiracy to mongrelize the white South, disclaiming hatred of Negroes, predicting "racial war" and planning a segregated "all-Caucasian community" in Alabama to escape integration.

There are about a dozen Klans, according to a count made by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. They range from the United Klans of America, Knights of the Ku Klux Klans, Inc., with its Imperial Wizard Robert Shelton of Tuscaloosa, and its publicly mild, new "image" of tolerance and preaching, to the violently excitable new Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, led by Gene Fallow of Jacksonville, sometimes called the North Florida Klan.

The A.D.L. estimates total Klan membership as between 48,000 and 65,000. (Klansmen do not disclose initiation fees and dues, but the A.D.L. figures it's a big and fancy business.) Klans or "Klan mentality" are obviously a force in Alabama politics, as they are in Mississippi (some Klan leaders maintain there are 100,000 members there), where the locally respectable White Citizens Councils now appear too "moderate" for activists against Negroes. According to the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, more than 180 cross-burnings, six killings, several shootings and many beatings of Negroes have taken place in Mississippi since the organization there of a Realm of the Invisible Empire late last year. Now the A.D.L. fears a spontaneous and emotional move into Mississippi this summer by Klansmen rallying violently from other states to combat the non-violent education program of civil rights groups.

THE most striking aspect of the "new" Klan is its incorporation of ideas and phrases from the Negro movement. Imperial Wizard Shelton, at his headquarters in Tuscaloosa, speaks softly and fluently of "nonviolence," "massive rallies," "economic boycotts" and "voter registration to get these politicians out of office." His new Klan plan for "Caucasian communities" on a "reservation" somewhere in Alabama has an interesting precedent in the Black Muslim proposal to evacuate whites from several Southern states to make room for a segregated black state.

The three-room suite of the United Klans, in an old downtown office building, is quietly furnished with old desks, modern chairs, sofa and draperies, photographs of Gov. George Wallace—and with Mrs. Shelton, a smiling young woman with dark eyes in a friendly face, who works all day with "Bobby." Mr. Shelton's purple satin robe with many-colored stripes and insignia hangs in a plastic garment bag next to a Confederate flag beside his desk. An American flag stands on the other side. A red-trimmed, white-satin robe—presumably that of an Exalted Cyclops—hangs on another wall.

Mr. Shelton is a slight, but broad-shouldered, man of 35, with a long, beautifully cut face, light blue eyes and a soft voice. His expression is melancholy and he occasionally emphasizes his speech with a grieved frown of his fair eyebrows.

He is a native of Tuscaloosa, where his grandfather was a farmer and storekeeper and his father is now "a retired merchant." It has been said that they were both Klansmen. Mr. Shelton denied the story.

"That may have gotten started from my belief that a person is born a Klansman," he said. "To a degree, it is a religion, a faith, a belief. A man may subscribe to its principles and live under it, and, in the heritage and background of the Klan—the only organization by and for Americans—sentimentally. In this way we are all members."

He graduated from high school, took some correspondence college courses and worked at a local rubber company, first in the plant and then as a salesman, and later sold automobile air-conditioning. (A friend of his said: "Bobby gave up a $10,000-a-year job; he lost it for his work with the Klan. No one has given up more than they have, and I don't see how they make it. He wants nothing for himself.")

HE served three years in the Army, in Berlin during the airlift and at the time of desegregation in the armed services—"a great educational opportunity."

The Klan, Shelton said, "is my entire dedication." He has no time for sports, hobbies or other pleasures except occasional visits from Klan friends at home, and his exercise is "running all over the country." (Continued on Page 25)

MARGARET LONG, Atlanta author and editor (of the Southern Regional Council's magazine, New South), won the Florina Lasker Civil Liberties Award in 1961.

FIERY SYMBOL—A 50-foot cross blazes at a rally of today's resurgent Ku Klux Klan, held near Tuscaloosa, Ala.

The Sheltons have two daughters and a son, aged 7, 5 and 2.

SHELTON smiled at a mention of the published estimates of Klan membership. He said 65,000 "is closer to the neighborhood of the Alabama Klan alone."

"Secrecy in the business of membership is one of our biggest weapons," he said. "If we boast about it then we lose advantage." He said the Klan is "very active" in states in the North, East and West, is well organized in Alabama, Louisiana, the Carolinas, Tennessee and Georgia, and is having a "great increase in membership and activity in Mississippi, where it is now open and aboveboard." California membership "is very strong," he said, but "we can't come out openly, because the Communist conspiracy is strong and the Klan must not show its hand.

"We've had a very rapid increase since we got chartered, an increase more than we can take care of. We do not have the desire of a rush of volume membership. We don't want people of an emotional crowd feeling, or leaders to satisfy that excited emotional feeling, that can stomp and talk at meetings, and then they'll go out and beat or kill a nigger. No, we wish to provide satisfaction to people in a more constructive manner."

He said his new Klan "has a staff of 13 or 14 men—several lawyers, members of church boards and bank boards." Dues, he said, vary with local klaverns.

"The Klan image," Shelton went on rapidly, "has been so misrepresented in various news medias, misrepresenting that the Klansmen are living on a theory of hate and fear. . . . The Klan symbolizes the Reconstruction. We try to keep the Klan today on the same pedestal of history, of the Reconstruction past, when there were no laws to defend the Southerner under the cruel heel of Federal oppression.

"We are promoting mass education on the general program to the general public to inform them who our enemies are, what they are, the methods employed and how they are to be countered. Though not a political organization, we realize that, utilizing the law of self-preservation, to survive, we must be involved in politics, to extend the Klan program of voter registration."

THE Klan education program he said, has "many stages." One of them is "research on textbooks in schools."

"It is one means of the conspiracy to formulate an alien ideology among young children," and the Klan "contemplates to execute a program of the true writing of history." School officials, he explained, are often innocent of the conspiracy's distorting hand in school books, "and when it is called to their attention, many of them do not have a knowledge of what is taking place in our schools."

He did not name any objectionable books, but said: "The most liberal trend is in the higher echelons of intellect. . . . We find types of fellow travelers in various walks of life. . . . We'll formulate a list of completely falsified textbooks, the constant attempt to create in a young child the beliefs that Southerners have always been backward, hating the nigra and unprogressive."

PICKET LINE—The Klan in Atlanta. The "economic boycott" is one of several ideas today's Klan has adopted from the Negro revolt.

"The Southerner," he declared, "has progressed with the nigra on his shoulders farther than any other section of the country in every area of civilization and society. The War Between the States resulted, particularly in the Southeastern part of the United States, in the South being parched by burning and destroyed in Sherman's march. The South had to completely rebuild and revamp our civilization. And we had to carry the blunt weight of him, the nigra, in the uphill struggle against unfair freight rates, carpetbaggers, scalawags and Federal laws against us."

The North, Shelton observed, "is jealous of the South, our progress beyond them, of many individuals moving South to enjoy our production, our attitudes and our labor forces."

He said Southerners and Klansmen "have no hate for the nigra." They believe "there is a place in society for all persons and races, but you cannot pass or legislate class and social equality. The nigra must study and try to gain this level, rather than force it by legislation. . . . He has far more economy in the South, more business and private ownership, more homes owned by nigras, than in any other part of the country."

MR. SHELTON was for years a member of Local 351 of the United Rubber Workers. He said he believes in unions, but feels that they are "at the national level, infiltrated and rotten . . . with no regard for the Southerner, and control and manipulate us for advantage and capacity in the North. Walter Reuther is an admitted worker to set up a Socialist republic, a Socialist America."

Mr. Shelton considers the Negro movement for integration and the national labor movement to be intertwined in a conspiracy to take Southern union dues "to finance Communistic programs of integration in the South. Using the money and using the nigra as a tool, they continue to utilize and use M. L. King [the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr], Shuttlesworth [the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference] and the N.A.A.C.P. to be more militant participants in racial demonstrations, and they [the Communists] in turn slip into the background and wrest control.

"I firmly believe," he went on, "that M. L. King will be eliminated by his own people—will be assassinated.

"The nigra is beginning to realize that when his people are desegregated, that where the movement has taken hold, that they are affiliated with known Communists, and that it brings about the destruction of his own economy, and the nigra businesses had to close their doors. Many well-meaning nigras know their own people are being used by Communists."

THE Imperial Wizard shares the current fashionable concern with poverty and unemployment, and offers the solution of restricting immigration.

"Cheap labor from foreign countries and a flood of immigration creates more problems," he said. "In foreign countries they look on America as a place to get milk and honey, but their loyalty remains for the motherland across the waters. They are not for our republican form of government. Some of them return to the motherland and still receive their Social Security."

The Klan believes the poll tax is "a necessary method, disregarding race. We require some method of selecting individuals intelligent enough to elect the leadership to enact the laws that govern us." Shelton himself "would advocate some aptitude test similar to those given men in the armed services, and then they could not holler discrimination."

HE conceded gravely: "If a nigra had the ability to pass such tests, he should have the right to vote. You have the immoral aspects of nigras who do not have the ability to write their names and can be controlled by a carton of cigarettes or a carton of beer; some whites, too, can be controlled. We must select citizens who have the ability to vote for leadership which will enact laws for not only you and I but future generations."

The Klan is deeply concerned over the welfare program known as Aid to Dependent Children.

"Most nigra women have a better contract with the welfare and A.D.C. than unions have with management," Mr. Shelton offered, with a rare, quick smile. "A mother gets $30 for each illegitimate child, and then some of them, her children, are getting the same check for her illegitimate grandchildren. And they make the rounds of all the surplus food, welfare offices and churches, and the more illegitimate children they have, the better they can live. Go to the reciprocants of welfare and you'll see the TV antenna on the house, and a good sound auto in the front yard. They drive late-model Cadillacs and Buicks to the surplus food lines. Should we carry the tab to support such families?"

The Klan program to buy up tracts of land and settle white people in Caucasian communities to avoid integration is "still in the planning stage, in the future," Shelton said.

"We are researching the possibilities and our legal staff is at work on it, and we're interested in it because we're coming under a governing dictatorial body. These reservations will be a sanctity, where a man is to continue to raise up a family and have his beliefs respected."

Unlike most white segregationists, the Imperial Wizard does not profess love for Negroes in their place. Mrs. Shelton has "a white lady" who takes care of her children because he wants them "raised in a Caucasian atmosphere."

"I have a lot of nigras I'm in contact with, who pass on information to us and who have no regard for this movement," he said. "It is infringing on their own beliefs and principles, and they are intimidated and harassed. They say they have a boycott here and they have their own goon squads to harass and intimidate Negroes and snatch packages out of their hands and threaten them.

"They threaten more demonstrations. I welcome them; it shows their ignorance and stupidity. If they flout the laws, we are going to see that they uphold the law. As long as the police can handle it, we'll give them the opportunity, and if they can't, we'll use whatever means are necessary. They will not be allowed to openly flout the citizenry of this town or any town."

He expects a "spontaneous rise" in Negro activity "when the moon comes full. My research shows that the full moon brings out the animal instincts, increases their excitement, and they become violent, restless, inclined to get in trouble and brawls."

I asked Mr. Shelton about cross burnings in Mississippi, Louisiana and Alabama and about attacks, some by sheeted men, on Negroes.

"The Klan has not brought about any propagation of violence and intimidation," he declared. "In many cases, nigras are told that the Klan is responsible for violence against them; stories are exaggerated. The conspiracy will stoop to no level. The violence may be associated, yes, but it is not Klan work. There are, also, a number of Klans."

OF current Klan attitudes toward Catholics and Jews, he said: "A foreign section of a sect or belief, or allegiance to a religious body — in some cases Catholics have been pushed to the limit. Leander Perez [the Louisiana segregationist who was excommunicated by the Roman Catholic Church for his war on parochial-school desegregation] rather than bow down to his diocese was excommunicated; he would not be loyal to a mandate or ruling rather than his conviction.

"The argument as to why Jews don't belong to the Klan is belief in Christ. We are a Christian, Protestant fraternal organization, and they believe in the Messiah, Jehovah and other figures, but not Christ. If a Jewish person is a Communist person, we should not be considered anti-Semitic for exposing this person. And many Jews have been found in the Communist conspiracy."

The Klan wants "each race to promote its own culture, to inculcate race pride." But, he added, desegregation "is disrupting and breaking down all connections and communications, so people who five years ago would think nothing of throwing 50 cents or a dollar into the hat of a nigra now won't do it."

Mr. Anthony asked me to reply to your letter of July 17. The attached summaries came from reading news clips and various reports; I would prefer that you not quote me, since these are my own conclusions and not the Council's.

In our latest report, Law Enforcement in Mississippi, pp. 5 and 6, Leslie W. Dunbar mentioned the Klan and a new but fast-growing group called the Americans for the Preservation of the White Race. I am attaching the two pages, for your information. Since this has been published you may use is for a quote if you wish.

A list we have used for reference and reading is also attached: news stories, magazine articles, publications, and books.

REACTION TO KLAN

TO THE EDITOR:

The article reporting the views and plans of Robert Shelton, Imperial Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan, was interesting ("The Imperial Wizard Explains the Klan," July 5).

Shelton and his helpers have recently been picketing the theaters, restaurants and motels in our city which have elected to comply with the provisions of the Civil Rights Bill. The signs would offend the decency and manners of any honorable citizen. The Klan's action has brought the following reaction in a front-page editorial of The Tuscaloosa News on July 7:

"Supreme commander of these reckless and irresponsible white elements is a sickly looking, pitiable little man named Robert Shelton. He has no life savings at stake in any private business enterprise. He has been reduced to living as a human jackal on a racket known as the Ku Klux Klan."

Another front-page editorial appeared on July 8 in our city's leading newspaper:

"Sleep well tonight. But look about you today. The Grand Wizard glides up to a trouble spot, radio antenna whipping the clean breeze above his command car. He puts down the microphone from his command radio and steps out, walking stiff-legged and looking like an owl in his big dark glasses.

"He looks around for those he fears: Negroes, Catholics, Jews, Government men (Federal, that is) and a long list of others who pity a man who is even afraid of the United Fund and condemns its agencies."

The foregoing editorials ought to make it clear that Robert Shelton and his limited followers are not regarded locally as significant citizens of Tuscaloosa. His bid for respectability is a farce. His appeal is limited to a fearful mentality which knows it is by way of being left out in a society which is too busy to hate.

'KLAN IMAGE'

TO THE EDITOR:

As for the "Klan image" as explained by Mr. Shelton, when did it not thrive on a "theory of hate and fear"? The writer, reared in the South, has a deep-rooted remembrance of this image—a memory of a shivering, frightened child clinging to her mother, watching for the first time a band of invaders of a peaceful small town, donning white robes and masks, and marching in ghostly procession to force open and search a home in the neighborhood of a reported bootlegger.

Surely, the South today can bring forward better spokesmen for its great history than this "Imperial Wizard." Surely, the South is not to become a "reservation" for the sanctity of those enclaves and "Caucasian communities," where Mr. Shelton and his like could live and raise up families and have their beliefs "respected!"

Craig Hints Bid for Order For Purge List

Ku Klux Klan leader Calvin Craig said Saturday he may seek a write of mandamus to remove the clerk of Fulton Superior Court and the county voting registrar unless they comply with a law requriing them to process monthly lists of convicted felons so that they can be purged from the registration books.

Mr. Craig, who is Georgia grand dragon of the United Klans of America and is also a candidate for state Senate, sent a telegram Thursday to the county grand jury requesting an investigation in the matter.

He said Saturday he has had no response from the grand jury or from any county officials.

The new state elections code enacted early this summer requires the clerk of court to submit to the registrar a list each month of all persons convicted of felonies in his judicial circuit. The old code required an annual list.

FELONS are disqualified from voting until they complete their prison and probationary terms and obtain a certified restoration of their civil and political rights from the State Pardon and Parole Board.

Both Fulton County Registrar Leon Hay and Acting Fulton Superior Court Clerk Clarence Lanford confirmed the felon lists are not being made. Mr. Hay said no lists have been received by his office in at least three years. He said there are a number of administrative difficulties in a county as large as Fulton that make it "almost impossible" to keep current data on felons residing in the county.

He said it is especially difficult to detect felons convicted in other jurisdictions or states unless they admit it when they come to Mr. Hay's office to register.

He said he is working now to improve the system and bring practice into line with the law.

Rally Hears Klan Controls Nine States

9-6-64

By PAUL VALENTINE

About 600 Ku Klux Klansmen gathered Saturday night in a Stone Mountain field, burned a cross and were told by their leader the Klan now politically controls nine states of the union.

James Venable, Atlanta attorney and chairman of the National Ku Klux Klan Association, praised his organization and said its strength will continue to grow.

A 30-foot cross was lit in the field, owned by Mr. Venable, and burned brightly for several minutes while robed Klansmen stood silently facing the bright light, many of them raising their left arm in a stiff salute.

Many of the Klansmen were both robed and masked. They cheered various calls for patriotism and the preservation of the white man's position in American society. About a dozen speakers addressed the crowd.

AT ONE POINT, several hundred of the spectators turned from the speaker's stand and suddenly rushed toward the gate to the field in apparent response to a reported disturbance nearby.

Many of the Klansmen carried clubs. Some had pistols. One man who had removed his red robe had a pistol tucked in a shoulder holster.

"Do you have your gun?" one man asked another as they ran toward the gate.

In an opening prayer at the rally, a robed preacher asked that "the Lord put grace and grit in the white caucasian race . . . and help destroy this black ape race."

Mr. Venable stressed that the National Association of Klans does not preach the use of violence except in self-defense.

"Our weapons are the boycott and the ballot," he said.

Of acquittal Friday of two Klansmen charged with the murder of Negro Lemuel Penn near Athens, Mr. Venable said:

"You'll never be able to convict a white man that killed a Nigger what encroaches on the white race of the South."

Klan leaders from Florida, Tennessee, Louisiana, South Carolina and Ohio addressed the crowd.

A Georgia Klan leader, Charlie Maddox of Savannah, told the gathering, "We need to do a lot to stop (the liberal legislation of) these national politicians. One man down in Texas did a lot already, remember?"

A Louisiana spokesman estimated the Klan now has more than 10,000 members in his state. Another Klansman, this one from Ohio, predicted that in five years his state will have double the number it had in the 1940s, some 45,000.

The National Association of Klans is a federation of 19 Klan groups across the nation, Mr. Venable said. It embraces six of seven Klan organizations in Georgia. The seventh is the United Klans of America, headed by Calvin Craig in Georgia and Robert Shelton of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, in the nation.

BIG GAINS SCORED BY CAROLINA KLAN

Resurgence Most Vigorous Since the Early 1920s

Special to The New York Times

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Sept. 5—A new Ku Klux Klan, which began raising its fiery crosses over North Carolina 12 months ago, has become the biggest and strongest Klan organization in this state in 40 years.

Not since the early nineteen-twenties, when Klansmen were elected in numbers to the State Legislature, has North Carolina witnessed so vigorous a resurgence of the robed order.

Gov. Terry Sanford and state law enforcement officials, worried about the Klan's potential for violence, have kept a careful watch as the organization has spread rapidly into a majority of the counties in eastern and Piedmont North Carolina.

Only in the mountainous west has the Klan failed to gain a foothold. As one high Klan official told reporters recently, "There ain't no niggers in the mountains."

Many Sympathizers

While no more than 3,000 persons are dues-paying members of the Klan, several times that many North Carolinians are active sympathizers who attend rallies, donate money and follow the Klan's line in politics.

More than 40 klaverns, or local units, meet weekly across the state in lodge halls, private dining rooms, business places and Klansmen's homes.

The Anti-Defamation League, which monitors Klan activity all over the country, now believes that North Carolina is among the four most active states in a national Klan revival. The others are Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee.

The league, along with law enforcement men and other students of the Klan, is convinced that Klan operations in North Carolina today are far more widespread and well-organized than in any other period since the nineteen-twenties.

While the new Klan in North Carolina has its share of older men who are veterans of earlier Klans, the present organization seems to be dominated by men in their 20s and 30s, for whom this Klan adventure is their first.

Led by Former Sailor

Their leader, and the man primarily responsible for the Klan revival in the state, is J. Robert Jones, 36 years old, a former sailor, bricklayer and lightning-rod salesman. He is the Grand Dragon of the state Klan.

Jones, the son of a Salisbury, N. C., railroading family, now devotes all his time to organizing new klaverns and encouraging old ones. He says he has driven 75,000 miles in the last year in behalf of the Klan.

It all began, Jones said in a recent interview, in June, 1963, when he got eight friends together to discuss Communism and the civil rights movement.

"We decided something had to be done," Jones recalled, "whether it was on a local or national basis."

After three nights of talk, Jones and his friends agreed to revive the Ku Klux Klan in North Carolina and to affiliate with United Klans of America, Inc., the biggest of several national Klan organizations.

Political Strength Doubted

North Carolina's Grand Dragon and his youthful lieutenants insist that their group has disavowed violence as a means for preserving white supremacy. Their energies will be directed instead toward politics, they dividuals who may decide, without authorization, to translate violent oratory into violent action.

One veteran Klansman from eastern North Carolina summed it up when asked whether the Klan was serious when it disclaimed violence.

"We really mean it," he said. "But you gotta watch these young boys. They'll go off and do anything."

Political Strength Doubted

North Carolina's Grand Dragon and his youthful lieutenants insist that their group has disavowed violence as a means for preserving white supremacy. Their energies will be directed instead toward politics, they contend.

Political observers in North Carolina, however, are virtually unanimous in dismissing the Klan as a serious political force in statewide elections.

While the Klan's bloc of votes is almost certainly too small to be significant in statewide races, the Klan still may wield political influence in scattered small towns and rural communities where anti-Negro sentiment is intense.

Despite the new Klan's insistence that it will stick to politics to achieve its goals, there have been strong indications that threats, intimidation and even violence are atill part of the Klan's operations.

Potential for Violence

The Klan's own leaders are ambivalent in public statements on the subject. Nearly every disclaimer of violence has been coupled with an implicit threat of violence.

"We are not a violent order," one speaker told a crowd of cheering Klansmen recently, "but it's better to die for something than to live for nothing."

Law enforcement officials believe that whatever the Klan leaders' real views of violence are, the Klan's greatest potential for violence rests with in-

Most Southerners Regard Reborn Klan With Contem

Its Estimated 75,000 Members Stir Trouble in Rural Areas

By Paul Good
Special to The Washington Post

ATLANTA, Oct. 7—The image of the Ku Klux Klan is appearing once more on sections of the American social and political landscape.

FBI arrests in McComb, Miss., for the bombing of Negro homes turned up Klan membership cards in the suspects' cache of weapons. In Georgia recently, an all-white jury freed two Klansmen accused of the hi[illegible] of Washington educator [illegible]uel A. Penn, a Negro. And a few days after the verdict, a Georgia KKK leader ran a strong race for State senator in a suburb of Atlanta.

"There has been a significant resurgence of the Klan throughout the South," reports the Anti-Defamation League. "Basically anti-Negro, it is also anti-Semitic, identifying Jews with communism. Continuing [illegible] violence appears inevi[illegible]ble because by its own principles and its very nature, the Klan must use force. If it is not coercive and violent, it is nothing."

The Klan, moribund in the 1950s, has come to new life in Florida, the Carolinas, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana and Mississippi. While the Republican convention did not denounce it in the Party platform, Sen. Barry Goldwater took cognizance of its re-emergence in an Aug. 6 statement.

"We don't want the backing of the Ku Klux Klan," the GOP presidential nominee said. "And I don't think we're going to get it."

But some Klan elements are openly endorsing the Senator. How much support, welcome or not, can the Klan muster politically today?

Known facts about the secret organization support two major conclusions:

1. In numbers and political influence, the Klan is a shadow of what it was in its modern heydey of the 1920s. Then, its influence decided numerous state elections and even reached into the Indiana Governor's office. While reliable membership figures do not exist, estimated membership then was possibly a million. Today, it might reach 75,000, drawn largely from the ranks of the ill-educated and economically impotent.

The two major groups—the United Klans of America, Inc., and the National Ku Klux Klan Association—are looked on with contempt by a majority of Southerners regardless of their opposition to integration. They point to past Klan excesses that gave the South an unwholesome reputation and they see no present signs of responsibility. However, in small rural areas, where the Negro is most vulnerable, Klansmen are exerting influence, and Mississippi terror bombings have been coincident, at least, with the rise of the Klan.

2. The KKK renascence appears tied to the inevitability of Negro civil rights progress under Federal legislation. Looking again to Mississippi, a few years ago the Klan was virtually extinct, with militant whites enrolled in ballot-minded groups like the Citizens Council. But as it became obvious the Council could oppose but not undo by vote or persuasion equal rights laws and seconding judicial decisions, direct action extremists left the Council and revived the Klan.

The significance — and danger — of Klan growth is that young, violence-prone segregationists are joining, hating Negroes and viewing the Federal Government as a blood enemy.

In Tuscaloosa, Ala., former tire salesman and current Imperial Wizard Robert Shelton of the United Klans of America paints a different image.

"We are not after the emotional type people," he says. "Because this is the calibre of people that are immediately seeking action to let out inner emotions. We are not an organization that is advocating bringing about a breakdown in law and order."

But in the next breath, Shelton predicts the assassination of Rev. Martin Luther King—by Communists because he isn't violent enough—and at the same time pledges for his members that ". . . whatever methods it will take to counteract this (civil rights) movement will be taken."

His rival counterpart, Imperial Wizard James Venable of the National Ku Klux Klan Association, spoke of the Penn slaying.

"We don't advocate taking law into our own hands," said the middle-aged Atlanta lawyer. "This killing hurts all of us and makes us look like outlaws."

But at a cross-burning rally the day after two Klansmen were acquitted of the murder in a Danielsville courtroom, he shouted:

"You'll never be able to convict a white man what kills a nigger that encroaches on the white race of the South. They tried it in Philadelphia (Miss.) and over in Danielsville. You see a jury there last night turn 'em Scot free. Now Mr. Hoover and Mr. Johnson, what do you say about that?"

His listeners cheered. Minutes later, many brandished guns when a false and possibly planted report that Negroes were trying to crash the meeting swept their ranks. In such moments, the Klan mask of a new reasonableness slips. An overwhelming majority of Southern leadership today regards the Klan as a political cipher and social blight. But the Klansman's innate capacity to do violence with guns and bombs still presents a lethal threat to Southern Negroes. And this is a real and growing challenge to Southerners of both races who abhor what the Klan does in the name of the Christian cross and white supremacy.

Burning cross and hooded figures, under Old Glory, symbolize resurgence of the Ku Klux Klan.

Klan Head Stresses Support For Barry of Self, Members

By PAUL VALENTINE

Calvin Craig, Georgia grand dragon of the United Klans of America, reasserted Tuesday his support of Sen. Barry Goldwater's presidential campaign. He said untold numbers of Klan members, ranging from farmers and shop foremen to bank directors and county sheriffs, are working individually for Republican victory.

Calvin Craig

He stressed in an interview that the United Klan is not making an organized effort under its own banner in the election campaign, but individual members are nevertheless united in their political thinking.

Mr. Craig also confidently predicted victory for Sen. Goldwater Nov. 3, both in Georgia and in the nation.

"He'll take the solid South, and I believe he'll take some of the bigger states, too," he said. "I predict he'll win by half a million votes over Johnson in the country."

THE GRAND DRAGON speculated Goldwater will take 90 of Georgia's 159 counties by a 40,000-vote margin over President Johnson.

Klan membership is broadly spread throughout Georgia's economic strata, he said, and those actively working for Goldwater include "doctors, freight rate clerks, shop foremen, big farmers, filling station owners, directors of banks, sheriffs, registered nurses and others."

He said, "The Klan is like a church. It is a cross-section of almost every profession."

THE SEGREGATIONIST leader also predicted there "will be violence in the streets before inauguration" in January, regardless of who wins the presidential race.

He reasoned:

"If LBJ is re-elected, the niggers will be more powerful than ever. In a way, they'll think Martin Luther King is president. They'll try to push the Civil Rights Bill into effect overnight. . . . The niggers are going to start pushing irregardless of which one's elected. But if Johnson goes back in, the white people are going to protect themselves.

"If Goldwater is elected, they (Negroes) will feel they have just a few months to do all the damage they can do with LBJ still in. I think there's going to be violence . . . I don't know exactly what form it will be, but something's going to happen. . . . If there was peace, Martin Luther King and the NAACP would be out of a job. They got to keep in business. I believe things are going to break loose about Christmas."

THE KLAN LEADER added, ed to his own narrowly lost race last September for the 35th Senatorial District seat in Atlanta against incumbent Frank Coggin in the Democratic primary. Sen. Coggin won by a 3,618-2,916 margin.

"Don't forget," the grand dragon said, "that old Coggin is the mayor of Hapeville, he's the incumbent senator and he had the backing of organized labor, the newspapers and the nigger Voters League. And look at me: I'm a newcomer; I'm known as a Klansman and a hatemonger and all that kind of thing. I think the vote in my district reflects a reaction against the general trend."

The United Klans of America is one of the most prominent Klan groups among the seven distinct Klans established in Georgia. The United Klans' national leader is Imperial Wizard Robert Shelton of Tuscaloosa, Alabama.

Union Arms Itself and Defies Klan

11-19-64-C

LAUREL, Miss.— (UPI)—Officials of a union whose assistant business manager was beaten by masked men vowed Wednesday night to arm themselves against possible attacks from the Ku Klux Klan.

The officials sent a warning to the klan after one of them, assistant business manager Otis Matthews, was kidnaped Tuesday night by masked men and beaten with leather straps.

The officials blamed the incident on the Klan and said it apparently was prompted by the fact that some Negroes had been given supervisory jobs through seniority at the Masonite Corp. plant here.

At a meeting of Local 5-443, International Woodworkers of America, AFL-CIO, the officials issued this grim warning:

"To those of you who disregard our advice and counsel, welcome to death and the penitentiary.

"We declare individually and collectively, that any more efforts to impede our progress on public thoroughfares will be met by death, as we have been advised to arm ourselves and be prepared."

The statement was signed by all 18 members of the local, including Matthews.

"Presumably, Matthews was kidnaped and attacked because the federal government had ordered the Masonite Corp. to treat the members of the Negro race exactly as the members of the white race," the leaders said. They said there was a unanimous decision by company and union to comply.

FBI Opposes Rights, Says NAACP Aide

11-19-64-C

HOUSTON, Tex., (AP) — A Mississippi NAACP leader said Wednesday Federal Bureau of Investigation agents in Southern states are generally not in sympathy with civil rights.

"I'll go further than that. J. Edgar Hoover himself is not in tune with civil rights," said Aaron Henry, a Clarksville druggist.

Henry, here to address the Houston Pharmaceutical Association convention, made the remarks in an interview with newsmen.

He said the feeling among Negroes and civil rights sympathizers is that FBI men would be reluctant to take legal action against "their friends" in local police departments.

"This accounts for their inept activity," he said. "Now, they can find a pumpkin containing microfilm on a 40-acre farm of Whitaker Chambers that convicted Alger Hiss, but they can't find the murderers of three boys in Philadelphia."

Henry was referring to the disappearance and deaths of three civil rights workers in Mississippi and the failure so far to apprehend any suspects in the case.

6 Klansmen Due Hearing In Rights Case

By PAUL VALENTINE

Six Athens Ku Klux Klansmen indicted last month by a federal grand jury on charges of conspiring to deprive Negroes of their civil rights are scheduled for arraignment Monday in Athens, U.S. Dist. Atty. Floyd Buford said Wednesday.

Actual trial of the men, however, may not come until sometime in January, he said, because attorneys for the Klansmen want to argue a number of pretrial motions which will have to be heard and adjudicated first by presiding federal Judge W. A. Bootle.

Three of the six Klansmen were indicted last summer on the state charge of murder in the July 11 shotgun slaying of Negro educator Lemuel Penn as he was driving with two other Negroes through a remote section of Madison County in northeast Georgia.

Two of the state defendants—Cecil Myers and Joseph Howard Sims — were acquitted after a week-long trial in Danielsville, seat of Madison County. The third Klansman charged with murder, James S. Lackey, has not yet been tried on the state charge and is currently being held in Atlanta Federal Penitentiary.

THE THREE MEN, plus Denver Willis Phillips, George Hampton Turner and Herbert Guest, were subsequently indicted on the federal charge of conspiracy. Mr. Guest was additionally charged with possession of an unregistered sawed-off shotgun measuring less than 26 inches in length in violation of a federal firearms statute.

All the defendants, except Mr. Lackey, are free on bond. The FBI has described the six as "active participants" in the activities of the United Klans of America in Clarke County Klavern No. 224.

The conspiracy charge alleges the six men engaged in systematic intimidation and harassment of Negroes, thus limiting rights guaranteed them under federal law and the U.S. Constitution. The indictment specifies the white men conspired to shoot, beat, and kill Negroes, damage and destroy their property, pursue them in cars and threaten them with guns.

A TOTAL of four motions involving the six men have been filed in federal court in Macon, seat of the U.S. Middle District of Georgia. One moves to strike certain portions of the indictment as irrelevant and prejudicial in the case; one asks for a bill of particulars to provide more details of the allegation against the men; another motion, this one filed in Mr. Lackey's behalf, asks for a speedy trial; and the fourth motion asks that the entire conspiracy indicement be dismissed on the claim that none of the acts at-indictment be dismissed on the charges is a violation of any federal law.

6 Athens Klansmen to Be Arraigned Monday

ATHENS, Ga. (AP)—Six white men the FBI identified as active in Ku Klux Klan affairs face arraignment Monday on charges of conspiring to deprive Negroes of civil rights.

They were indicted by a federal grand jury Oct. 16 on the charges arising from alleged acts of intimidation and violence against Negroes in Georgia.

The men were indicted by a grand jury investigating the night rider slaying of Lemuel Penn, a Washington, D.C., Negro educator.

Two of the state defendants—Cecil Myers and Joseph Howard Sims—were acquitted after a week-long trial at Danielsville. The third man, James S. Lackey, has yet to face trial. Besides the murder charge, Lackey faces federal conspiracy charges. He currently is being held at the federal penitentiary in Atlanta.

The three men, plus Denver Willis Phillips, George Hampton Turner and Herbert Guest, subsequently were indicted on the federal charge of conspiracy.

Killers of 3 Known, FBI Says

11-26-64 JC

By JACK C. VANDENBERG

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Federal Bureau of Investigation said Wednesday for the first time that it knows who killed the three young civil rights workers in Philadelphia, Miss., last June.

"Intensive investigation is continuing to develop the case for prosecution as quickly as possible," the FBI said.

The statement was in reply to charges by the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and other Negro leaders that the FBI was providing inadequate protection for Negroes in the South.

VICTIMS IDENTIFIED

Acting Atty. Gen. Nicholas Deb. Katzenbach has said previously that Mississippians refusing to come forward and testify have prevented arrests in the slayings.

The victims were Andrew Goodman, 20, of New York; Michael Schwerner, 24, of Brooklyn, N.Y., and a Negro, James Chaney, 21, of Meridian, Miss.

Their bodies were found in a deep grave near Philadelphia about two months after they were last seen alive. They had been shot.

DEVELOPS CLUES

Wednesday's statement said:

"The FBI launched a massive investigation following the disappearance of the three civil rights workers in the vicinity of Philadelphia, Miss., on June 21, 1964. The FBI located their bodies in an earthen dam and has developed information identifying those responsible."

The FBI also said it has identified a small group of Ku Klux Klansmen believed to be responsible for the bombing of a Birmingham, Ala., church on Sept. 15, 1963, in which four Negro children were killed.

Dear Sirs,

I am writing as a Bethel College senior presently engaged in doing research for a social science seminar paper. My paper is concerned with the Ku Klux Klan, its revival, and its operation and influence in todays society. It has been drawn to my attention that you could possibly assist me in this research by having at your disposal related material, or information where such material could be obtained. I would sincerely appreciate any and all help that you might give me in this endeavor.

Your prompt attention to this matter would be appreciated.

Sincerely,

Rights Death Area Tells of Klan Plot

11-29-64 J-C

By HOMER BIGART

(c) 1964 New York Times News Service

PHILADELPHIA, Miss., Nov. 28—The belief is growing among moderate leaders here that a Ku Klux Klan mob of at least 50 persons plotted the murder of Michael H. Schwerner at least six weeks before he and two other civil rights leaders were slain last summer.

Why would Schwerner be the particular target of the Klan? Why not one of the other victims: Andrew Goodman, who like Schwerner, was a white man from New York? Why not the lone Negro of the trio, James E. Chaney?

"Schwerner wore a beard and looked very Jewish," one Philadelphian explained. "He had become a known figure to the Klan. He had been in the area several months."

Schwerner, a 24-year-old former settlement house worker on the lower east side of Manhattan, came to Mississippi last January. He and his wife, Rita, had joined the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and had opened a community center at Meridian where Negroes were trained for civil service examinations, motor registration and in other phases of the civil rights program.

Goodman was among 175 student volunteers who completed a one-week orientation course for the Mississippi civil rights project in Oxford, Ohio, only a week before he vanished.

THE THREE disappeared June 21. Their bodies were found in an earthen dam near on Aug. 4.

As for the motivation for murder, it is explained by some that the Klan mob was worked up to an embittered conviction that the state was facing an invasion by Yankee beatniks, Jews and other "scum" and decided to make Schwerner an example for the other invaders.

On June 21 Schwerner, Goodman and Chaney, a 21-year-old plasterer from Meridian, came to Neshoba County to investigate the burning of a Negro church.

They were stopped late in the afternoon by Deputy Sheriff Cecil Price, who took them to jail and held them for several hours on a speeding charge. It was late at night when they were released. Two days later, the burned hulk of their station wagon was found in a swamp a few miles from town.

SINCE THEN, this town of 5,000 in the red clay hills of east-central Mississippi has been under close scrutiny by agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

A few Philadelphians are now beginning to break silence and comment openly on the undercurrents of fear and guilt.

Rev. Clay Lee, pastor of the First Methodist Church, said:

"I've been a minister 15 years in Mississippi and I've never seen so much tension. What bothers me most is the unwillingness of so many people to face the fact that this was planned, premeditated murder. I honestly don't know one member of the Klan. But beyond the shadow of a doubt they are here and they were mixed up in this."

Lee said many Philadelphians were confused by the clamorous insistence of racists for a united front against outside investigators.

He said the fear of many Philadelphians was not so much of cross burnings, bombings and other violence by the Klan but "a fear of what we might hear."

Klansmen Plead Innocent In Rights Violation Case

11-30-64 9

By PAUL VALENTINE
Atlanta Journal Staff Writer

ATHENS, Ga., Nov. 30—Five Ku Klux Klansmen formally pleaded innocent Monday in federal court here to charges they have conspired to deprive Negroes of their civil rights.

U.S. District Judge W. A. Bootle tentatively set their trial for Jan. 11.

The five Clarke County men strode solemnly into the courtroom [illegible] dressed in a dark [illegible]

[illegible] FBI as "active participants" in the United Klans of America, the men are Cecil Williams Myers, Joseph Howard Sims, Herbert Guest, Denver Phillips and George Hampton Turner.

Myers and Sims were acquitted last September in a state court of the charge of murdering the Negro officer, Lemuel Penn.

IN ADDITION TO the five Klansmen arraigned here Monday, lawyers said a sixth—James Lackey—could not appear because he is currently undergoing psychiatric examination at Atlanta Federal Penitentiary on motion of the government. They said, however, he would also plead innocent to the charge.

Lackey was additionally indicted last summer for murder along with Myers and Sims but has not yet been tried on the state charge.

All six men are now charged under a federal conspiracy statute. Indictments alleged that over an extended period of time, they have conspired to systematically deny common civil rights to Negroes by beating, shooting and killing them, destroying their property and harrassing and threatening them on the highways.

PENN WAS SLAIN early July 11 in a burst of shotgun fire from a passing car as he and two other fellow Negro educators from Washington, D.C., were driving through a remote section of Madison County in northeast Georgia.

After a five-day trial in Danielsville, an all-white jury acquitted Myers and Sims of the murder charge.

During the hotly contested trial, however, state prosecutors introduced a confession by Lackey purporting to admit he, Myers and Sims were in the car from which the fatal shots were fired.

Guest, an illiterate, also signed statements for the FBI implicating the other three men.

IN ADDITION TO the conspiracy charge, Guest is charged with possessing an unregistered sawed-off shotgun measuring less than 26 inches long in violation of federal firearms statutes. He pleaded innocent to that charge also on Monday.

Because of the confession and statements brought into evidence during the state murder trial, attorneys for the Klansmen Monday asked Judge Bootle to sever Guest and Lackey from the other defendants and have them tried separately.

(After the Lackey confession came to light in the murder trial last summer, attorneys for Myers and Sims put up a psychiatrist who testified that Lackey showed signs of mental instability. The current government motion for psychiatric examination is an apparent follow-up to last summer's testimony.

Attorneys have also filed a written motion to dismiss the conspiracy charge on grounds it does not show intention to violate specific federal law.

Lackey has entered a motion for speedy trial, and all have moved to strike portions of the indictment as irrelevant or prejudicial.

Judge Bootle set a Dec. 28 hearing date in Macon for oral arguments on all the motions.

"IF THE CASE survives the motion to dismiss," he said, the trials will begin Jan. 11 in Athens.

U.S. District Attorney Floyd Buford will lead prosecution of the case.

All the Klansmen, except Lackey, are represented by James Hudson of Athens and Harold Boggs of Danielsville. Boggs is a former member of the Georgia House of Representatives. Hudson ran unsuccessfully Nov. 3 as a Republican candidate against state Rep. Randell Bedgood.

Representing Lackey are court-appointed attorneys Nick Chilivis of Athens and Robert B. Thompson of Gainesville, a former U.S. assistant district attorney.

Dear Mr. Voran:

We can indeed give you some information on the Klan, and also refer you to other sources. You know, of course, that membership is a closely guarded secret, and so any membership figures you note will be estimates only. The Klan has a habit of exaggerating membership; attendance at meetings is a pretty good indication of the strength in any given area. But keep in mind also that part of the crowd is people who are curious (the kind that go to fires and accidents and watch people jump off buildings), part is "observers" from civil rights groups who want to know what is said and who is there, and part is the press. And usually there are plain clothes law enforcement officers too.

Because of its violence, the Klan has lost a good deal of its appeal. The more respectable citizens belong to organizations such as the Citizens Councils and the John Birch Society. It isn't very large or very strong most places nowadays, but is a hard core of extremists inclined toward violence. The bombings and the murders in the South are their work.

Enclosed are copies of a few representative news clips. Attached are references to other publications and sources. Included is one example of the literature passed out at meetings. If you want more of this, please write to the addressed given on the copy.

Sincerely yours,

Montez G. Albright (Mrs.)

Facts, January 1961, published by the Anti-Defamation League, stated that "Klan membership is no more than 50,000 and may be about 35,000 or less." It has been estimated that Klan membership in Mississippi may be as high as 90,000 now, though this claim of the Klan is not corroborated by impartial observers.

In Louisiana, on Jan. 19, 1964, more than 150 crosses were burned in five parishes, and were said to signal a revival of the Klan there. The crosses were burned near Negro homes, churches and schools, mostly in East Baton Rouge Parish.

Many Klansmen have been arrested in the past few months for participation in bombings--in Alabama, Georgia, Florida, and Mississippi.

RALPH ATLANTA CONSTITUTION, Tuesday, Dec. 8, 1964

Gen. Forrest Said It First

A growing belief that a Klan plot, involving perhaps as many as 50 men, was responsible for the murder of three young men in Philadelphia, Mississippi, is reported from that area. In other localities the word "Klan" or the phrase "Ku Klux Klan" appears in the news of court trials and arrests.

Nothing has changed the conclusion of Nathan Bedford Forrest, the Confederate cavalry leader who served as grand wizard of the "invisible empire" in the period of its greatest activity in 1868-1870.

"The Klan, secret, robed and masked," General Forrest said, "has become the refuge of scoundrels."

The distinguished Southern historian, E. Merton Coulter, wrote in "The South During Reconstruction": "Grand Wizard Forrest attempted to disband the Klan, and the responsible element of Southerners who had widely joined the order now withdrew, but a whirlwind had been started . . . the Klan organization continued in the hands of cutthroats and riffraff for private gain and vengeance."

Same Result

The Klan revival in the 1920s ultimately produced the same result: It became the refuge for scoundrels and worse.

In Indiana, for example, the grand dragon was sent to prison following the rape and death of his young secretary. Violence, corruption of local politicians and defiance of the processes of law were widespread.

Since the Supreme Court school decision in 1954 there have been a number of efforts to revive the Klan. The Civil Rights Act, preceded by the long filibuster against its passage, stirred organizers to greater activity. (The Klan can be very lucrative to its directors.)

The field for revival in 1954-1964 was, however, restricted. The majority of the Southern people accepted the decision—some with anger and some with great reluctance, but they were not willing to commit violence to defy it. The revival, then, has depended chiefly on a fringe group—but by no means exclusively—in Mississippi and Alabama. This group includes, as the record shows, those willing to commit and condone violence and opposition to law.

The Klan's main target is, of course, the Negro. The Klan also equated Jews with Communists. Klan groups are brainwashed by speakers and pamphlets about a wholly imaginary "Jewish-Communist conspiracy which is using the colored race of the United States and the world as pawns to mongrelize the white race everywhere." Other Klan targets are Roman Catholics and the foreign born.

Based on Bigotry

Despite the sanctimonious Klan's patriotism, piety, and purity of Southern womanhood, it is, as before, based on bigotry and discrimination. It still profanes the Christian cross by burning it in demonstrations of prejudice and violence.

The Klan, in general, would like to subjugate all but native born white Protestants, but here again, there are shadings. It is against even those "liberal" Protestants who do not share its traditional antagonism toward Negroes, Jews, Catholics and foreign born. Reporters investigating the vicious murders of three young men in Mississippi report Klan sympathizers there as saying, for example, that they "don't see why so much fuss is being made over two Jews and a nigger."

The Klan revival is not large, despite the grandiose claims of its organizers who make a tidy sum out of fees, dues, sale of robes, emblems, and so on. Because of the jealousy of organizers and the profits to be made, there are a number of "Klans" that still provide, as before, refuge for the more violent persons, and they are most effective in communities where local sentiment favors their objectives.

The Klans Are Profitable

How big is the 1954-1964 Klan revival? Not very. In 1944 the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, which had been revived 23 years earlier by William Joseph Simmons, suspended operations and surrendered their charter largely because of delinquent tax claims totaling nearly a million dollars. The over-all record of those 23 years was a national rebuke and disgrace.

At its peak in the 1920s the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan had perhaps 4,000,000 members. Many millionaires were made and millions were corruptly acquired and spent.

In 1944 at the time of surrender the Knights were but a bedraggled remnant. Today there are an estimated 17 "Klans" in existence.

Their total dues-paid membership is probably less than 15,000, although claims of huge totals are common. The largest of the 17 has about 5,000 paid up members in seven states.

Income Sources

Klan sources of income are many. One is the initiation fee called "kletoken." For men the charge is $15. (In the 1920s it was $10.) Women may buy into the "auxiliary" for $10. Sixty-five per cent of each kletoken goes to headquarters. Another source is dues. One Klan sends 25 cents per member each month to its grand dragon. In other Klan groups the ruling dragons reportedly draw from $1,900 to $2,500 per month as dues from the klavern. Smaller dragons, of course, receive less. Nonetheless, the dragons in general live in luxury unknown to their membership. Just how many wives and children are deprived of clothing and shoes to keep those dragons in such luxury is a question. Sale of robes is profitable. The going price is $10.

One of the larger Klan splinters is also in the insurance business. Each member buys a policy and is urged to become an agent. Passing the hat is another favorite money raiser. At all rallies there are fervent appeals for money to carry on the great work of saving the white race.

The Klan mentality contains aberrations which frequently come to public notice in ways other than violence and the inflammatory anti-Semitic, anti-Catholic, anti-foreign, anti-Negro content of their literature. When the Kennedy half dollars first went into circulation, for example, members of some klaverns were urged to drill a hole through Kennedy's head and then put the coin back in circulation. The purpose was, of course, to cause withdrawal of the Kennedy half dollars.

Low Level

Studies of Klan memberships across the years from the 1920s, and, indeed, from the 1868 period, by sociologists and other agencies report that while a few intelligent men are attracted—usually to the money making or promotional end — Klan members are, for the most part, below the average level in backgrounds and education.

Margaret Mead, the noted anthropologist, suggests that such lack of social status may well account for a sense of insecurity and efforts to maintain supremacy by terror or violence. The make - believe, mumbo - jumbo klavern meetings with words, robes, and the absurd titles—wizards, dragons, nighthawks, and so on—provide an excitement and a sense of belonging.

Many Klans have "action groups" that are unknown to general members. They are selected for their willingness to commit violence. In recent arrests of Klansmen in Mississippi and other Southern states, arms and explosives have been found in great quantity. Training in the use of weapons and explosives has been a part of instructions at some klaverns.

The "revival" is not large. As American people, especially those in states and areas now heavily inflicted with Klan groups, turn more and more to the processes of law, the Klans will fade out again.

Dear Mr. Zajac:

We have not published anything on the Klan and the White Citizens Councils in some years. Weltner Seeking Probe of Klan Rise

2-1-65 Journal

By MARGARET SHANNON
Atlanta Journal Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1—The only Deep South congressman who voted for the civil rights bill, Rep. Charles L. Weltner of Atlanta, Monday called for an investigation of the Ku Klux Klan by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Rep. Weltner is a new member of the committee, which is headed by Rep. Edwin E. Willis, D-La. Five of the committee's nine members come from states of the old Confederacy.

Charles Weltner

The Georgia congressman said in a House speech that the Un - American Activities Committee can kill the Klan for good by exposing it publicly. "It will plague us tomorrow unless we quash it today," he warned.

Rep. Weltner contended that the KKK comes within the committee's scope despite some differences of opinion over the meaning of "Un-American."

"Surely all agree that activities which by force and violence seek to deprive others of rights guaranteed them by the Constitution are un-American," Rep. Weltner declared.

He said Klan operations have increased in the South at a critical time when the region is "struggling for orderly progress."

"I believe I speak for a vast majority of Southerners in calling for action," Rep. Weltner said.

THE 5TH DISTRICT congressman thinks there is a good chance the committee will undertake the investigation. He told a reporter that in his opinion a majority of the committee will go along with him.

Rep. Weltner received some applause from the small number of House members present when he spoke—about 40. Most of his fellow Georgians were absent.

Rep. George Grider, a Democratic freshman from Memphis, endorsed the Weltner proposal. He said the Klan is "a proper subject" for the committee to investigate.

He said Memphis has been free of major racial violence because of a Memphis newspaper's prize-winning expose of the Klan 40 years ago.

Rep. Weltner has been boning up on the law for some time. He was studying up on its history even before being named to the un-American activities Committee. Since his appointment, he has been to the Justice Department for conferences.

In his House speech Monday, Rep. Weltner pointed out that 1965 is the 100th anniversary of the Ku Klux Klan's formation in Pulaski, Tenn. It was revived in Atlanta in 1915.

He said that in 1921 the House Rules Committee considered several resolutions calling for an investigation, but nothing happened. In 1924, he related, it had 4,000,000 members and "its influence touched courthouses and state houses, national conventions of both major parties and Congress itself."

REP. WELTNER said that since the 1954 U.S. Supreme Court school desegration decision and "most significantly during the past two years, Klan manifestations have increased throughout the South" and there are signs of a spread westward.

"All this comes at a critical time for the South," the congressman said. "We are rising to our full potential. We are struggling for orderly progress. We are turning to real problems and solid opportunities."

Rep. Weltner continued:

"Yet, once again, its madness is in our midst. It impugns a lawful and generous people. It impairs compliance with the law. It impedes administration of justice.

"Now, what shall be done? Shall we in the Congress ignore the veil of fear descending upon whole communities? Shall we permit faceless men, under cover of robes and darkness, to imperil the liberty of our people?

"I believe I speak for a vast majority of Southerners in calling for action. For in doing nothing, we will inaugurate a second century for the Ku Klux Klan.

"The weapons of the Klan are secrecy, rumor and fear. Plain facts and simple truth, amply imparted to the public, are adequate remedies. This committee can provide these remedies by thorough and detailed investigation.

"Let us turn upon this invisible empire the light of public scrutiny. Let us examine in full its extent, character and objects. Let us reveal for all to see the men behind the masks."

The Birth Of 'The Birth Of a Nation'

By BOSLEY CROWTHER

HOLLYWOOD EPIC NO. 1—In addition to the famous battle scenes (top, left) in "The Birth of a Nation," there were moments of pathos and of straight history. Audiences were touched during a scene in which a sentry looks wistfully at Lillian Gish as she leaves a hospital (top, right) and were fascinated by the re-creation of the assassination of Lincoln (bottom, left). The South's social structure (bottom right, a military ball) was shown as an admirable establishment threatened by the North.

FIFTY years ago tomorrow there occurred in Los Angeles an event that may well be regarded as the most outstanding in the history of American films—the premiere performance of a "photo-drama" that was to demonstrate to the world the vast potential of motion pictures and, at the same time, inflame the people of this country with emotions that recollection can rekindle even now. The film was David Wark Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," one of the greatest ever made and, beyond any question, the most explosive ever released in the United States.

Today, the story of the making and showing of this extraordinary film is more legend than history. There are varying accounts of how much money it cost to make it and how much money it has earned. One guess, as good as any other, sets the latter figure at $50 million, which, if true, would make it the biggest earner of all time, even bigger than its remarkable kinsman, "Gone With the Wind."

Certainly it was the largest and the longest film made up to its time. It ran for 12 reels, or almost three hours, which was three times as long as the standard length of a film in 1915. And it was the first American film to be exhibited on a two-a-day basis, in theaters and auditoriums, at an unheard-of $2 top admission price.

More amazing was the revelation it gave of the tremendous potency of the then rather primitive motion picture when used with imagination, audacity and skill. And most amazing, perhaps, were the disruptive and disturbing effects it had upon race relations in this country over a period of many years.

"The Birth of a Nation" was a highly pro-South drama of the American Civil War and the period of Reconstruction, and it glorified the role of the Ku Klux Klan. The effect of this was to generate a divisive, anti-Negro sentiment that outraged liberals and the pro-Negro organizations that were then gaining strength—notably the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which was six years old. Violent demonstrations generally marked showings of the film.

Indeed, its effects upon public sentiment might be compared to those of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" when it was published in 1852. In the North, it excited indignation; in the South, it "waved the bloody shirt." It undoubtedly gave much stimulation to the rise and growth of the modern Ku Klux Klan.

The irony of this famous picture is that it should have been such a superior achievement in the medium and yet such a disturbing social document. But it was probably the very fact of its effectiveness as a device for arousing sentiment in a nation still sensitive to the memory of the antagonisms and agonies of civil strife that attracted great attention to it and made for its great commercial success. And it was certainly the immensity of its impact that opened eyes to the social importance of films.

No one had any real notion until "The Birth of a Nation" that the infant movies could do anything more than amuse. Dustin Farnum playing "The Squaw Man" was just about the speed of that day — he and a splay-footed clown (Continued on Page 83)

BOSLEY CROWTHER, movie critic of The Times, is preparing a book on great films produced through the years in which the one he describes here will, of course, get special attention.

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," made 50 years ago, was beyond question the most explosive film ever produced in this country. It was a highly pro-South drama of the Civil War and Reconstruction and it glorified the role of the Ku Klux Klan (at left, hooded riders swarm through a Southern town). Screenings were accompanied by demonstrations. But it was also an eye-opening achievement in an art form that had not until then begun to realize its potential.

called Charlie Chaplin who was just coming into popularity in the Mack Sennett slapstick comedies. Art had been only vaguely hinted at with the appearance of Sarah Bernhardt in a 40-minute film called "Queen Elizabeth," though a faint intimation of what was coming was contained in an Italian spectacle, "Quo Vadis?," which ran for the unconscionable length of two hours and was offered on Broadway for $1.

Schooled in this environment was Griffith, a former playwright who had been acting in, and directing, "flickers" for the pioneer Biograph company in New York since 1908. In turning out dozens of one- and two-reelers, he had discovered and developed many of the now familiar and commonplace ways of making moving pictures more flexible and articulate.

With his cameraman, G. W. (Billy) Bitzer, he had learned to move the camera around and shoot a scene from more than one angle. He had worked out the use of the close-up. Most important, he had developed unusual ways of assembling shots and scenes to build up a narrative continuity with cumulative force. In 1913, his "Judith of Bethulia," a Biblical drama which was the first American film to run four reels, clearly foretold his epic bent.

As the Kentucky-born son of a Confederate colonel, Griffith passionately felt that the South had been wronged severely after the Civil War. He believed that the white population had been abused and exploited by Northern carpetbaggers and Southern scalawags who had incited the emancipated Negroes, and he wanted to make a film on this theme.

In 1914, when he went to California to make movies for the Mutual company, he resolved to fulfill this ambition with a full-scale masterwork. He took for his story a novel entitled "The Clansman," by the Rev. Thomas Dixon Jr., a former Baptist minister from North Carolina, upon which a highly fustian and unsuccessful stage melodrama had been based in 1906, and set to work writing a scenario.

The film was supposed to cost $40,000 — a shockingly high figure in those days—but expenses mounted and passed this figure during filming in the late summer and fall of 1914. Griffith sought more funds. Meantime, scuttlebutt spread in the young community of Hollywood that the film was to be of unexampled magnitude. In its large cast were several actors who had previously worked for Griffith—Henry B. Walthall, George Siegmann, Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Sam de Grasse and Lillian Gish. The elaborateness of the project made its financing difficult. A special company, significantly called Epoch, was formed by Griffith, novelist Dixon and Mutual president Harry Aitken when directors of the Mutual company would not take on the great cost.

In a book to be published this spring, called "The Birth of a Nation Story," Roy Aitken, a brother of Harry and onetime secretary of Epoch, pins down the disputed cost of the film at $110,000—$59,000 raised by the Aitkens and the remainder by Griffith himself (through assorted sales of stock in a separate company of his own). The complexity and confusion of this financing is interesting today simply because it demonstrates the total lack of experience with and skill for anything of this sort in the comparatively modest movie industry of the time.

"DOCUMENTARY"—President Lincoln signs a pardon for a woman's son, a Union soldier, caught sleeping on his post.

Even before the opening in Los Angeles, word got around that Griffith had an unprecedented film. The shooting of battle scenes with hundreds of extras and the knowledge that the drama dealt with the postwar rise of the Ku Klux Klan had alerted expectations. The film was rumored by some to be a sensation, by others it was described as "a dirty nigger picture." At that point, it was still known as "The Clansman."

ON the night it opened—Feb. 8, 1915—Clune's Auditorium, a 2,600-seat showplace in Los Angeles (later the home of the Los Angeles Philharmonic), was packed. There was a heavy police detachment outside and inside to guard against a threatened demonstration. It was by far the most elaborate and exciting opening a motion picture had ever had—another "first" for this precedent-shattering picture and, indeed, the launching of the later, familiar "Hollywood premiere."

The audience's reaction was terrific. People were held spellbound and came away shocked and excited, exhilarated and dazed. It was notable that the drama not only encompassed an extraordinary sweep of time and events, but was made in a style that gave an unusual sense of immediacy and momentum to the inflammatory material it contained.

Beginning with the outbreak of the Civil War, it told, in highly melodramatic fashion, of the defeat, and then the recovery, of the South in terms of the relations of two families, the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania. The first half (taken from another Dixon novel called "The Leopard's Spots") described the outbreak of the war; the departure of the Cameron and Stoneman boys (who are friends) to join, respectively, the armies of the Confederacy and the Union; the bloody battles that followed; difficulties on the Southern home front; the slow defeat; the surrender at Appomattox; and the assassination of Lincoln.

The second half concerned the Reconstruction. The eldest Cameron son—the Little Colonel, a hero in the war—was in love with Elsie Stoneman, whose father was a Senator and an impassioned champion of Negro equality. (The character was clearly modeled after Thaddeus Stevens.) Here the course of the drama ran from a lurid presentation of the arrogance of the freed slaves, urged on by carpetbaggers and scalawags, and the humiliation and violation of the whites, to the founding of the Ku Klux Klan by the Little Colonel and the triumph of that organization in saving members of both families from Negro terrorists and bringing order to the South.

High points were an attempted rape of the Cameron daughter by a renegade Negro and scenes of the rising and riding of the Klan.

Audiences were bowled over by the film's pictorial sweep, by its arrangements of personal involvements, by what was much later designated its "documentary quality." Even today, on seeing it, one is struck by the vividness with which Griffith made the viewer sense the eruption of a Civil War battle, the reek of carnage on a smoking battlefield, the dismal aspects of postwar desolation, the bold appearance of the charging Ku Klux Klan.

A decade after it was made, the great Soviet film director, Sergei Eisenstein, studied this film as an incomparable model of cinema technique while preparing for his classic "Potemkin." He found in Griffith's style the origins of the basic method of cinema cutting or editing to which he gave the name "montage." And he later wrote that, for him and for other of the young Soviet directors of the nineteen-twenties, Griffith's film was "a revelation."

After the Los Angeles opening, the picture was brought East. Dixon took it to the White House to show to his old college companion, President Woodrow Wilson. Wilson, who was Southern-born, was profoundly stirred. "It is like writing history with lightning," he is reported to have said — perhaps the strongest endorsement any film has ever had. It was also shown to members of the Supreme Court and Congress.

At a preview showing in New York, Dixon is alleged to have been so stimulated that he leaped to his feet and shouted to Griffith at the climax, "'The Clansman' is too tame! Let's call it 'The Birth of a Nation'!" That is the legend about how it got its name.

When the film opened at the Liberty Theater in New York on March 3, its reputation had preceded it. The N.A.A.C.P., supported by such vocal citizens as Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, Lillian D. Wald and Oswald Garrison Villard, protested to Mayor John Purroy Mitchel that the film was an insult to the Negro race and that it would do untold damage. They besought the Mayor either to ban the picture or to order cuts. The Mayor did not stop the showing, but he had some scenes trimmed.

Openings at the Illinois Theater in Chicago and the Tremont in Boston followed within a few days after the New York opening. In each of these cities there were protests by the N.A.A.C.P. and by distinguished citizens. In Boston, there were angry demonstrations on the lawn of the State House and a violent disturbance in the lobby of the theater on opening night.

There was little journalistic criticism of motion pictures at that time. (The notice of the opening of the film in The Times was little more than a four-paragraph news report.) But a scathing denunciation of the movie was carried in the March 20 issue of The New Republic. It was written by Francis Hackett, the drama critic of that publication, and it crystallized the attitude of liberals throughout the country.

OLD FRIENDS—A partial listing of the cast of the Griffith epic. Several—Gish, Marsh and Walthall, among them—had worked for D. W. before.

Bitterly attacking Dixon as a "yellow clergyman" because he "recklessly distorts Negro crimes to influence the ignorant and the credulous," Hackett quoted subtitles from the movie to illustrate his points:

"Dixon shows the revolting process by which 'the white South is crushed under the heel of the black South.' 'Sowing the wind,' he calls it. On the one hand, we have 'the poor bruised heart' of the white South, on the other 'the new citizens inflamed by the growing sense of power.'

"We see Negroes shoving white men off the sidewalks, Negroes quitting work to dance, Negroes beating a crippled old white patriarch, Negroes slinging up 'faithful colored servants' and flogging them till they drop. . . . And we see continually in the background the white Southerner 'in agony of soul over the degradation and ruin of his people.' To hoochy-koochy music [there was a special musical score composed by Joseph Carl Breil], we see the long pursuit of the innocent white girl by the lust-maddened Negro and we see her fling herself to death from the precipice, carrying her honor through 'the opal gates of death.'

"Having painted this insanely apprehensive picture of an unbridled, bestial, horrible race, relieved only by a few touches of low comedy, 'the grim reaping begins.' We see the operations of the Ku Klux Klan, 'the organization that saved the South from the anarchy of black rule.' We see Federals and Confederates uniting in a holy war 'in defense of their Aryan birthright'. . . . The drama ends with a suggestion of 'Lincoln's solution' — back to Liberia — and then, if you please, with a representation of Jesus Christ in 'the halls of brotherly love'!"

As a consequence of Hackett's criticism and the intensive opposition of the N.A.A.C.P., which issued a special edition of its publication, The Crisis, containing denunciations from many distinguished humanitarians, including Jane Addams and Dr. Charles W. Eliot, the film was banned in many cities —Newark, Atlantic City and St. Louis, among others. Gov. James M. Cox of Ohio ordered that it not be shown in that state during the First World War. It was also banned, at various times, in Kansas and West Virginia.

Throughout the South it was shown and viewed with enthusiasm. The sort of public response it met there was described by John Hammond Moore, in a document published recently in the Proceedings of the South Carolina Historical Association:

"Beginning in October, 1915, when Spartanburg was the first community in this state to see the motion picture . . . thousands of South Carolinians thrilled to [its] stirring scenes. Men who once wore gray uniforms, white sheets and red shirts wept, yelled, whooped, cheered and on one occasion even shot up the screen in a valiant effort to save Flora Cameron from her black pursuer. A carnival atmosphere reigned whenever this movie came to town."

A favorite and effective stunt to whip up excitement was to have a troop of horsemen dressed in the white sheets of the Ku Klux Klan ride through towns on their hooded horses in advance of showings of the film.

THERE can't be much doubt that the excitement generated by this film had a great deal to do with the inauguration of the modern Klan. The original Klan, which had come into being in 1866, was officially ordered disbanded by its Grand Wizard, Gen. Nathan Bedford Forrest, the Confederate cavalry leader, in 1869, and was filed away as an incident in postwar history after a series of searching Congressional investigations in 1870-1872.

But in 1915 a man named William J. Simmons, an ex-minister and former staff employe of the fraternal society, the Woodmen of the World, eager to have an organization of his own, took his cue from the enthusiasm in the South for "The Birth of a Nation." He assembled a group of followers and, on Thanksgiving night in 1915, presided at the first meeting of the new organization on top of Stone Mountain outside Atlanta. A fiery cross was burned. Simmons had wanted to call his organization the Clansmen, but he found there was another organization registered under that name. So he picked up the original name, embroidered on it and called his organization the Invisible Empire, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan.

In his book on the K.K.K., John Moffatt Mecklin says:

"It will doubtless always be a matter of debate whether the influence of 'The Birth of a Nation' was predominantly good or bad. It did undoubtedly make many aware for the first time of the wickedness and injustice of the Reconstruction period. The weakness of this picture does not lie so much in its exaggeration of the evils of Negro domination in the South . . . as in the fact that it shows the Klan only in its best aspects and before it had been made use of by evil men for the perpetuation of outrages even worse than those it was designed to eliminate."

THE movie continued as a huge success all through the First World War, not only in this country but around the world. It earned Griffith a fortune—though he lost much of it on his next film, an even larger and more expensive project entitled "Intolerance." This was his answer to those who had challenged "The Birth of a Nation" as an example of precisely that quality which the new film condemned. Griffith always felt that "The Birth of a Nation" told the truth about the South.

In recent years, prints of the film have been distributed —mainly for college and film society showings — but the N.A.A.C.P. still maintains an official objection to it. Even so, there will be anniversary showings this year—tomorrow, in Los Angeles, and this spring at the Museum of Modern Art in New York, plus several abroad.

While Griffith made many other pictures, and was the undisputed dean of American film directors in the nineteen-twenties, after that decade his fortunes waned. When he died in 1948, he was an impoverished and all but forgotten man. So, too, was Thomas Dixon, when he died in 1946. And Harry Aitken, who also made a fortune from the picture, lost it in later deals, faded from the scene as a film industrialist and died poor nine years ago.

Death Gun Linked to Klansman

By ARTHUR EVERETT

HAYNEVILLE, Ala. (AP) — A young Alabama Ku Klux Klansman on trial in the night-rider slaying of Viola Liuzzo was linked in FBI testimony the head of Mrs. Liuzzo was fired from this pistol?"

"Yes," the FBI ballistics expert said.

With his testimony, the trial recessed overnight.

Under cross-examination by defense attorney Matt H. Murphy, the FBI informer said Wilkins and Eaton both emptied their revolvers as their car sped past Mrs. Liuzzo's auto in the darkness on U.S. 80 near here.

Later, there was this exchange:

Q. How many shots did you fire, Mr. Rowe?

A. Not any.

Rowe was arrested when the other three men were taken into custody the day after the slaying and he was for a time represented by Murphy until charges were dropped.

Murphy tried to depict the informer as a man who was a troublemaker, trying to involve his fellow Klansmen so he could report them to the FBI, violating his Klan secrecy oath.

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION, Thursday, May 6, 1965

Some of the Ill Will Got Out of Hand

Before 1,700 of the nation's editors accept Gov. George Wallace's invitation to come to Alabama next month to see for themselves whether "fear stalks the streets" or whether "ill will abounds," they might get a briefing from reporters and photographers who have visited there in the line of duty without benefit of the governor's invitation.

Veteran Alabama newsman Ray Jenkins only recently was reminiscing about battle injuries suffered by reporters and photographers in Alabama. If the press has felt unwelcome in Alabama, Jenkins' casualty list suggests that the impression is not without foundation. Without even going to the files, said Jenkins, he could recall these incidents:

● In 1961, a photographer was jabbed with a night stick and forced to give up his film when he attempted to photograph a posse of specially deputized horsemen who came into Montgomery from nearby counties.

● In 1962, during the Freedom Rides, a photographer was clubbed to the ground with lead pipes at the city bus terminal in Birmingham.

● In Montgomery the next day, a mob mauled a reporter and a photographer from Life and an ABC cameraman—and a newspaper office boy who just happened to be around the bus station.

● Two days later, a car driven by a writer for Esquire was overturned and burned in the presence of city, state and federal law enforcement officers.

● During an early period of racial tension in Selma, a reporter was manhandled but escaped serious injury when a policeman recognized him as a native of Selma.

● At Notasulga last year, a free-lance photographer was hurled off a bus and his camera was smashed.

● Last February at Marion, several cameramen were roughed up and their equipment was destroyed. An NBC-TV reporter was hospitalized with a head wound that required six stitches.

Jenkins points out that lawmen witnessed some of these attacks and were identified as participants in several others. Punishment of attackers is rare.

After the Marion incident, Wallace got complaints from professional news organizations. The governor made a brief investigation and then counterpunched with the charge that the president of the Alabama Press Association had "besmirched the good name of Alabama."

But as anyone who has covered racial conflict knows, the simple fact is that mobs don't like their activities reported and photographed. So it is common—indeed, standard—for them to direct their hostility at newsmen.

Since the editors will be visiting at Wallace's invitation, it shouldn't be necessary for them to use an old race-beat trick of shedding coats and ties in order to blend with the crowd. However, it might not be a bad idea to bring along a "Claude M. Sitton Memorial" notebook, just in case. That, explains Jenkins, is a sawed-off notebook which can be concealed, when the going gets rough, in the palm of the hand.

2 Mississippi Patrolmen Fired For KKK Ties

New Orleans (AP) — Two Mississippi highway patrolmen in southern areas have been fired for being members of the Ku Klux Klan, it was reported Saturday.

The Times-Picayune, in a dispatch from its Jackson, Miss., bureau, said the dismissals were part of a state patrol crackdown on klan infiltration.

The dispatch said Gov. Paul Johnson had warned patrolmen that any officer taking part in Klan activities wil be fired immediately.

Patrol Chief A. D. Morgan said "There are no Klansmen in the highway patrol now."

Morgan confirmed that a directive had been issued to patrolmen pointing out that the KKK is on the subversive list of the House Un-American Activities Committee and the attorney general's office.

Membership in a subversive organization in Mississippi violates the oath of office required by any public official.

Wednesday to the murder weapon.

The defendant, Collie Leroy Wilkins Jr., 21, had been described by an FBI informer as using a .38-caliber revolver to shoot Mrs. Liuzzo, a white civil rights demonstrator from Detroit and the mother of five children.

After the March 25 slaying the FBI recovered the gun described by FBI informer Gary Thomas Rowe Jr. and three spent bullets, taken from the victim's car. These were offered in evidence and Marion Williams, a bald, bespectacled expert from Washington, testified that he tested the gun and compared the results with the death bullet.

Williams then told the rural jury of white men: "In my opinion, the three bullets I have just identified were fired from this same gun." One of the bullets hit Mrs. Liuzzo above the left ear.

Circuit Solicitor Arthur E. Gamble Jr., the prosecutor, asked Williams: "Is it your opinion that the bullet found in Earlier, the FBI-planted Klansman, Rowe, 34, denied from the witness stand that he had been bribed to try to frame Wilkins.

"How much money were you offered to come here and testify?" he was asked.

"Absolutely nothing," replied Rowe, a former bartender who said he joined the Klan five years ago at the behest of the FBI.

A succession of FBI agents took the stand after Rowe ended his testimony as the star prosecution witness. He testified Tuesday that Wilkins fired the fatal shot from a speeding car occupied by the two of them and two other Klansmen, Eugene Thomas, 42, and William O. Eaton, 41, both facing trial on murder charges.

Rowe had said Thomas, driving the car, passed his gun back to Wilkins at the defendant's request. This was the gun Wilkins fired, Rowe said. FBI agents testified they recovered the gun, which tests showed fired the death shot, from Thomas' home.

Rowe said he also had a gun.

Q. Where was the gun you had?

A. In my hand.

Q. It was loaded?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you didn't do anything to prevent the firing of a shot, did you?

A. No, sir. I didn't know there was going to be a shot fired until it was fired.

who broke the color line at an all-white school.

"AT ONE Klan meeting," Lardner reports, "a St. Johns County deputy sheriff stepped up with a portable microphone so the audience could hear the speaker vent his hatred better. Sheriff L. O. Davis, a solid segregationist who couldn't lose an election if he tried, has denied that he is a Klansman but has made little effort to hide his sympathies."

Federal Judge Bryan Simpson blasted the sheriff for his treatment of civil rights demonstrators at the county jail and also criticized Davis's special deputies, who included Halsted R. ("Hoss") Manucy and members of Manucy's Ancient City Hunting Club.

Lardner reports: "A convicted moonshiner sentenced to three years in prison in 1959, Manucy has denied that his club is 'tied to the Klan,' though he thinks it's a 'wonderful organization.' The FBI, however, refers to him as the local 'Cyclops,' or Klavern head."

WHILE KLAN members claim 3000 members in northeastern Florida alone, a top FBI agent gave a "rough estimate" of 500 dues-paying ($10 each) Klansmen in all northern Florida.

From Baton Rouge, newsman Wagner reports that the reactivation of the Klan in Louisiana dates from a well-publicized cross-burning ceremony at Black Lake in Red River Parish (county) Feb. 15.

"There have been periods of seeming inactivity," Wagner reports, "but for the most part the Klan has spread like wildfire. In recent months, Klan rallies have been held throughout most of the northern part of the state. Much of the southern part of the state has a large Catholic population and, in these areas the Klan has little influence.

"IT'S CONVENIENT to discuss the Ku Klux Klan as if it were a single, monolithic organization," says Wagner. "In reality, in Louisiana there are many Ku Klux Klans, most of them competing with one another.

"There is the 'Texas Klan,' the 'Razorback Klan' from Arkansas, 'Oklahoma Klan,' 'Mississippi Klan,' 'Alabama Klan' and the home-grown 'Louisiana Klan,' a highly secretive and belligerent organization.

"For public rallies, the Klansmen wear their robes and hoods, burn one or two big crosses and listen to a 'preacher' read a few words from the Bible. Essentially, a rally is a publicity gimmick.

"THE SERIOUS business of the Klan is normally conducted in an isolated hideaway, typically an old barn or an abandoned house. On these occasions, the robes and hoods are frequently dispensed with.

"A characteristic of the Louisiana movement is the emphasis upon arms and ammunition. Many Klan units are heavily armed every time they hold a meeting."

"A basic part of the Klan strategy is to infiltrate the sheriff's department and the police force. In some places, the strategy apparently has been successful. The reactivation of the Klan has been accompanied by bombings, beatings, intimidation and occasionally rumors about the mysterious murder of a Negro."

Wagner, a newsman for WDSU-TV in New Orleans, has spent months investigating the Klan. In April, he was caught by Klan guards, flogged with a gun belt as he looked into the barrel of an automatic and released with a warning that he would be killed if he reported what had happened to him.

"Their hooded . . . appearances at ritualistic rallies were almost comic."

LAST WEEK in Philadelphia, Miss., where the three civil rights workers vanished, the town was flooded with Klan recruiting posters boasting that "the KKK has twice saved this Nation from destruction, as history clearly records."

History clearly records that the original Klan was started at Pulaski, Tenn., in 1865 as a social club and that the hoods and ritual were a sort of joke. But it branched out quickly into a terrorist organization against Reconstruction government and helped return the South to white political control by intimidation and worse.

It lapsed into dormancy when whites, through legal expedients that have begun to crumble only in the recent years of this century, closed the polls and political office to Negroes. In the 1920s, it was revived with a broad range of prejudices that included Negroes, Jews, Catholics and aliens.

It was strongest in Colorado, Indiana, Ohio, Oregon, Texas, West Virginia and Alabama and, at its zenith, controlled many public offices. But again it seemed to die out.

Following World War II, the Klan had a small revival after the Supreme Court outlawed white primaries and segregation in interstate travel. Sen Theodore Bilbo (D-Miss.) called on "every red-blooded Anglo-Saxon man "to keep Negroes from the polls by any means."

Today, sources that have infiltrated the Klan discount the flamboyant estimates of membership made by Klansmen. These sources estimate the membership at about 75,000 at most.

But the Klan is recruiting intensely, not only in the South but in West Virginia, Indiana, Minnesota, Iowa, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and California. Klan material is flooding some areas of Indiana, Wisconsin and Maryland where segregationist Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama ran in recent primaries.

SIX YEARS ago, the Klan was humiliated in North Carolina when a rally at Maxton was raided by irate, whooping Lumbee Indians and the Klansmen fled with robes flying. But today, the Klan has been revived in the state and Grand Dragon Robert Jones has 36 Klaverns with an estimated 7000 members.

Mississippi, too, was Klanless until recently. The White Citizens Councils had boasted that the Klan was unnecessary because they would prevent any desegregation. But now Mississippians are hearing such appeals as this leaflet distributed in Jackson last week:

"If we don't win in the next eight months, we're all destined for Communist slavery and your wives and daughters will be chattels in Mongolian and African brothels . . .

"Absolutely refuse to register or give up your arms . . . Stock up on rifles, shotguns and pistols, all of standard make, and lots of ammunition . . .

"Form an organization with next door neighbors but wear distinguishing marks, such as caps of the same color, so you won't be firing at your own people."

here for unique and probably valid fears. But to them the only, and to many the sufficient, reply is contained in the slogan which is, in truth, much more than a slogan: "the time is now." Beyond this is the belief of many in the civil rights movement that neither the region nor the nation at large is entitled to tranquility while racial injustice lingers over the land.

Moreover, the country must not lose sight of the unassailable legal and moral right of the students to be where they are and to work for the aims they seek. Nor should it overlook the orderly, careful, and responsible manner in which they have made their plans and are carrying them out, and their deliberate efforts to avoid provocation of local whites.

Mississippi is not only beset by the invasion of the students. The purpose of its new laws for tighter law enforcement would not be understood if notice were not taken of the fact that the monolithic control excercised over the white society of the state by the Citizens Council has been broken. The Ku Klux Klan has not until recent months been important in Mississippi. It is now, with numbers estimated as high as 90,000, though this claim of the Klan is not corroborated by observers. Sharing the extremity with it is a spreading organization, the Americans for the Preservation of the White Race. Whether the men and groups who have controlled and in some measure disciplined the state prior to this year have still the authority to do so is a question on whose answer the lives and safety of a good many people may depend.

Not, of course, have the Citizens Council and the state and local authorities in the past been careful of Negroes' lives. But the case has been that whenever the civil rights movement in Mississippi has focussed on a large campaign, the authorities have enforced a disciplined response which has kept the lynchers and the bombers in the background. This was the experience during the Freedom Ride in 1961, the Greenwood voter registration drive of 1963, and the tensions in Jackson after the assassination of Medgar Evers. Only at the University of Mississippi in 1962, and then for calculated reasons of state, was the mob unleashed. It may no longer be on leash.

No Southerner can speak of Mississippi except as a part of himself, and he as part of it. Yet Mississippi, taken as a whole, and allowing for its many local variations (but even they are less significant than in other states), is not like any place else. For here every datum of economics and every fact and twist of history have conspired to keep its white people deeply and ofttimes harshly resistant to change and its Negro people ill-equipped for it.

REGIONAL OFFICE

OFFICE OF
THE REGIONAL DIRECTOR

September 15, 1967

FOR YOUR INFORMATION

The U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare takes pride in being known as "the Department of the people." Its work is to assist in providing opportunities wherein each citizen can find the full expression of his skills.

Toward this goal, the Regional Office of the Department, in Atlanta, serves a six-state region through numerous programs. In so doing, a number of staff members address various organizations, informing them of different areas of activity and responding to inquiries so that citizens may have a clear understanding of how "the Department of the people" is engaged.

The Department's work embraces seven general divisions--the Administration on Aging, the Food and Drug Administration, the Office of Education, the Public Health Service, the Social Security Administration, the Vocational Rehabilitation Administration, and the Welfare Administration.

It occurred to me that your program chairman may wish to have well-equipped resource personnel here address your group on subjects of your interest.

If so, I shall be happy to assist you in making such plans. As a matter of convenience, I would suggest that you write me, specifying the subjects your group is interested in, and giving me alternative dates for such presentations. Many staff members travel frequently, and I would suggest that you contact me well in advance.

Sincerely,

Norman Shavin

BY-LAWS OF H.O.P.E., INC.
Help Our Public Education
Adopted October 9, 1959, by the Board of Directors

Section 1. Name

The name of the organization is H.O.P.E., Inc. (Help Our Public Education)

Section 2. Principles and Objectives

"HOPE, Help Our Public Education, Inc." was incorporated in December 1958 in Fulton County on the petition of 17 citizens of the State of Georgia. These men and women felt the need for an organization whose specific purpose would be to give direction, guidance, information, and program to all citizens of Georgia who desire to continue the operation of and improve the public schools of this State.

Section 3. Supporters

All persons residing in Georgia who indicate their agreement to the objectives of HOPE, Inc., as stated in Section 2.

Section 3-A Board of Directors

Section 4. Officers, their election and term of office

A. The officers shall be the ones listed in the charter. These officers are (1) Chairman of the Board of Directors, (2) Vice-chairman, (3) Secretary, (4) Treasurer.
   These four officers shall be elected to terms of one year by a majority of the Board of Directors.
   The vice-chairman may serve as a committee chairman, but in this case shall be limited to one vote on the Executive Committee.
B. The Board of Directors may remove an officer by majority vote.
C. In the event an officer resigns, or for any reason is unable to serve, the chairman shall fill the vacancy by appointment until the next Board meeting.

Section 5. Duties of Officers

A. Chairman
   The chairman shall preside over all meetings of the Board of Directors, Executive Committee, and open meetings of HOPE, Inc. sponsored by either, or both groups; coordinate the activities of the various standing and temporary committees of the Board and Executive Committee; and such other duties as the Board of Directors may direct.
B. Vice-chairman
   The vice-chairman shall assist the chairman, and shall take his place in his absence.
C. Secretary
   The secretary shall keep a record of all meetings of the Board of Directors and the Executive Committee, and shall perform other duties as may be delegated
D. Treasurer
   The treasurer shall be responsible for receiving all monies of the Corporation, and for their accurate receipt and disbursements.

Section 6. Meetings

A. The Board of Directors shall meet quarterly: on the second Thursday of January, April, July and October. Special meetings may be called by the chairman, or by five members of the Board.

B. The frequency and time of the Executive Committee meetings shall be left to its discretion, provided that the interval between meetings shall not exceed two months.

C. Committee and sub-committee meetings shall be held as needed, at the discretion of the responsible persons involved.

Section 7. Executive Committee

A. The Executive Committee shall consist of the four officers of the Board, plus the heads of the standing committees.
The heads of such committees shall be appointed by and serve at the pleasure of the chairman of the Board of Directors, from the membership of said Board.

B. The duties of the Executive Committee shall be to transact business between the quarterly meetings of the Board; to approve plans of standing committee chairmen; to fill vacancies; and to fulfil such other duties as directed by the Board.

C. A quorum of the Executive Committee shall be five.

Section 8. Standing Committees

The standing committees shall be the ones listed below:
1) Operations, 2) Legal, 3) Public Information, 4) Special Projects, 5) State Organization.

Section 9. Parlimentary Procedure

Roberts Rules of Order, revised, shall govern all meetings, when the rules are not inconsistent with these By-laws.

Section 10. Amendments

These By-laws may be amended at any meeting of the Board of Directors upon a two-thirds vote of those in attendance, provided five days written notice has been given on the proposed amendments.

Section 11.

(Duties of standing committees shall be determined by committee chairmen, subject to the approval of the Board of Directors. To allow for flexibility the duties, when approved, shall then be attached as an addendum to the By-laws.)

Section 12. Board Members from Chapters

Each chapter shall select a director and alternates, who shall be approved by majority vote of the Board.

Section 13. Advisory Board

The Advisory Board shall be appointed upon the recommendations of the Board of Directors, or Executive Committee, or chapter.

NOTES FROM PUBLIC AFFAIRS SEMINAR IN WASHINGTON, D. C., YWCA
MAY, 1953

Mrs. Alfred Mudge, Chairman, National Public Affairs Committee, and Mrs. Harbison, Chairman, Leadership Services Committee

Problems discussed concerned legislative programs and how to work effectively on these issues in local communities, role of citizen in making public opinion felt. Issues around civil liberties. In this connection, Mr. William Welch, Legislative assistant to Senator Lehman, spoke specifically in reference to coming Supreme Court decision on the cases involving segregation in the elementary and secondary schools. He suggested some preparatory work and steps that might be taken.

Those who are in communities where groups are not already thinking about what to do when the decision comes down might start planning in order to rally community spirit behind the decision:

1. Rally as many community forces as you can behind you. For instance, try to use Korean veterans who may be willing to speak of satisfactory experiences they have had in integrated army units--living with soldiers of all nations, races, and creeds.

2. Be prepared to issue a positive statement as to what this decision means in your community. Don't let the opposition get the jump on you about this.

3. Make a detailed study of what a dual educational system means in your community. It makes a difference of $7 to $8 million in the District of Columbia to run a dual system. Find out what integration would mean in terms of tax savings.

4. Have some group prepare material to give to teachers and school administrators on intergroup relations--either specially prepared booklets or those that are already prepared.

5. Sponsor volunteer workshops of students or teachers where they can come together and discuss some of the problems that would be involved. Discuss the method of moving from one sort of setup to another. The group could prepare and submit to the Board of Education plans for how to move from a segregated to a non-segregated system; as to how pupils may be integrated; and how teachers and pupils may be prepared to meet the change.

6. Be ready to back up a public official immediately when he makes a courageous stand.

7. Work to start the process of integration where something can be done immediately, such as in the daily vacation Bible school, or in integrated playgrounds, or inter-school athletics, where advancement can be made more rapidly. A gain in one field supports and hastens gain in another. A loss in one field slows down gain in another. All these things are tied together.

8. Where schools are not segregated, work to create a climate of opinion which in time can sweep the country.

(Note to planners: It need hardly be said that when the evaluation sheets came in, Mr. Welch was felt by an overwhelming majority to have made some of the greatest contributions to the Seminar. There must be people in your community, the NAACP, a representative of the Mayor's committee on intergroup relations who could be equally helpful. Both presentations and the following discussion emphasized the need to create a climate of good will, which, Congressman Brooks Hays emphasized the night before, must bind nations to nations and individuals to one another.)

MEMORANDUM

July 13, 1953

TO: Myles Horton, Director, Highlander Folk School

FROM: Helen E. Amerman, Committee on Education, Training and Research in Race Relations, University of Chicago

RE: Problems in the Orderly Transition from a Segregated to an Unsegregated Form of Public Education in the South.

I. The Crux of the Problem. It is important in planning the transition to unsegregated schools to remember that simple desegregation will not necessarily lead to integration. (In the non-segregated schools of the North, there are many cases of minority children's being socially isolated almost as effectively as though formal segregation prevailed.) Since your workshops are based on the assumption that desegregation will soon be accomplished by court decision, I would suggest that you address yourselves chiefly to the problems of preparing for and eventually operating a racially integrated school system.

By "integrated" I refer to a situation in which the races are not in a dominant-subordinate relation, but rather both enter on a basis of equality. Under such an arrangement each person should be able to achieve a place for himself on the basis of merit without regard to race. (Of course, under present conditions merit is often not the deciding factor even within a racial group; so we should not be too disillusioned if we do not immediately achieve the supremacy of merit--at least we can guard against the irrational use of race as a criterion.)

I offer you the balance of this letter in greatest humility as one with only the most limited first-hand experience with the problems of the South. However, my theoretical training in the social sciences and my experiences with intergroup relations in the North lead me to believe that a discussion of the following problems might prove fruitful for your group.

II. The Preparatory Phase

A. How can we best prepare public opinion in the community for acceptance of the change?

I would be inclined to counsel against a concerted campaign for acceptance using the media of mass communication (which, being relatively unfocused, seems more likely to crystalize opposition), in favor of a well-organized machinery for (1) spotting and meeting opposition, (2) allaying rumors, (3) identifying problems of change-over and working for their solution, and (4) interpreting the solution to those who play an important role in forming public opinion.

There might be a nucleus of community leaders who concerned themselves with such problems as the following:

1. a. How well organized is the opposition (if any) to integration in the schools?
   b. Who is opposing integration?
   c. What are their basic motivations?
   d. What issues and arguments have they brought forth?
   e. Where do these people fit into the power structure of the community?
   f. To whom are they appealing?
   g. In the light of answers to the above, what is the best way to meet this opposition?

2. a. What rumors about integration in the schools are current?
   b. Among what groups is each rumor current?
   c. What is the truth of the question?
   d. What channels of communication exist (or need to be established) to provide correct information as a substitute for the rumor?
   e. Does this rumor suggest any problem which needs solution?

3. a. What problems are created by the change-over?
   b. In whose province does the solution of each problem fall?
   c. Are the parties responsible for solving the problem aware of its existence and doing something about it? If not, how can they be activated?
   d. What can the leadership group do to facilitate matters?

The composition of your group is itself suggestive of the community figures who should be included in such a nucleus group. In each case the choice would have to be made in terms of local specifics. Perhaps you would want to discuss the more likely categories of leadership, criteria for selection, mode of operation, etc.

B. What preparations should the school personnel (including the board of education, state and county educational officials, etc.) be making?

This is a professional question which must be answered by the educators themselves, but community leaders may certainly urge diplomatically that the realities of change be anticipated and prepared for. Such administrative questions as the following will be involved:

1. How are school boundaries to be redrawn?

2. On what basis are faculties to be consolidated? (What about tenure, seniority, professional qualifications?)

3. What, if any, preparation and interpretation is to be given children and their parents before the separate systems merge?

4. What provisions will be made for personnel displaced by the change?

5. What remedial measures can be developed to compensate for previous differentials in Negro and white educational standards which will be highlighted by day-to-day scholastic competition in the unsegregated classroom?

6. Where shall responsibility for orderly change be placed? This seems to create a dilemma: whether a special administrative post shall be created for the purpose or whether to risk the danger of "everybody's business becoming nobody's business." The first choice, while making for an efficient concern with all aspects of the problem, opens the door to scape-goating and lack of responsible cooperation from all involved; the coordinator of integration can easily be ground between the millstones of opposing factions and the program failure be blamed on him. The second alternative might be met by the superintendent's requiring that each of his subordinates give explicit attention to integration as it affects his particular sphere of authority, and by the use of advisory committees made up of a representative cross-section of the school personnel.

7. How can school personnel and community leaders function together most efficiently in the effort to make the change-over harmonious?

8. What phases of integration can be started prior to the court decision (e.g., joint meetings or mergers of segregated unions, professional societies; system-wide faculty meetings and committees; etc.), either formally or informally?

Your group can undoubtedly add to this list of questions.

C. What kinds of problems are likely to accompany the change, how can they be minimized, how should they be handled?

I would suggest the following; your group will undoubtedly think of others and have further ideas about these:

1. There is likely to be great self-consciousness at first on the part of everyone concerned, and the actions of others will be subject to unusually careful scrutiny and analysis. This state of mind is fertile soil for misunderstanding and tension. On the other hand, as the novelty wears off, new patterns of behavior will become more or less automatic and tension should ease. Some attention should be given to keeping misunderstanding and tension at a minimum and to the new patterns of behavior which are to be adopted.

2. It seems probable that some members of both races will enter into the change-over with a sense of hostility--because they suffer a change for the worse in the educational situation (e.g., transfer to a less attractive school, larger classes, etc.), or because of bitterness that their rights have been so long denied.

3. Many problems normal to school life will be interpreted as signs of interracial tension, whereas race is merely an incidental factor (e.g., misunderstandings, discipline problems, differences of persuasion, etc.).

4. Where the difference in standards between the white and Negro schools of a system has been great, the Negro pupils will probably show at a disadvantage continually, leading to feelings of inferiority, frustration, etc., and also to difficulties in teaching pupils with such a wide range of preparation.

5. There will be many situations in which the pattern of acceptable behavior must be redefined. For example,

   a. How are pupils to be seated?
   b. How much "fraternization" will be permissible?
   c. What about such school activities as
      (1) athletics, including swimming
      (2) use of shower rooms
      (3) dancing
      (4) dramatics
      (5) use of school lunch rooms
      (6) social activities in connection with the school program
      (7) field trips
      (8) student government and school clubs
   d. How will PTA activities be affected?
   e. How will unions and professional groups of educators be affected?

6. In some schools located in segregated Negro residential areas there will be few perceptible changes. If the community has been looking forward to important improvements as a result of the court decision, there may be disillusionment and bitterness.

7. Probably many school personnel will be reluctant to accept assignments in situations where they will be working with colleagues and/or pupils who are predominantly of the other race. How can they be encouraged to try the new experiences?

8. It would seem likely that subversive organizations would be on the alert to capitalize on the uncertainties, insecurities, misunderstandings, rumors, and tensions of such an adjustment period to undermine confidence in the schools and stir up dissention in the community. How can they be forestalled?

III. The Change-Over. I think most of us visualize as our goal not only racial integration within the schools, but the most effective educational program possible--in America that being necessarily a democratically oriented one. Undoubtedly, the more successful a school system has been in implementing democracy and sound pedagogy prior to desegregation, the more effectively it can weather the strains of the change-over and accomplish genuine integration. For example, the teacher who is already accustomed to safeguarding the human dignity of each pupil and is sensitive to his psychological needs will be most likely to preside over the successful integration of pupils of both races in her new class. In a PTA where members of one race have not been able to work together effectively, there is little hope that members of another race will be incorporated harmoniously.

This suggests that in the interim period--at all levels and in every aspect--the educational program must be strengthened and morale brought to its highest point in order to accomplish the harmonious change-over.

IV. What Can Be Done in the Event That the Court's Decision is Negative?

V. Caution. There is a great temptation to delay planning while a search is made for other instances of successful integration.

A. Few of these have been written up in a style to be of value to other schools.

B. These can be only suggestive since local circumstances vary.

C. These cases are either schools in Northern communities or on army posts in the South. In the former, the fact that the change did not take place against a background of a social structure permeated by legal and customary segregation for generations back makes desegregation a much simpler problem. In the latter, it seems probable that the social psychology of an army post, with its ever-changing population and the dominant tradition of army discipline would differ considerably from that of the average Southern community.

D. With the implementation of the hoped-for court decision, we shall be entering a new era of relations between the races. Those of us who are working to make the change both harmonious and effective must shift our point of view somewhat, from fighting for a right to consolidating the peace. Without forsaking our insistence upon equitable treatment, we must enable the former resisters to cooperate gracefully in compliance with the court decision. In the period of uncertainty and groping for new patterns we must maintain a rational, calming influence. Achieving harmonious integration, like "winning the peace," will be infinitely more difficult than winning a favorable court decision.

SUMMARY OF WORKSHOP SESSIONS - July 20-25, 1953

Dr. Theodore Brameld from New York University, Chairman.

We agreed to list all the suggestions which had been made on how to proceed in local communities. The purpose was to list in priority the most feasible steps. As a guide we used Irene Osborne's outline, "Working Toward Integrated Public Schools in Your Own Community". (See attached)

I. Organization - "Find Your Friends"

A. The first step would be to find one or two people in your community who have a personal interest in this and talk it over with them. You must locate a special sponsoring agency or well-known people in the community. Your first carefully planned meeting of half a dozen people would prepare for a larger meeting. Look at your local organizations such as Church, Union, League of Women Voters, NAACP, YWCA, Urban League, Anti-Defamation League, Jewish Committee Councils, Student Council, or other student activities, etc. to find people who would be interested in the issue. In some communities the first step might be to bring together a group of Negro and white teachers; in others, you might approach an editor and get his help on where to start.

B. The first meeting when you come together, because of interest in improving the public schools and making them more democratic, is of course an interracial gathering, and out of this meeting you will find the solid core. You gather together people who are ready to discuss and think about the problem of voluntary cooperation, people who through their own experience and actions will learn and be ready to go further.

Possible first steps for the group's action:

Let's get the facts in our community and look at them.

Let's consider various alternatives in our community to the Supreme Court decision.

Let's discover and use our opportunities as citizens to meet with and present proposals to the School Board.

Let's be on the look out for opportunities to bring our objective before a larger audience - "letters to the editor" - use of unforeseen developments in the local scene to provoke discussion upon this objective.

Majority votes unimportant - Find one point of agreement and disregard disagreement.

Formal organization not desirable - but provision for the mechanics of continued group action essential - a convener - a coordinator - a secretary - someone who will see that effort does not become static. (There are organizations and/or agencies which can contribute various necessary services.)

It is essential for the initial group to begin early and continue to involve more people.

Means effect the end - so every activity must be measured by the extent to which it moves towards the goal of integration. (Bringing people together on an interracial basis is not the point - this has too frequently been done without resulting in integration of the groups involved.)

C. Sharing the Program. Your objective is not to set up an organization, but a temporary committee. You are not going to take away power and prestige of any organization. We must keep aware of the danger of becoming rigid and formal in our work. The key person or persons in each group must try to anticipate the next steps and so keep things moving. It is useful to talk over with one or two people some possible next steps. At the same time, we must not become inflexible and spell out next steps ahead of time. We must keep alert to any community developments that will give us an opportunity to further our objectives. We must start involving other people in various parts of the effort as rapidly as possible.

D. There has to be an administrator or organizer in each group who feels the responsibility of being the spark plug.

Further notes on objective and how to work: Bringing people together is not the problem. In the South people have always "been together", but on an unequal basis. This has to be done away with. In working together there must be no remnants of a "superior-inferior" relationship.

To summarize; our first step is to find men and women in positions to provide community leadership for an orderly transition from a segregated to an unsegregated public school system. He or she will not be commiting his organization by joining the group, but will naturally use his influence in his group to help widen the circle of people interested. Effective individuals are likely to have organizational relationships, but there may also be a few persons who are in a position of individual leadership in their community or who have special skills that can be used.

All this implies a knowledge of your community. Avoid going to groups or organizations that you know are going to oppose you. Most of the group felt that it was important to include youth, in high schools, colleges, or perhaps even grammer schools. Some felt that they would lack the experience to realize what they were getting into. The point was made that the same criteria must be applied to all invited to join the group. We want related, informed, and responsible people.

II Develop a Way of Working

One of the basic principles is to set up your goal, which will serve as a guide to all action. Integrated schools is our goal within the framework of achieving greater overall democracy and integration in all walks of life. Work on a basis of agreement on each specific step to be taken, while not requiring agreement on all points. On each point of agreement you move ahead; those who may not wish to go along on one step may join you in the next. One point to keep in mind is that we must work on a principle of equality - not on a basis of the superior-inferior relationships that has sometimes existed in interracial efforts. We cannot build anything on a personal relationship that is dishonest or false. The thing that is wrong in these groups is that coming together is an end in itself; in our work we must always keep the goal in mind. From the beginning we start with a goal of integration, then every experience we have on the way is related to this goal. The end affects the means. The step is not an end in itself, but a step toward the goal.

MEMORANDUM

Re: De-Segregation in Arizona Schools

I don't have any reports or records on the progress of school desegregation in Arizona to send you for your workshop. All I can do is set down here, as briefly as possible, what has transpired:

School segregation has prevailed in Arizona, pretty generally, since about the time of World War I - the handiwork, to a great extent, of large numbers of people who migrated into Arizona from Texas and the deep South. Our struggle to desegregate the schools has been going on for a number of years, and intensively so since World War II. We've had a good deal of success.

Bear in mind that the pattern of school segregation has been somewhat checkered. For many years, the state law made segregation in the elementary schools compulsory and in the high schools optional. Hence most of the elementary schools have been segregated, although a few communities - notably in the northern part of the state- simply disregarded the law, because segregation was uneconomic and because southern pressures weren't too strong. As for the high schools, Tucson never segregated and Phoenix did - although here, too, the pattern has been checkered. Phoenix College, a two-year school which is an adjunct of the high school system, has always been integrated, as has Phoenix Technical School, likewise an adjunct of the high school system. But the high schools themselves were segregated. As things developed, Phoenix became the last city in the state in which high schools were still segregated.

First shot in our campaign was fired about three years ago. We submitted a desegregation initiative measure to the people and were licked by almost two to one. However, there were mitigating circumstances: The ballot was cluttered with 13 confusing measures and the newspapers, fearful of other measures which might have hurt them and business in general, waged a Vote-No-on-Everything campaign.

With more optimism than good sense, we went into the legislature just two months later and submitted another desegregation bill. Fortunately, for the first time in history, there were a couple of Negroes in the lower house. And we were able to sell the economic powers-that-be on the proposition that segregation was wasteful, tax-wise. We came out of the session with a law that made segregation in the elementary schools optional along with the high schools. It was a compromise, of course. And the new law was so laxly worded that we moved in right afterward with a lawsuit attacking constitutionality of the whole segregation structure. NAACP, with the help of our group (Arizona Council for Civic Unity) and others, raised $5,000 to finance the suit.

Meanwhile, immediately after passage of the new permissive segregation law, Tucson abolished segregation in its elementary schools. The credit there goes to a courageous and wonderful superintendent, Robert Morrow. Needless to say, the desegregation was accomplished without incident, and Tucson now has no segregation whatsoever.

Our suit was in the U. S. District Court, which decided that the issue more properly should be decided by the state courts. So we re-filed in the state courts. We won a clear decision a few months ago in the lower - or superior - court, which simply held segregation unconstitutional. The local high school board - defendants in our action - appealed to the state supreme court. We expected a decision there this past spring and early summer, but the court put it off to mid-fall. (We suspect the Arizona Court wants the U. S. Supreme Court to take it off the hook.)

Meanwhile, we kept the pressure on the local school boards. And finally, just a few days ago, the high school board voted to abolish segregation - in advance of any ruling by the supreme court and effective this fall. The segregated Negro high school in Phoenix is being kept in operation, at least temporarily, but as an "open" school to which anyone may come. This, apparently, for the purpose of keeping the Negro faculty at work and not having to integrate it into the overall system immediately, This may present a problem soon, for we understand that a good deal of effort is being put forth by Negro leaders to persuade parents in their community not to send their youngsters back to Carver (the Negro high school).

The elementary schools in Phoenix are still segregated, but we're hoping that they, too, will see the light.

There have been other spotty cases of desegregation. Several smaller towns, for instance, knocked out segregation soon after the new permissive law was passed, and when one of them also fired its Negro teachers, the Arizona Education Association challenged the firing with a lawsuit and won its case.

Down in the central part of the state, two small neighboring cotton towns were segregating their Negro high school kids in a makeshift high school operated jointly at a midway point -- in what had been an old dance hall. Our group (this was before I became active in it) spent several months persuading the local people to do away with the high school and integrate the Negro kids in their respective high schools. And in rural and suburban school districts around Phoenix, there have been various instances of voluntary desegregation. In my own district, for example, there were three Negro children attending school -- segregated under a special teacher hired for that purpose. We got that corrected swiftly. Our group called on the superintendent, and an American Legion post in a nearby community passed a desegregation resolution, and, whammy, out went segregation.

We think we have Jim Crow, school-style, on the run in Arizona. We're hoping fervently that the state supreme court - if not the U. S. Supreme Court - will finish the job this fall.

All of this probably sounds like a well-organized, concerted campaign, ticking off one objective after another. Actually, of course, it's been anything but that. It's been a long, hard struggle, highlighted not alone by resistance met all along the line, but also by dissention amongst those working to desegregate the schools. But I'm sure you and the other people at your workshop are familiar with that sort of pattern.

The story is moving faster than I can keep up with it. Yesterday afternoon, just as I was finishing this, the Phoenix elementary school board voted to put into effect gradual integration of the elementary schools, the process to start this fall and be completed within one year. We seem to be on our way to total victory.

MEMORANDUM

To: Myles Horton, Monteagle, Tenn.

From: Frances H. Williams, Washington, D. C.

I have read the Report of your Special council meeting of April, 1953, with great interest. I am amazed and excited over the analysis you make of the South and the plan you now have for a month's training program on de-segregating the schools.

1. Nothing intrigues me more than the problem of educating people in the race field. This education could be organized in so many differing ways. For myself, one way of organizing it would be around three basic concepts. One, the role of politeness in changing the Southern scene. For example, the use of courtesy titles. I tried this when I first came to government. It was the custom to call all the Negro messengers by their first names, so I began calling them "Mr." I never discussed the matter with anyone, I just did it myself, and it was amazing to see how people picked this up. Another item of politeness we worked on was a simple ruling that people would be served in turn at our ration boards. The custom in many parts of the South of serving the white customers first is a basic impoliteness that I think could be dispensed with rather easily, if worked at constantly. Another thing is just to start people speaking to one another. We tried this also at OPA. Two of us just began saying, "Good morning." This simple gesture began communication--created an atmosphere of including everybody.

2. A second basic concept which I think could well be considered is that everybody enjoys extending his world. This point is made in the May 11, 1953, issue of TIME in an article on Negroes in 1953--a kind of progress report. They say, "Negroes, in the phrase of the sociologists, have 'high social visibility.' But their lives are in effect invisible to most Americans, who rarely bother to look behind the Color Curtain at the Negroes' homes, their places of work and worship, or their spirit."

Now it takes a great deal of time to really get acquainted. One should go about this very slowly and with great reserve. It will be hard for prejudiced white people to understand and realize that they have not really been communicating with the Negroes they know. Words have been passing between them and others but not communication, and to get acquainted they have to not only observe but communicate. Once they got into this, it would be very exciting. They wouldn't become friendly with Negroes, but if they worked at it, they would begin to see Negroes as they are, not as they thought they were.

I remember when I first began looking at poor white people in the South. It was years before I began speaking to them, but the observation of their homes, their casual talk with one another, etc, led me to give up my prejudices against them as I saw how hard their lives were. I extended my life by becoming acquainted with theirs. It was so exciting to me that I never felt the urge to go to Paris or any far away place, there was so much to see at home.

3. The third basic concept I would like your students to get acquainted with is that when an individual contemplates action in the race field, he should ask himself,"Is this reasonable action?" It should never be heroic. He should be able to take his complete self into the new action. Then his action will seem to others reasonable, fair, acceptable.

If you think back on the Chattanooga conference, you will get my third point. We did something at that time that had not been done before, but it seemed reasonable to people that students should want to learn about the World Court, and so they accepted the fact of their learning.

And now to change over to another line of thought which a friend of mine was engaging in this noon at lunch. He was saying that the basic situation in the U. S. that makes it possible for us to be tolerant to one another is the over-lapping memberships we have in many groups. That is, for example, no Senator is just a Senator; he is a banker, a Baptist, etc.--and it is his membership in all these groups that makes him to be tolerant of many things which he would not be tolerant of if his whole life were spent within the confines of thought and experience of one group. One thing in the South that breeds intolerance between the races is that they have not many over-lapping memberships.

According to this line of thought, one way to prepare for the de-segregation of the schools is to encourage participation in every kind of group possible.

OUTLINE OF RECOMMENDATIONS FOR SCHOOL INTEGRATION

I. The Mechanics of integration

A. Pupil Integration

*1. Pupils should be assigned to schools on the basis of residence, regardless of race.

2. Re-districting should be made on the basis of a complete school census.

3. Boundaries should be determined on the basis of clear policy. One suggestion is the criteria used in Chicago in recent re-districting: (1) every child should attend the nearest school, (2) no child should cross a major arterial highway, (3) facilities should be utilized to the fullest extent possible, with every effort made to equalize pupil-teacher ratios. These sound principles made it possible for an administrator to give a clear and honest answer to the parent who complained about school assignment.

4. Voluntary transfer should not be permitted. Requests for transfer in hardship cases should be granted only by an authority specially designated for this purpose.

5. The two teachers colleges should be merged into a single institution.

6. Deaf children: The Commissioners should make a contract with Columbia Institution for the Deaf which forbids racial segregation.

7. Consideration should be given to expansion of the program through the improved use of facilities, such as development of a five-year technical institute or an improved arts and sciences program.

B. Teacher and administrative integration

*1. All personnel should be hired, placed, and promoted on the basis of merit, regardless of race.

2. Teacher integration

a. Teachers should be assigned without reference to the race of the teacher or the pupils. Schools which, for residential reasons, have pupils of only one race may participate in the integration process through integrated faculties. Many cities throughout the country have successfully used interracial faculties in all white schools. This is an excellent device for giving the pupils a constructive experience. While there should be no requirement that every school must have a mixed faculty, no school should be considered ineligible for an interracial teacher group.

---

* These are main points which should be stressed by everyone.

b. Transition to integration will require major shifts in assignment of presently employed teachers.

c. The tenures of all teachers should be fully protected.

3. Integration of Administrators

a. There should be a complete job analysis of all administrative positions to determine the actual needs under an integrated system.

b. When the job analysis shows that two present positions are in fact duplicate, one of the incumbents should be assigned to a new administrative job. This may make it possible to utilize present personnel to enrich the school program.

II. Necessary educational preparation

A. Teachers: The most important single factor in the success of integration will be the attitude of the teachers. Teachers should be given every opportunity now to gain confidence in integration and to see their important role. This should be accomplished by (1) in-service training, (2) cooperation with private agencies in conferences and workshops for teachers, and (3) full use of integrated teacher committees for all committee work at present.

B. Pupils: The administration and Board should encourage and arrange interracial activities among pupils, such as joint participation in extra-curricular projects, integration of student councils, and inter-school visitation. Earlier regulations which prevented interracial activity should be rescinded.

C. The system should undertake an intensive program of intergroup education. This can be done by implementalism of "The Handbook of Intergroup Education," already developed within the school system. This includes some of the above suggestions and many other valuable ideas.

D. Parents of both races should be helped to work together on projects of common interest, most particularly in projects which in themselves have nothing to do with race.

III. The entire program should be carried out with a firm policy of complete integration. All personnel should have full confidence in the rightness and practicality of what they are doing. This will communicate confidence and encouragement, rather than anxiety, to the children and the parents. Administrators and teachers can gain this confidence by use of professional consultants and school administrators from other cities who can attest to the success of integration.

The American Cancer Society is a voluntary health agency. It conducts many activities in an effort to conquer the disease, cancer. The Society sponsors a National Research Program on the causes and cure of cancer. This Program functions through money grants to scientists and institutions. Through medical fellowships, the Society helps young doctors learn about cancer. Locally, the Society carries on a program of public education to tell people about cancer. This includes the use of films, exhibits, pamphlets and mass media. Also, a Professional Education Program is conducted for area doctors, dentists and nurses seeking to stimulate and increase the knowledge of the medical profession in newer methods of cancer detection, diagnosis and treatment. It also has a Service Program which provides sterile dressings and certain sick room items for cancer patients. The Unit sponsors a "Lost Chord Club" which assists with the rehabilitation of persons who have had their larynx removed.

To support all of these activities, the Society conducts an annual fund-raising and educational campaign each April.

MEDICAL COLLEGE OF VIRGINIA
1200 East Broad Street Tel. MI 4-9851

Hospital Division:

Four hospitals and the A. D. Williams Memorial Clinic (Outpatient Department) provide patient care. M.C.V. Hospital, Memorial Hospital, St. Philip Hospital and the Ennion G. Williams Hospital (a joint project with the State Department of Health) provide a total bed capacity of over 1,300. These serve all counties and cities of the State with the majority of patients coming from Richmond and nearby counties. The institution earns a great part of its budget needs from student fees and patient payments. It has, in addition, grants and income from endowment investments. As a state teaching institution, it receives an appropriation for the College Division and for the Hospital Division but does not receive funds for patient care on a non-paying basis. State and local hospitalization funds approved by localities are appropriated for individual patients, and certain agencies such as the Bureau of Crippled Children, Vocational Rehabilitation, and others sponsor individual patients. Care is both staff and private. Financial arrangements for admission are made by the Admitting Departments of the hospitals.

Outpatient Department:

A. D. Williams Memorial Clinic provides medical care for the medically indigent of all races. Service is given at a nominal charge. The only patients admitted on a free basis are the recipients of public assistance of the City of Richmond. Eligibility for clinic attendance and fee to be paid is determined by the Clinic Admitting Department. Patients may register between the hours of 8:00 and 9:30 in the morning and between 12:00 noon and 1:30 in the afternoon, Monday through Friday.

Social Service Department:

The hospital maintains a Social Service Department and upon referral, social service is available to patients, staff and private, hospital and clinic. The focus is on the psychosocial factors in illness and the social adjustments necessary in medical care. Service to the patient may be handled entirely by the Social Service Department or may be in cooperation with other agencies. Requests for service may be made by physicians, nurses and other hospital personnel, public and private agencies or by the patient, himself.

MEMORIAL FOUNDATION RESIDENCE AND DAY CARE CENTER

1617 Front Street Tel. MI 8-3040

The Foundation operates a resident treatment center for girls and boys ages 6 to 11½ who are better able to work out their social and emotional problems while living away from home. It accepts those who show promise and whose problems are such that they can respond to treatment in a small, informal group. It does not accept children with organic psychiatric conditions, those requiring hospitalization or children who need to be placed in a protective institution. These children and their parents receive treatment at Memorial Guidance Clinic. The program and staff of the two agencies are combined but each has its separate board of directors.

The Memorial Foundation Day Care Center provides a program for children who are emotionally disturbed and while they do not require hospitalization and can continue to live in their home, cannot use the usual school facilities and require a more intensive treatment than is available on outpatient basis. The program consists of remedial education, class and group psychotherapy, arts and crafts, and other activities, and psychotherapy for their parents.

Programs at those places include games, folk dances, storytelling, handcraft, social recreation, sports, drama, music, annual celebrations and community events. Other property maintained by the department includes 200,000 street trees, 14 monuments, 9 public squares and 7 cemeteries.

RICHMOND GOODWILL INDUSTRIES

7 South Fourteenth Street Tel. MI 3-6674, MI 4-8435

Helps the handicapped to help themselves by providing them with a "Chance, rather than Charity." Goodwill Industries provide work for the handicapped in two major departments.

In one department, salvage is collected from homes and reconditioned, making items usable again by those in the lower income bracket who can buy these reconditioned articles at a moderate price. (Cash wages are paid to the workers from the sales of these articles in Goodwill stores. These workers are covered with Group Insurance and are also building up Social Security benefits for their future.)

The second department serves retarded people. These handicapped persons work on contracts obtained from industry. Their work includes assembling projects; stuffing envelopes for mailing; making novelties, gluing and pasting operations; and machine sewing, and the like. (These work on a cash piece-work basis and earn as they learn and become skilled.) All Goodwill activities are directed toward making clients skilled in doing worthwhile work that will benefit them and perhaps lead to a niche for them somewhere in the commercial field.

RICHMOND HOME FOR BOYS

8714 West Broad Street Tel. AT 2-5529

UNITED GIVERS FUND OF RICHMOND,
Henrico and Chesterfield, Inc.

2501 Monument Avenue Tel. EL 3-9481

The United Givers Fund is people helping people . . . and doing it the cheapest, most effective and efficient way they know how.

A federation of over 40 private health, welfare and recreation agencies, it is the Richmond area's answer to the nuisance and the extravagance of multiple fund-raising drives.

Through one U.G.F. campaign conducted in the fall for all the agencies, rather than through many separate appeals by them, costs are cut, the time of volunteers and the agencies' staffs are saved, and funds are allocated more efficiently . . . on the basis of comparative community need rather than service "appeal" alone.

A 120-member Board of Governors is elected at an annual meeting by givers. (Every person who makes a contribution to UGF may attend the annual meeting and is entitled to vote.) This volunteer Board and its committees set policies, study and act on agency budget requests, and conduct the affairs of the organization.

Membership in the Fund is open to well-managed agencies meeting real community needs and willing to cooperate with other agencies to better serve the people of the Richmond area.

Generally, over 75% of all campaign funds raised for operating private local health and welfare agencies are raised through the one United Givers Fund campaign.

The Virginia Employment Commission operates the Virginia State Employment Service and the state's unemployment compensation program. The office serving the Richmond area is located at 620 East Main Street. Unemployed workers may be eligible for from $10 to $32 a week from 8 to 20 weeks, the amount depending on their prior earnings. To qualify, however, the worker must have earned at least $300 during a specified 12-month period while he was employed in a place covered by the law. He must also have been deprived of his job through no fault of his own and he must be able and available to work. Persons seeking work may use the employment service facilities consisting of employment counseling, testing, and placement without cost. These facilities are also free to employers. The object of the service is to fill job openings with the best qualified applicants available and to obtain and dispense labor market information through the media of newspapers, radio, television, and letters in such a manner that the welfare of the community may be advanced.

VIRGINIA HOME FOR INCURABLES
1101 Hampton Street Tel. EL 9-4093

The Home is a charitable institution for chronically ill men and women. An applicant must have been a resident of Virginia for at least one year immediately preceding his application. Interested persons should contact the Director of Admissions at The Home.

In addition to routine medical, dental and nursing care, the Home offers physical and occupational therapy. A comprehensive program of recreational activities and religious services is sponsored by volunteer groups.

In as much as The Home is conducted as a charity, its funds are limited and in order to meet the "cost of care," it must depend on payments by patients to the extent of their ability to pay, as well as on income from other sources. Patients without private means avail themselves of public welfare benefits.

This 100 bed institution is currently listed with the American Hospital Association.

VIRGINIA METHODIST CHILDREN'S HOME
3900 West Broad Street Tel. EL 3-4461

A multi-function agency for Methodist children of Virginia offering mothers' aid, foster home care, adoption, and institutional care.

VIRGINIA SOCIETY FOR CRIPPLED CHILDREN AND ADULTS
RICHMOND AREA CHAPTER

The Richmond Area Chapter does case finding and helps individuals but much of its work is done through the Medical College of Virginia. There is no local office. The work is done by volunteers. The Society furnishes motion pictures of Camp Easter Seal, its Summer Rehabilitation Center in Craig County, to various groups. The Camp furnishes recreation and rehabilitation to medically indigent children from eight to sixteen years of age.

VIRGINIA STATE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH
BUREAU OF CRIPPLED CHILDREN
Blanton Building Tel. MI 4-4111, Ext. 2381

The Bureau administers essentially a medical care program, limited to medically indigent patients. They must be under twenty-one years of age, must be living in the State along with the legal guardian, and must be reasonably rehabilitable.

Services are rendered to children with the following handicaps: orthopedic crippling, deformities requiring plastic surgery, rheumatic fever, operable congenital heart deformities, and seizures.

VIRGINIA STATE DEPARTMENT OF MENTAL HYGIENE AND HOSPITALS
9 North 12th Street, P. O. Box 1797 Tel. MI 4-4111

Provides care and treatment of the mentally ill and mentally deficient through clinics and hospitals located in the various parts of the State. Provides consultation and supervision to clinics in the Richmond area.

VIRGINIA STATE DEPARTMENT OF WELFARE AND INSTITUTIONS
429 South Belvidere Street Tel. MI 4-4111

The State-wide public welfare programs, the institutional program for adult offenders, the care of children committed to the Board of Welfare and Institutions by Juvenile Courts, and the probation and parole system for adults are the four major areas of responsibility of the Department of Welfare and Institutions. Each of these functions is administered through a separate division of the Department. Public Assistance and Services, commonly referred to as Welfare Services, are rendered by local departments of public welfare under the direction of and in consultation with the State Department of Welfare and Institutions.

Child Care Bureau of the Division of Youth Services

The Child Care Bureau of the Division of Youth Services has the responsibility for receiving, studying, and placing all children committed to the State Board of Welfare and Institutions. In addition the Bureau operates a State Boarding Home Program for a select number of committed children.

Bureau of Children's Services of the Division of General Welfare

In addition to the general consultation to the local departments of public welfare in their child welfare work, the Bureau of Children's Services prepares reports for the courts in adoption cases; handles correspondence and authorizations regarding the interstate placement of children; and administers the licensing statutes with respect to child welfare agencies—(1) agencies which place children in foster homes, including adoptive homes; (2) institutions and family homes which provide full-time care for children away from their parents; and (3) foster family homes and agencies which provide day care for children away from their parents.

Bureau of Hospitalization and Homes for Adults of the Division of General Welfare

The duties of the Bureau of Hospitalization and Homes for Adults include responsibility for the licensure of homes for the aged. A "home for the aged" is defined as "any place, establishment or institution, public or private, operated or maintained for the maintenance or care of four or more aged, infirm, chronically ill or incapacitated persons, except (1) a facility or portion of a facility licensed by the State Board of Health or the State Hospital Board and (2) the home or residence of an individual who cares for or maintains only persons related to him by blood or marriage."

VIRGINIA TREATMENT CENTER FOR CHILDREN
515 N. 10th Street
(P. O. Box 1797) Tel. MI 4-4111, Ext. 7101, 7102

A children's psychiatric hospital, the Center is a function of the Department of Mental Hygiene and Hospitals with coordinated programs with the Medical College of Virginia. Services include a child adolescent study unit (of which the out-patient clinic is a part), an in-patient program for 40 children, and a day-care program. Children in the in-patient program are limited to six to sixteen years of age. Children and adolescents up to 18 and 19 years of age are seen in the out-patient clinic. Children are accepted from any part of the State. Fees are charged on a sliding scale according to the ability of the family to pay. The program is short term, no child being kept beyond a period of three months without the Commissioner's approval. In appropriate instances, hospitalization can be extended up to but not beyond one year.

The staff consists of many disciplines, including child psychiatry, pediatrics, psychiatric nursing, social work, psychology, teaching, occupational therapy and recreation.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION SERVICE
(State Department of Education)
201 West Grace Street Tel. MI 4-2338

This service offers to handicapped persons a diagnostic examination, vocational guidance and training, placement and follow-up on employment, and referral to the Virginia Employment Commission upon completion of vocational preparation. When not available through other sources, services may include physical repair of static disabilities through hospitalization, medical or surgical treatment, prosthetic appliances, transportation and tools and equipment required in an occupation.

THE VOLUNTEERS OF AMERICA
302 West Cary Street Tel. MI 4-2371

The Volunteers of America are always willing and ready to bring help and guidance to those in need. Daily meals are served to children from large families with moderate incomes. Shoes and clothing are supplied for any child when the need arises. Emergency food and fuel orders are filled where there is sickness or monthly allotment is over taxed by other needs. Furniture and household items are given to help get families out of furnished rooms and into better surroundings. The Volunteers provide Day Camp during summer months for children who do not have camp opportunities.

The Volunteers of America now have a new home at 20 West Franklin St. for the men. This building is large enough for the dining room, kitchen and recreation rooms. Our slogan on the wall of this building as you enter, "Your Home Away From Home."

WAR VETERANS CLAIMS DIVISION
(State of Virginia)
203 Governor Street Tel. MI 4-4111, Ext. 2205

Central Branch—2 West Franklin Street Tel. MI 4-2655

A varied, year-round program is conducted in the modern comprehensive building housing Central Branch. Although a predominantly youth serving agency, Central's activities include services to many groups plus programs for each member of the family.

Leigh Street Branch—212 East Leigh Street Tel. MI 9-0545

This Branch offers an extensive program for the Negro population of the community. Youth and Adult activities are conducted in its building-centered program, and in addition it serves a large youth membership through a decentralized program using facilities in the various parts of the community. The Branch operates the Binga Gym, 1008 St. Paul Street.

The Medical College of Virginia Branch—300 North 12th Street
Tel. MI 4-9851, Ext. 8132

This Branch YMCA serving students has been active for many years, meeting the needs of the students of the Medical College.

South Richmond-Chesterfield Branch—4600 Midlothian Pike
Tel. BE 2-1656

This Branch represents the present YMCA trend to decentralize by taking its program to the community where youths live. It serves South Richmond and Chesterfield County. The Branch possesses a new office trailer and a nine acre building site opposite the George Wythe High School. Its two busses help transport boys to the many program activities.

Tuckahoe Branch—401 Ridge Road Tel. AT 2-2117

Serving the Tuckahoe District and the far west end of the City and County, the fast growing Tuckahoe Branch YMCA is the youngest, having been organized March 1959. Another example of how the YMCA program with youth can be taken to the community by using a rented office as headquarters. This Branch already has over 50 youth groups organized.

Y.M.C.A. (RAILROAD)
1552 East Main Street Tel. MI 3-0856

The "Y" provides a home for railroad men when they are away from their homes. Services include lodging, bathing facilities, various recreation facilities and religious services. The "Y" also serves many migrant males for night lodging sent to them by many churches, Gospel Lighthouse, Travelers Aid, Salvation Army and Social Service Department of the City of Richmond. Also many organized groups of boys, such as Boy Scouts and Sunday School Classes, use bathing and swimming facilities.

The "Y" serves all boys who come to them free of all charges, three times a week during the winter and every day except Sunday during the summer. These youngsters receive instructions in swimming with life saving instructor furnished by "Y." They also are given parties.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION
6 N. Fifth Street Tel. MI 3-6761

This international organization strives to serve the personal and social needs of all women and girls through group activity. A varied program of informal education and recreation provides satisfying and new experiences that lead to the physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual development of individuals. A Room Registry file is available for employed girls. The Christian purpose of the YWCA emphasizes the American ideals of tolerance, free discussion, and democratic action.

Y.W.C.A., PHYLLIS WHEATLEY BRANCH
207 East Leigh Street Tel. MI 3-2803

The YWCA is an organization of women and girls with a Christian purpose. Through the YWCA, members can continuously seek increased self-understanding and opportunities to share with others the riches of experience and faith. In this process, it seeks to develop community leadership. Services include informal counseling, lodging, room registry, classes, recreation and rooms for community meetings.

New Agencies

RICHMOND AREA PSYCHIATRIC CLINIC

101 South Fifth Street Tel. 643-2827

The Clinic provides psychiatric treatment and diagnostic service preferably to adults in the Richmond, Henrico, and Chesterfield area. Fees are charged on a sliding scale to those in a position to pay. In addition follow-up service is given to discharged and furloughed state hospital patients. Since other facilities in the Richmond area are staffed and equipped expecially for treatment of emotionally disturbed and mentally retarded children, the Clinic's primary function will be service to adult patients.

VIRGINIA SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF BLINDNESS
(A Division of the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness)

3401 Hawthorne Avenue Tel. 359-2020

The Society is committed to a total program for preventing blindness through research, service and education.

Publications, posters, films, lectures, charts and advisory service are available upon request. These range from h highly technical works to advice on eyes in connection with sunglasses, television and reading.

The Society is constantly promoting eye safety in industry, school labs and shops, children's play and among the general public.

The Society is now concentrating on Glaucoma and Pre-school screenings: The former to find and refer for treatment the two people in one hundred over 40 who are not aware that they are victims of this disease, which would otherwise be blinding; the latter to detect visual defects which lead to permanent loss of sight if not treated before the age of six. These screenings are in cooperation with local health departments, medical societies, civic organizations and volunteers. The Society trains the volunteers, provides forms and literature, administers and supervises the project, and follows referred cases, records and reports.

The Society is also interested in finding and helping the partially Sighted Child, providing literature and assistance to parents and teachers of all children and scholarships to teachers of the partially sighted.

INTRODUCTION: HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF ATLANTA NEGRO HOUSING

SECTION II

EXISTING PATTERNS OF HOUSING SEGREGATION

Atlanta, the key city in the southeast, is one of the twenty-five largest cities in this area and is a city of over one million people in the five-county metropolitan area. Atlanta is outstanding because of its commercial, industrial, educational and natural resources. Atlanta is a city of beautiful homes, busy people and progress. Its ever-changing sky-lines in the downtown area continually reach upward to the heavens with the aid of private, state and federal interests. Its people, who can trace their heritage to every nation in the world, and natively, to every state in the USA, are constantly dealing with problems of conquering inner space, and move at a more rapid pace than those of most cities in the area. These are people who possess positive attitudes toward undertaking more and bigger responsibilities, who enjoy a better racial climate than in most southern cities, and who are constantly struggling to obtain money to pay for expanded services of renewing local communities with little or practically no help from the state government.

Atlanta's over-all attractiveness as a city going places and doing big things, is besmirched by the fact that its residential pattern tends to make it a rigidly segregated city. Its wheels of commerce and industry attract thousands of newcomers annually, many nonwhite, who find shelter in the deteriorating sections where the poor white and nonwhite settle and compete for the occupancy of the left-behind housing that has been vacated by the more affluent white citizens. Atlanta's beauty is defaced and its potential growth hampered by those who deny housing in all kinds of shelter to all of its citizens.

The fact that of the 246,545 nonwhite citizens in the metropolitan area, in 1960, about 187,000 live in the city limits of Atlanta, is important only to the extent that it helps keep tab on the "problem." A much more meaningful statistic is the fact that the 187,000 compete feverishly with each other for space in the estimated twnety percent of the developed residential area. The net result of the fierce competition that goes on within the so-called Negro community for living space and for shelter, means that the Negro pays more for dirt and housing in relation to income than does the white Atlantan who can live anywhere in the metropolitan area.

The relatively high cost of dirt for nonwhites means less money spent by developers of housing. This fact, in addition to the fact that the nonwhite earns less than the white Atlantan, also means that overcrowded neighborhoods and dwelling units are the brutal realities of Negro life in Atlanta. The census for 1960 showed that of the 57,879 dwelling units occupied by nonwhites, 19,679 or 34 percent had more than one person per room and that only nine percent of the units occupied by whites were as crowded.

* Changes since 1960 show more whites have moved out of the city and the increase in the proportion of city-dwelling Negroes in 1965 was 43% rather than the 38% shown in table I. See section on "Resources for Housing Relocation".

Overt or surreptitious containment of nonwhite citizens to prescribed areas is a major contributing factor to family disorganization, juvenile delinquency and slum neighborhoods. Hence, it is no wonder that the aforementioned social factors plus other factors, such as low incomes and second class schooling, are reasons why nonwhites live in substandard housing units. Containment and isolation of citizens in prescribed areas are the father and mother of distrust, two evil parents whose demise would place Atlanta on the road to greatness.

pernicious segregation

The area bound by Perry Boulevard on the north, Spring Street on the east, Cascade Road on the south and the Chattahoochee River on the west, contains about 88,883 nonwhites, or 47.8 percent of the total 185,816 nonwhites the 1960 Census lists in the city limits of Atlanta. The majority of the city's public housing units is located in this area, while not a single unit of public housing is in the northeast section. Therefore, the location of public housing units becomes the critical issue for determining the extent and amount of desegregation in public housing by city officials.

The median value of nonwhite owner occupied units was $8,500 as compared to $13,150 for whites in 1960. Sixty-three percent of the nonwhite owner units were valued below $10,000. The following table shows the value of nonwhite owner occupied units.

Amount of Rent

The average (median) gross rent paid by nonwhite renters in 1960 was $52.00 as compared to $23.72 paid in 1950. The census showed that the greatest number of nonwhites (15,457) paid between $40.00 and $59.00 per month rent.

The average rent paid by nonwhite renters varied from $30.00 in Gwinnett County, $37.00 in Cobb, $39.00 in Clayton to $53.00 in the City of Atlanta. The nonwhite dwelling unit has an average of 3.7 rooms, but the nonwhite families of Clayton, Cobb and Gwinnett Counties have 4.1 rooms per dwelling unit. Please see following tables.

(1) Gross Rent - The computed rent termed "gross rent" is the contract rent plus the average monthly cost of utilities (water, electricity, gas) and fuels such as wood, coal, and oil if these items are paid for by the renter in addition to contract rent. Thus, gross rent eliminates rent differentials which result from varying practices with respect to the inclusion of heat and utilities as part of the rental payment. In rural territory, rent data exclude rent for farm units.

Ability to Pay for Shelter

The ability to own or rent decent, safe and sanitary housing is dependent upon income. The Housing and Home Finance Agency reported in the bulletin, the "potential Housing Demands of Nonwhite Population in Selected Metropolitan Areas" that there have been substantial increases in the earnings of nonwhite Atlantans between 1950 and 1960.

The median income for all families was $5,758 and $4,901 for families and unrelated individuals. The average income for nonwhite families was $3,033 or 89.9 percent less than the average for all families. For nonwhite families and unrelated individuals, the average income of $2,503 was 95.8 percent less than the average of $4,901 for all Atlantans in this group. Although the nonwhite family income is about half of the average for all citizens, the nonwhite family pays only $15.00 less than the $67.00 average rent paid by all citizens. The nonwhite family pays, in other words, proportionately more rent than does the white Atlantan; a fact that may be attributed to the inability of nonwhite Atlantans to have access to the total housing market. Please see following table.

The Atlanta Urban League's report, entitled "Some Observations About Minority Housing" stated, "land - living space - is the hard core issue facing the nonwhite citizen in developing housing both inside and outside of urban renewal areas. It is known that restrictions on living space and accommodations of nonwhites involve all Atlantans immediately and irrevocably in issues of civil rights which could doom the metropolitan area to increasing trouble." Land and housing are commodities that must become available to all people regardless of race, color, creed or national origin. Atlanta's people can ill afford the luxury of answering today's questions with stolid acquiescence to the past. Its government must recognize that housing is "big business" and that the future is inextricably linked to the total welfare of the Negro citizen. A new pride in self is developing in Negroes who are more determined to raise their aspirations and achievements via political activity in order to force Atlanta to face up to the problem of democracy in housing.

SECTION III

RESOURCES FOR HOUSING RELOCATION

RESOURCES FOR HOUSING RELOCATION

As demonstrated in other parts of this proposal, a sizable segment of Atlanta's population has grave housing needs that frustrate the attainment of the "Great Society" goals. Ironically, these needs exist in a dynamic, fast growing city where housing resources outside the Negro ghetto are tremendous. These resources include a good supply of vacant houses of standard quality and the availability of basic community services (schools, libraries, health, fire and police protection) in the various communities where the housing is available.

While the 1960 U. S. Census figures and April, 1965 estimates of the Atlanta Region Metropolitan Planning Commission show a significant rise in the total population for the Atlanta area, they also show a slight decline in the number of white city residents and relatively large increases in Negro city residents. In 1960, Negroes in Atlanta represented 38 per cent of the city's population; now they account for 43 per cent of the total.

Negro Housing Lag - Contrasting with the increased Negro share of the total city population is the lagging growth in the number of Negro housing units. Despite a drop in the percentage of whites in the total population, white housing units increased significantly (see Table II). This suggests a continuing shift of families with children to suburbia and a counter movement of childless couples and single persons into high rise apartments in the central city. At least one of these high rise apartments[1] in the upper middle-income brackets was built on land from which deteriorating Negro housing was removed in urban renewal projects, and some of the cleared land was converted to industrial use.

The pinch that this trend and the concomitant restrictions against open occupancy are making on Negroes is accentuated by removals from highway construction, renewal and other bulldozing in the Negro community and the accompanying increase of multi-dwelling units, especially along newly developed tracts near railroads in the Negro ghetto.[2]

Negro overcrowding - Evidence that progressive highway construction and urban renewal are among factors influencing crowding of low income Negroes is reported in the 1963 annual report of the Fulton County Department of Family and Children Services. Entitled, "Appalachia in Atlanta," the report states that bulldozing for renewal and highways, generally considered progressive measures, have cleared land where some slums lay festering, but a result has been the pushing of many slum dwellers back to the fringes of the areas cleared, making their overcrowded conditions more crowded.

[1]At least two Negro families live in this high rise apartment building constructed in an area formerly called Buttermilk Bottom. Rental rates put the facility out of the economic reach of most Negroes, for few can pay as much as $175 or $200 a month for rent.

[2]Examples of this are about a dozen multi-unit apartments recently built along Gordon Road near the Atlantic Coastline Railroad on the West Side. Most single units have four rooms, two of which may serve as bedrooms. Some families use living rooms both as a parlor by day and sleeping room by night.

This is not reflected in overall figures by U. S. Census tracts. Nevertheless, field trips to hard-core poverty pockets suggest increasing density of the poorest families. For example, the Welfare Department's report discloses that, " . . . for five years prior to 1960, 102 welfare recipients lived on Merritts Avenue, Northeast (adjacent to an urban renewal area), while during the last five years, 192 welfare recipients have lived on the same street" -- about a 90 per cent increase in the density of Merritts Avenue's welfare recipients.

Inspection of working maps reveal that the Ngero population, which represents 43 per cent of the city of Atlanta's total and 20.2 per cent of the metropolitan area's, occupies only about 20 per cent of the city's land area. The figures still show dense ghetto living for Negroes -- especially in low income districts -- despite the rapid pace of housing construction for both whites and Negroes. For those whose improving economic conditions afford them better housing, the trend seems to be reversing. This is reflected in the fact that new housing is keeping pace with population growth. It in fact suggests some relief.

Housing Conditions - While the overall quantity of Negro housing units is inadequate and the Negro's proportional share of land use falls far below Negro population percentages, a more important problem is the condition of housing in the Negro ghetto.[1] In a study commissioned by Atlanta's Community Improvement Program (known generally as the Urban Renewal Program), a firm of private city planning consultants, in an unfinished report, finds that when data relating to condition of housing is introduced, Negro housing balance is out of kilter.[2]

[1]Some of the census tracts in the corporate city of Atlanta are not contigious with the city limits. There are 10 of these split tracts at the edge of the city. They include F-77 through 79; F-81 and 82; F-98; and F-100 through 103. For population breakdown within the city, we have used the city-county estimates of all the split tracts. For economic data and housing listings, including vacancies, we have used the estimates of whole tracts which roughly represent the city completely, omitting three of the split tracts (F-101 through 103) and including the other split tracts in their entirety.

[2]This report is being developed under the direction of the Atlanta Planning Department, with the help of private research consultants Candeub, Fleissig, Adley, and Associates.

The 1960 U. S. Census reports 46 of each 100 Negro homes surveyed were deteriorating, dilapidated, or lacked amenities. When applied to the total of Atlanta Negro housing, this suggests that 28,235 Negro residences are substandard, in one degree or another.

According to "Appalachia in Atlanta,"[1] "The physical condition of the shelter occupied by 54.4% of welfare recipients is classified as ranging from fair to very poor; 76.84% of them are living in unsanitary conditions and 55.08% are residing in housing needing renovation or repairs." (Plunkettown, near the city's south corporate limits, is a pocket of Negro housing with outside privies and slum dwellings.)

Housing Change - The movement of middle-income Negroes to standard housing outside the Negro area is overshadowed by the negative aspects of increased crowding of welfare recipients of which 61% in the corporate city limits are Negro.

"Of the 467,600 population Atlanta had in 1963," the report continues, "some 222,385 persons were living in 'highly concentrated poverty areas.'" These areas included 44 U. S. Census tracts covering 23 square miles. And every census tract in the corporate city limits and throughout the metropolitan area had families whose earnings were below the "$3,000-a-year poverty level."[2]

[1] Annual Report of Fulton County Department of Children and Family Services, 1963.

[2] Of predominantly Negro census tracts surveyed, 26, or 65% have 30% or more families with earnings below $3,000 a year. Among the 83 predominantly white tracts within the corporate city limits, 13, or 15% have 30% or more families earning below $3,000.

Since much of the Negro housing expansion tends to be into low-income white fringe areas, other Negro homes are subject to deteriorate rapidly. This is especially true of borderline homes like those in Atlanta's West End and Kirkwood areas, and more recently, Center Hill, from which white families are moving.

On the other hand, some movement of Negroes into middle income districts like Peyton Forest, Audobon Forest, and the Cascade Heights areas of Southwest Atlanta provides above-standard residences and spacious lawns.

Working papers of Atlanta's unfinished CIP (Community Improvement Program) report catalogs the housing changes of Negroes by area in the table below.[1]

Vacant Houses and Economics - Scattered throughout the city, according to housing estimates of the Atlanta Regional Metropolitan Planning Council, there are some 9,040 vacant houses (see Table II). In addition, 11,732 are available outside the city limits but within the metropolitan area, indicating a total of 20,772 vacant units.[1] About 300 of these are in public, low income projects[2] which are, in the main, still segregated with 16 to 20 Negroes mixed in predominantly white projects. Ironically, the projects have long waiting lists and many poverty-stricken Negroes cannot qualify for such housing because they have no job, can't prove marriage, or for other reasons. All eleven of Atlanta's public housing projects are situated either within or adjacent to predominantly Negro communities. To some degree, they serve as buffers to expansion of the ghetto at some fringes of Negro sections.[3]

To determine whether ill-housed Negroes could afford these vacant dwellings in the various census tracts, we know of no way short of actually surveying rental residences and earnings of potential Negro renters.[4] We do know, however, that Negroes tend to pay more than whites for comparable housing because of the artificial market created by ghetto barriers. For example, housing experts interviewed estimated that "other things being equal," a $20,000 house in the all-Negro Collier Heights district would cost about $18,000 in Chamblee, a white suburban area. Moreover, one substandard five room house in Atlanta's Vine City, a central slum district, was bringing its owner $120 a month by serving as the abode of more than one family unit.[5]

---

[1] All of these figures are computed from estimates of each census tract by RMAPC.

[2] Atlanta Daily World, February 17, 1966.

[3] This is shown best by the location of projects in West End. Express highways, West View Cemetary and the lack of road access from Negro to white areas also serve as buffers.

[4] See attached economic data on Negro districts.

[5] Located on Markham Street, the five-room house has only one outside door and was constructed as a single family unit. It has one bath.

There also is evidence that some Negroes necessarily must decline job offers in outlying districts because they either are unable to solve transportation problems to and from the job or they are not free to move nearer.[1] This points to another obstacle in the complexities that tie housing and socio-economics together. Even the federal government, like some other equal opportunity employers, unwittingly builds a bias against potential Negro employees by locating plants far away from the population center where most Negroes live.

Conclusions - Neither the corporate city of Atlanta nor any governmental unit of the metropolitan area has laws prohibiting racial discrimination in housing. Consequently, many of the persons displaced by slum clearance and/or other public projects such as highway construction and schools face heavy burdens in their search for standard housing. Many with very low income end up more poorly housed and often cramped by overcrowding after displacement. This is due partly to the building of a smaller proportion of homes for low-income and the limited availability of homes for large families, especially those needing three or more bedrooms. For large poor families, the city's oldest supply of houses offers best prospects for obtaining enough room.

Moneywise and otherwise, Atlanta has the resources for providing the needed housing. In 1963, Atlanta's retail sales reached

[1] Noyes Collins of the Atlanta Friends Service Committee said several unemployed and underemployed Negroes he contacted were unable to accept jobs near Chamblee because of transportation difficulties.

$1,618,757, up 75% from the $1,229,461 figure of 1958.[1] It has one of the nation's lowest unemployment indexes when compared with other cities of its size.[2] It has some political awareness of its urban problems and has commissioned studies to better determine a workable program for community improvement. It also has volunteer groups which have expressed interest in helping to solve problems.[3]

Since the bulk of the Negro housing migration is to deteriorating residences at the fringes of the Negro areas, change represents, in most cases, an extension of the Negro ghetto or the creation of new Negro enclaves. If the hypothesis is valid that the dissolution of the Negto ghetto is needed to undermine the roots that in-breed socio-economic and housing problems, it follows that a bold program of corrective mechanism is needed to break housing barriers. The entire metropolitan area must be included in the program.

COMMUNITY ATTITUDES AND RESOURCES

Eliza Paschal is ~~to completed~~ doing draft on attitudes of CR and other organizations - to be inserted here.

SECTION V

THE PLAN: A PROGRAM FOR OPEN OCCUPANCY

INTRODUCTION

The proposed program for selective neighborhood desegregation in Atlanta has three purposes. First, it will investigate the feasibility and applicability of certain action approaches to housing desegregation that may have significant and constructive long-range effects. Second, it will develop and test certain specific incentives that may encourage segregated neighborhoods to initiate programs of orderly desegregation of housing thus stabilizing populations that otherwise might migrate in search of segregated housing. Third, by so effectively supplementing facilities, improving housing conditions, and providing amenities in certain neighborhoods as to induce residents in segregated areas to move into these neighborhoods.

To meet the first requirement, it proposes the selection of certain "testing points", i.e. neighborhoods now integrated or with socio-economic characteristics that should make housing integration a likely prospect in the immediate future. At these testing points, certain specific inducements that should further accelerate the process of desegregation would be introduced. The goal of this phase of the study would be to determine the effect upon neighborhood acceptance of the various techniques employed.

The "testing point" is to serve two functions. First, it will be the administrative device through which a project will be introduced into the selected neighborhood and maintained in that neighborhood for the life of the project. Second, it will provide the mechanism through which information on resident reaction to the project being tested will be fed back to the reviewing body. The staffing of a "testing point" will be highly variable, depending on the content of the project. In some cases it may involve the part-time services of one person; when more complex activities are involved, a full-time staff - professional and clerical - may be required in order to conduct the activity and feed back the results.

In developing this program proposal, the following assumptions have been made:

- The City cannot force integration on previously segregated neighborhoods but it can help provide conditions under which housing desegregation will make possible improvement in quality of housing, amenities and community facilities and in morale rather than accelerate residential decay and neighborhood decline.

- The City cannot prevent the distress and economic loss that may accompany integration of housing forced by ramdon migration of Negroes but it can help offer an alternative that insures that the social and economic dislocation that can accompany this integration no longer has its primary impact on its most defenseless citizens - Negro and White - and that these citizens are afforded the chance to convert apparent social crisis into opportunity.

- We cannot discipline a total population or even large groups of people - therefore we must motivate individuals;

- We cannot enforce a quota system, even if it might be desirable, but we can work actively toward placing some Negro families in virtually all segregaged neighborhoods;

- We cannot control the actions of communities abutting Atlanta, but we can provide an example of peacefull desegregation that they may later choose to follow;

- We cannot ask a political person to act "un-politically", but we can expose him to the opportunities to acquire support that are implicit in long range applications of desegregation policies;

- We cannot ask an "economic man" to do something that is unprofitable, but we can suggest the form and extent of the compensation that housing desegregation may provide.

Moreover, we assume that this program will be effective only if:

- The program is constantly subject to review and revision by competent private and public agencies;

- The program developed is considered to be only one facet of an overall activity aimed at changing Atlanta's institutional patterns over at least a decade;

- The voluntary flow of Negro families into previously all white neighborhoods continues at no less than the present pace;

- Certain fundamental structural changes take place at the governmental level (e.g., that a Fair Housing Code will be enacted, that an official "City Position" will emerge).

In its content and approach, this program will deal with barriers to housing desegregation as a complex of technical problems amenable to solution by rational means. Its orientation will be to the development of techniques for solving these problems. In its recommendations, it will stress the involvement of agencies and individuals now active in the fields of race relations, housing and urban development.

Data to support various study elements, e.g. condition and value of housing, scope and direction of Negro migration, current levels of public services and facilities, are becoming available as various elements of the Atlanta Community Renewal Program are completed. This information will be fed into the various preliminary studies proposed as part of this program.

The final product of this program will not be an official Proposal for the Integration of Housing in Atlanta, but a set of tools that should provide those interested in speeding housing desegregation with the means of making the process as rapid and as free of controversy as possible.

ORGANIZATION AND STRUCTURE

The proposed organization for the implementation of this proposal consists of four elements:

1. Program Guidance and Support: to be placed at the highest possible level in City government, preferably vested in a staff position assigned directly to the Office of the Mayor, in order that the full powers of the Mayor's office and prestige of his position will be available to support the public and private measures necessary to accomplish program goals. (Note: This proposal is predicated on the implementation of the content of the PAS report recommending a strong mayor structure for city government.)

   Function: To provide overall program guidance and to serve as principal point of contact and clearance between the Program and the Office of the Mayor and the Board of Aldermen. In order to insure continuous and close liaison between operational and administrative phases of the Program and the political leadership of the community, this officer will serve as "ex-officio" member of the Steering Committee (see below). In this connection, he will report regularly to the Mayor and Board of Aldermen as to progress made toward the objectives of the Program and on any unusually complex and significant problems that may arise in connection with its implementation. From time to time, he will present to community political and civic leaders his recommendations as to the direction the Program should take.

2. Program Selection and Policy Formulation: To be the function of a Steering Committee broadly representative of community interests and composed of senior officials of various cooperating public and private agencies and of members-at-large selected on the basis of professional qualifications and/or access to important bodies of public opinion.

Function: To serve as the principal deliberative and decision-making body and the point of clearance for all substantive activities undertaken under the program; and, to provide the channel for communication between the political leadership of the community and the various protessional associations and the publics that members of the Committee represent. For this purpose, the Committee will meet regularly to review the content of current and recommended projects and the activities proposed for or underway at the various "testing points." On the basis of this review, the Committee will suggest neighborhoods in which projects should be initiated, or terminated and the specific projects that should be initiated, or terminated, in these neighborhoods. The Committee also will serve as the point of review and approval of proposals for city-wide research. The Committee may also, from time to time, request that the staff of the cooperating federal agency or consultants or advisors retained by the staff, undertake special studies of existing or proposed programs on potential "testing points."

3. Administration of Continuing Program Activities: To be the responsibility of a single agency, most logically the EOA, to insure program continuity and close cooperation among those working at the action level, and to simplify disbursement and accounting procedures. This function will encompass all Program activities ranging from field operations tied directly to EOA neighborhood centers to administrative backstopping for grants in support of specialized research and development projects undertaken under contract in support of the Program.

Function: To provide for initiating, directing and controlling all activities undertaken under this Program, including developing background data in support of proposed activities, and presenting these data at conferences of the various Panels (see below). On approval of each component project, the Agency will assume responsibility for staffing, budgeting and orientation phases of project implementation and will report regularly to the Committee on the rate of progress of each project. In relation to the research projects undertaken under this Program, the Agency will recommend contractors, both governmental and private, and will provide supporting data indicating the scope and probable duration of the proposed project, areas of competence of potential contractors, and appropriate levels of financial support. It also will, at the request of the Committee, enter into contract negotiations with private contractors and on approval of these contracts will maintain necessary administrative records and controls.

4. Neighborhood Selection and Research Project Screening Activities: To be the responsibility of Technical Advisory Panels composed of appropriate members of the various public and private agencies represented on the Steering Committee, to be chaired by representatives of the cooperating federal agency and to receive technical backstopping from the same Agency.

Function: To examine the various neighborhoods that may be eligible to become "testing points" including their socio-economic characteristics and their respective needs, in order that meaningful priorities among alternative Program sites and categories of projects can be developed. In this connection, the various Panels will review data dealing with these elements that are compiled by the Agency for this purpose and, as necessary, will conduct field investigations to supplement its knowledge of neighborhoods and projects under consideration. When projects are underway, the Panel may conduct further investigations to determine in general the effectiveness of the project and to judge the feasibility of supplementing the activity, or terminating it. The Panel also will serve as the point of initial review of proposed new projects in the general area of research and will recommend to the Committee on the basis of its investigations those research activities that should receive priority consideration and the contractors it considers to be best equipped to complete the task.

PROGRAM IMPLEMENTATION

The selection of neighborhoods as "testing points" will be accomplished in three stages - definition, comparison and selection.

1. Definition: In this stage, criteria will be developed that will distinguish those neighborhoods that appear to be especially appropriate as sites for the study of housing desegregation from other parts of the city. Among the factors to be considered are:

   a. "Newness" of community/neighborhood, ratio of "immigrant" to indigenous residents - an indicator of extent to which patterns of relationship and attitude are rooted in tradition;

   b. Age level in community/neighborhood - in part reflecting item a (above) and in part indicating probable ability to adapt to change;

   c. Education level in community/neighborhood - in part reflecting a and b (above) and in part a criterion of acceptance of change (assumption: those with formal education are more likely to be concerned with objective fact than with emotion-rooted opinion);

   d. Economic level in community/neighborhood - in part reflecting items a, b, and c above, and in part suggesting that reduced anxieties over economic conditions and decreased competition for scarce jobs creates an atmosphere more conducive to housing desegregation;

e. Extent to which educational system and public facilities and services are desegregated and degree to which this desegregation is generally accepted by the community/neighborhood - suggests existing pattern of acceptance of desegregation that can be extended to include housing desegregation;

f. Extent to which public officials and informal leaders in community/neighborhood accept desegregation as an operating principle and reinforce their position by overtly supporting programs of desegregation;

g. Extent to which housing desegregation programs are undertaken on a moderate and rational basis with ample and skillful advance preparation for change, and with due respect for the rights of owners of private property.

2. Comparison: In this stage the various neighborhoods (Census Blocks) in the community will be examined on the basis of criteria developed under Item 1 above. From these data the first sort will be conducted and neighborhoods classified along a continuum ranging from "very high acceptance potential" to "very low acceptance potential". This step may also involve interviews with neighborhood leaders and/or survey research studies of attitudes of residents toward de-segregation.

Selection: In this stage members of Panels appointed on the basis of their special knowledge of various areas of the City or familiarity with attitudes toward housing integration will review the information accumulated (item 2, above) and select specific neighborhoods to serve as "testing areas". Their recommendations will be presented to the Steering Committee in general session. Formal approval of these proposals by this body will constitute a commitment to institute an action program in the designated neighborhoods(s).

The selection of projects for introduction into neighborhood action programs will also be accomplished in three stages - investigation, testing and application:

1. Investigation: Various alternative proposals as to means of providing support to neighborhoods selected as "testing points" will be presented to Panels representing various functional fields, e.g. health, education, physical planning, welfare, transportation, recreation, urban design. These proposals will be researched, primarily through experience surveys, and estimates of probable impact and of cost and duration will be prepared. On the basis of this information, the Panel will suggest that certain projects be tested in various neighborhoods and will assign these projects specific priorities. These recommendations will be brought to the full committee for approval. Formal approval of specific project proposals and of the priority assigned to them will constitute a commitment to institute the testing process.

2. Testing: Those proposals approved for testing will be introduced into existing or newly established neighborhood centers on the basis of recommendations of Joint Panels composed of neighborhood and functional specialists to the Steering Committee and the Committee approval of the program. Regular reports on their progress, supplemented by inspections in the field, will be submitted to the Joint Panels by project personnel. At the conclusion of the period assigned for investigation, a report on the project, its apparent success and special problems it generated, together with recommendations for continuing or terminating it will be presented to the Committee by the Joint Panel.

3. Application: Approved projects will be assigned to various additional neighborhoods (within limitations imposed by availability of funds and personnel) where their use appears to meet local needs and in accordance with the priority roster of eligible neighborhoods prepared by the Committee (see above).

The selection of programs of research to be undertaken on a city-wide basis will be accomplished in two steps - review and selection.

1. Review: Various agencies, public and private, will be asked to submit research proposals to the Committee. These proposals should specify purpose, research methodology, probable duration and cost. These proposals will be reviewed by the cooperating federal agency and by members of the appropriate functional Panel, which then will recommend to the Committee that certain proposals be accepted and will suggest the priority to be assigned to the various approved proposals.

   Selection: Within the limits of the funds made available for City-wide research, the Committee will recommend specific priority programs, contractors and levels of support. These recommendations will be forwarded to the cooperating federal agency for action. From this point, responsibility for developing mutually satisfactory administrative and substantive arrangements will be in the hands of the Agency and the proposed contractor

PROJECT CONTENT:

The following are examples of projects that might be undertaken in various neighborhoods in the City under the proposed program:

Project: Consumer Education

Purpose: To inform low income residents of "testing point" neighborhoods of the differentials in cost and quality of basic consumer goods; to advise them of the costs of credit purchases and of alternative sources of credit; to assist them to develop simple budgeting and bookkeeping skills; and, to provide continuing financial and tax information if particular interest to low income groups.

Project: Property Maintenance and Improvement

Purpose: To instruct owners and tenants in the methods of reducing deterioration and of improving appearance, design and marketability of residential structures, including simple carpentry, painting, papering and decorating and, within limits of city codes, simple plumbing and electrical repairs.

Project: Spot Renewal and Physical Uplift

Purpose: To produce immediate and marked improvements in the physical appearance of the neighborhood by introducing certain specific amenities, e.g., small parks, kiosks, playgrounds, planting, significant handling of color or architectural design and by reducing or eliminating outmoded, dangerous or visually offensive structures.

Project: Clearing House

Purpose: To inform potential residents of desegregating neighborhoods of vacancies existing; of costs and special benefits that may accrue to residents of these neighborhoods under the proposed coordinated program. (Note: Recommended contractor: The Urban League.)

Project: Augmented Public Services

Purpose: To provide levels of supportive services, e.g., trash pick-up, street cleaning and maintenance, public safety, that meet the highest standards established for these services in comparable urban areas.

Project: Augmented Public Facilities

Purpose: To construct, rebuild, or refurbish public structures and facilities, e.g., libraries, schools, fire stations, parks and playgrounds, in order that their overall quality and appearance will be consistent with that in the most favored neighborhoods in the City.

Training and Placement Services

Purpose: To instruct residents in the skills and techniques required to practice certain vocations and trades, stressing those for which effective demand currently exists; and, to assist qualified residents to obtain local employment that will enable them to use these skills and techniques.

Project: Transportation Services

Purpose: To make available public transportation services, and to encourage the development of auxiliary private transportation services that will link the "testing point neighborhood" with principal complementary employment and shopping areas.

Project: School Up-Grading Program

Purpose: To supplement the instructional program with special activities and projects for the purpose of strengthening special talents and abilities and broadening economic and social perspectives of pupils and parents.

The following are examples of research programs that might be undertaken on a city-wide basis that could generate broad and wide-scale changes of attitude toward housing desegregation:

Project: Public School Teachers' Education Program

Purpose: To inform public school teachers of the goals of programs of housing desegregation and of their accomplishments; and, to encourage active participation in, and support of, these programs by these teachers.

Project: Real Estate Agents' Education Program

Purpose: To acquaint real estate agents with profit potentials of service to Negro clients; with the techniques that can be employed to introduce members of minority groups into segregated communities with minimal friction; and with effective methods of working with Negro tenants and clients.

Project: Influence of Property Tax Structure on Viability of Blighted Residential Areas

Purpose: To examine and report upon the characteristics of municipal and state tax codes that may act to subsidize the investments of owners and administrators of slum properties, and, to specify changes in these codes and ordinances that might remove these special benefits and subsidies.

Project: Fair Housing Act
Purpose: To secure the enactment of a local ordinance consistent in content and philosophy with the goals and intent of the Federal Act; in this connection acquiring comparable acts and ordinances from other municipalities, preparing appropriate proposals as to content and presentation of such an ordinance, and encouraging significant organizations and individuals to support such legislation.

Project: Public Housing
Purpose: To evaluate needs for additional public housing, including demand, appropriate location and design and structural characteristics preferred by potential consumers; and, to determine applicability of present and proposed Federal actions—support of expanding public housing availabilities.

Project: Workable Program for Community Improvement Purpose: To determine the extent to which the city is conforming in its housing and urban development activities with the increasingly rigorous standards that have been developed and now are being invoked by the Department of Housing and Urban Development; and, to encourage the city so to enforce its housing codes and ordinances as to meet or exceed these standards.

Project: Policies and Practices in Enforcement of Eviction Ordinances

Purpose: To conduct a comparative study of eviction ordinances in various communities, their provisions and their apparent influence on landlord - tenant relations; and, to examine the policies and procedures for enforcement of these ordinances in order to develop recommendations as to changes in present practices that would protect the owners equity while at the same time protecting the tenant from arbitrary, abrupt eviction practices taking place under cover of legal sanction.

Project: Proposal for a Demonstration Grant in Support of Neighborhood Improvement

Purpose: To acquire information pertaining to the standards that must be met by a neighborhood wishing to be considered as a site for a Neighborhood Demonstration Grant (or for the Demonstration Cities Program), and to conduct an inventory of Atlanta neighborhoods that might be eligible for such assistance; to develop a plan for the implementation of such a program and, with appropriate support, to present this plan to the Department of Housing and Urban Development for approval.

Project: Survey Research re. Neighborhood Desegregation.

Purpose: To elicit responses from residents of various neighborhoods that will reveal the following perceptions: the attitudes of Negroes toward moving into "white" neighborhoods; the attitudes of whites toward moving into Negro neighborhoods; the attitudes of white and Negro residents in integrating neighborhoods toward continuing to live in such a neighborhood, i.e. Peyton Road Area.

Project: Economic Impact of "Block-busting" on Home Owners.

Purpose: To investigate the long-term effects on property owners of neighborhood desegregation. In particular, to estimate the costs, both to emigrating white residents and immigrant Negro residents, of sales of housing below fair market price and of acquisition of housing at inflated prices, including such factors as extension of mortgage payments, increased costs for equivalent facilities and increased interest charged on mortgage obligations payable over longer periods of time.

PROPOSED ORGANIZATION: ATLANTA EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN HOUSING ACTION PROGRAM

Harry - not certain of EOA structure. Assume they have area and functional specialists; don't know where city-wide research should be assigned, but assume it should be under the steering committee

CRITICAL PATH ANALYSIS -- EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN HOUSING

10.0 Acceptance, Classification and Preliminary Approval of Project Proposals

10.1 Project description and content analysis.

101.1 Develop detailed task description.

101.2 Determine personnel and special service and/or equipment requirement

101.3 Estimate time required, by component element.

101.4 Estimate total direct project cost.

101.5 Recommend contractor or vendor.

10.2 Select contractor and/or program staff assignments.

102.1 Select qualified contractor(s).

102.2 Program staff support.

102.3 Clear project content.with contractor(s) or staff unit.

102.4 Clear proposed budget and time schedule with contractor(s)/staff unit.

102.5 Prepare draft contract or support agreement.

10.3 Present project proposal to appropriate technical panel

103.1 Review proposed project content.

103.2 Review proposed administrative arrangements.

10.4 Project acceptance or rejection.

104.1 Review applicable policy considerations with Special Assistant (Mayor)

104.2 Accept project as proposed.

104.3 Accept project, with specifically cited modifications. (Return to 10.1).

104.4 Reject project.

104.5 Assign approved or approved-with-qualifications projects priority numbers.

20.0 Project Acceptance.

20.1 Project review.

201.1 Present summary project proposal.

201.2 Present summary of proposed administrative arrangements.

20.2 Review pertinent policy considerations.

20.3 Formal project acceptance or rejection.

203.1 Approve project for immediate action.

203.2 Approve project for action when funds/personnel available.

203.3 Approve project subject to specified modifications. (Return to 10.1)

203.4 Reject project.

203.5 Approve proposed contractor or vendor or use of suggested unit.

30.0 "Testing Point" Neighborhood Selection.

30.1 Evaluate neighborhood characteristics.

301.1 Develop and compile specific criteria for neighborhood "eligibility".

301.2 Compile descriptive information relative to Atlanta neighborhoods on basis of criteria selected (above).

3012.1 Obtain pertinent data from Atlanta CRP

301.3 Sort neighborhoods, rejecting those that fail to meet criteria.

30.2 Subjective appraisal of neighborhoods as sites for program activities (i.e. as "testing points").

302.1 Develop supplemental criteria for neighborhood acceptance.

302.2 Apply these criteria to neighborhoods meeting objective standards (above).

302.3 Assign neighborhoods priority according to:

3023.1 Need.

3023.2 Amenability to integration.

3023.3 Demonstrated interest in the program.

3023.4 Policy considerations.

30.3 Neighborhood acceptance. (over)

30.3 Neighborhood acceptance.

303.1 Approve specific neighborhoods as eligible for project support.

303.2 Determine specific neighborhood needs.

3032.1 Establish needs in various functional categories.

3032.2 Establish piorities among needs for each "eligible" neighborhood.

303.3 Establish priorities among "eligible" neighborhoods.

40.0 Coordination of Project Plan with Neighborhood Plan.

40.1 Review priority listing of neighborhoods and estimates of their project needs.

40.2 Review categories of projects:

402.1 Available for immediate effectuation.

402.2 Under research contract or inter-agency agreement.

40.3 Select for priority neighborhoods appropriate projects, on basis of::

403.1 Demonstrated need.

403.2 Availability of needed project.

403.3 Availability of financial or other program support.

403.4 Conformity with policy considerations.

50.0 Project Implementation.

(6) Land Coverage Regulations: No more than 40 per cent of the total area of any lot, tract or parcel or any combination of lots, tracts or parcels shall be covered by a building or buildings.

c. Time Regulations are to be in Effect

The above land use provisions and building requirements including any amendments thereto, shall continue in full force and effect for a period of twenty years from the date of approval thereof by the City Council of the City of Richmond.

d. Applicability of Regulations to Property Not Acquired

The above regulations and land use provisions comprising the Redevelopment Plan shall not apply to real property within the project boundary which is not to be acquired. Zoning Regulations of the City of Richmond, with which these regulations are in accord, will control the development of such property. In the event that the owner or owners of property which is located within the project boundary but is "not to be acquired", subsequently acquire project land, the land use provisions and additional regulations stipulated in Section C of the Redevelopment Plan shall be made to apply to all property within the project boundary so owned, by covenants in appropriate disposition instruments.

3. The Redevelopment Plan for 17th Street Redevelopment Project also constitutes the Urban Renewal Plan for said project.

D. PROJECT PROPOSALS

1. Land Acquisition

   (a) Identification of real property to be acquired

   The real property which is to be acquired within the Project boundary has been identified on the Acquisition Map, Redevelopment Plan 2.

   (1) All land within the Project boundary which is to be acquired is to be cleared and made available for redevelopment.

   (2) Land which is to be acquired for public facilities (Juvenile Detention Home and combined Elementary and Junior High School) has been so indicated on the Acquisition Map, Redevelopment Plan 2.

   (3) None of the project land which is to be acquired is to be rehabilitated or otherwise conserved.

   (4) Property not to be acquired has been identified on the Acquisition Map, Redevelopment Plan 2.

   (b) None of the properties not designated for acquisition are to be acquired under any circumstances.

   (c) None of the properties designated for acquisition will be exempted from acquisition for any reason.

2. Conservation or Reconditioning

   This Redevelopment Plan includes no conservation or reconditioning proposals.

3. Redeveloper's Obligations

   The redeveloper shall begin and complete the development of the project land in accordance with the provisions of the Redevelopment Plan within the time specified in the disposition instrument.

E. OTHER PROVISIONS NECESSARY TO MEET STATE AND LOCAL REQUIREMENTS

The Redevelopment Plan for the 17th Street Redevelopment Project is based on the provisions of the Virginia Housing Authorities' Law 36:51 (Title 36, Code of Virginia 1952 as amended) and with the regulations of the City of Richmond. The relationship of the Redevelopment Plan to the provisions of the Virginia Law is as follows:

1. Relationship to Local Objectives

   a. Appropriate Land Uses

      The Land Use Plan for the City of Richmond provides for an arrangement of land uses including residential, public school and industrial essentially as delineated on the Land Use Map, Redevelopment Plan 2. Proposed changes in the existing zoning district map are made to conform more closely with the land use proposals of the Richmond Master Plan.

   b. Improved Traffic

      Five of the streets in the 17th Street Redevelopment Project have been designated as major streets in the Richmond Master Plan (Major Street Plan), 17th Street, Fairfield, Mechanicsville-Mosby, Venable, Marshall. Project proposals are in harmony with the City's plan as revised by the Technical Advisory Sub-Committee of the Richmond Regional Planning and Economic Development Commission. Improvement standards are those of the Richmond Department of Public Works. The Redevelopment Plan revises the network of internal minor streets, now an illogical grid pattern on rough topography, to provide improved access to abutting property with an overall reduction in streets. The net result will be an improved flow of traffic, improved access to abutting property and less traffic hazard in residential areas.

   c. Public Transportation

      Two existing bus routes utilize major streets within the project on Mechanicsville Turnpike, Mosby and 17th Streets. The improvement of these two streets to high standards will increase the efficiency of the present routing while the connecting network of new streets will permit improved routing.

d. Public Utilities

Public utilities provided in the redevelopment of the project area fully meet existing city standards for service for the types of land use specified in the Redevelopment Plan.

e. Recreation and Community Facilities

Recreation and Community facilities are provided in the Redevelopment Plan by the elementary and junior high schools and their related open areas to be built on a site of approximately 30 acres. The site is well related to the residential neighborhood and should provide full community facilities. Neighborhood park facilities for the surrounding area will be afforded by the playground developed on the combined school ground.

2. Relationship to City Plan and Zoning Ordinance

The proposed land use and building requirements as specified in Section C-2 of the Redevelopment Plan are in harmony with the city land use plan and zoning district map as revised.

3. Zoning Changes

The changes in the City of Richmond Zoning District Map which are required to permit redevelopment of real property in accordance with the Redevelopment Plan are delineated in detail on Redevelopment Plan 4.

Prior to the construction of the Juvenile Detention Home, the city will take necessary steps to permit the location of such facility in a residential district.

4. Project Improvements

Proposed project improvements have been designed to prepare the project land for full re-use in accordance with the Redevelopment Plan and to provide for major streets in accordance with the Richmond Major Street Plan. The streets, utility systems and other improvements necessary to accomplish local objectives as to improved traffic, adequate public utilities, recreational and educational facilities and proper land development, have been indicated on Redevelopment Plan 5.

5. Designation of Land Available for Redevelopment

All project land with the exception of the 29.6 acres to be redeveloped for school use and the 10.2 acres to be developed as a detention home will be available for redevelopment or development by private enterprise. This designation is indicated on the Land Use Map and the Acquisition Map, Redevelopment Plan 2 and 3.

6. Relocation

State and Federal laws require that decent, safe and sanitary dwellings be provided for displaced persons at rents or sale prices within their means. The Authority will comply with State and Federal laws by locating or assisting in locating a decent, safe and sanitary dwelling unit for every person to be displaced from the Project Area. Such dwelling units must be not generally less desirable than their former homes in regard to public utilities and commercial facilities and at rents and prices within the means of persons displaced from the Project. They shall be equal in number to the number of and available to such displaced persons and reasonably accessible to their places of employment.

Certain acts committed by a family to be relocated may be construed as a rejection of aid and will relieve the Authority of this responsibility. If a family is evicted for a failure to pay rents when due, such eviction after court action will relieve the Authority of any further responsibility for relocation assistance. If a person refuses a suitable vacancy without valid cause, the Authority will be under no further obligation to extend relocation assistance to that person.

A dwelling is regarded as decent, safe and sanitary when it complies with the Sanitary Housing Ordinance of the city of Richmond, is in good repair; weather-tight with no leakage and dampness; has no health, fire and safety hazards in the structure or its immediate vicinity; has a safe running water supply and sewer-connected sink within the dwelling unit; an available sewer-connected flush toilet within the building serving not more than 10 persons; an available bathroom; heating and electric lighting facilities and is large enough to accommodate the family without overcrowding.

Convenient site relocation offices, as required, staffed with experienced Authority personnel, will be established in the Project Area as property acquisition proceeds. Following purchase by the Authority site occupants and businesses will be notified in writing of the necessity for relocation and the assistance available through the Authority. The relocation offices will maintain contact with site occupants, locating and inspecting vacancies, and relocating occupants in suitable housing. Clearance will be carried out in stages or phases to facilitate relocation with all habitable dwellings being rented temporarily to site residents and maintained in a habitable condition by the Authority during the interval between purchase and clearance.

The scheduling of the development of the Project, together with the availability of existing decent, safe and sanitary dwellings will make temporary relocation of persons living on project lands to be acquired unnecessary. To the extent, however, that temporary relocation may prove to be necessary during the development of the Project, the Authority will aid all persons needing such assistance and the responsibility of the Authority in this matter will not cease until all such persons have been offered permanent, decent, safe and sanitary dwelling accommodations.

Cash payments for moving expenditures will be made to families, as well as commercial and industrial establishments. In no event will such payments exceed the maximum amount permitted by the Authority.

The Project Area is presently occupied by 481 families (including 83 single persons) living in 631 dwelling units to be cleared. There is now available or will have been made available upon completion of this project, an equivalent number of decent, safe and sanitary dwellings at rents or prices within the financial reach of the income groups displaced. The Authority's plans for relocating these families are as follows:

a. There are 349 non-white families whose incomes are so low as to qualify the families for low-rent public housing. There are 2035 units of public housing for Negroes in the community which have an annual average turnover of 408 units a year, or an estimated 1200 units over a three-year period. In addition, a 450 unit public housing project for non-whites will be completed and made available for occupancy during the acquisition and clearance of project land. The non-white families displaced from the Project Area will be given preference for vacancies in these public housing projects. There are seventeen white families in the Project Area eligible for public housing. They will be offered accommodations in a 402 unit non-white public housing project which has an average annual turnover in excess of 144 units a year.

b. There are 107 non-white families ineligible for public housing whose incomes range from $2,900 to more than $5,000 per annum. There are presently available within the community sufficient decent, safe and sanitary dwelling units for rental purposes at rents ranging from $45.00 to $80.00 per month. The eight white families now living in the project area who are over income for public housing will have a considerable choice of available dwelling units for their consideration.

7. Redeveloper's Contracts

In addition to such conditions and requirements as the Authority may deem desirable, each contract with a redeveloper shall also require that:

a. The use of land in the project area shall be for the purposes designated in the Redevelopment Plan as provided in Section 36-51 of the Virginia Housing Authorities Law (Title 36, Code of Virginia 1952 as amended).

b. The Redeveloper shall begin and complete the development of project land acquired within a reasonable time to be specified in the contract.

c. The Redeveloper shall retain the interest acquired until the completion of construction and development in the area acquired pursuant to this Redevelopment Plan and shall not sell, lease or transfer the interest acquired or any part thereof without the prior written consent of the Authority at any time prior to such completion of construction and development.

d. Land in the project area shall be used and maintained in a manner to prevent the recurrence of slums and blight or as would not disadvantage the general neighborhood or otherwise impair the objectives of the Redevelopment Plan.

No covenant, agreement, lease, conveyance or other instrument shall be executed by the Richmond Redevelopment and Housing Authority or by any purchasers or lessees from it (or any successors in interest of such purchasers or lessees), whereby land in the project area is restricted, either by the Authority) or by such purchasers, lessees or successors in interest, upon the basis of race, creed or color, in the sale, lease or occupancy thereof.

F. PROCEDURE FOR CHANGES IN PLAN

The Redevelopment Plan may be modified at any time by the Richmond Redevelopment and Housing Authority with the consent and approval of the Council of the City of Richmond provided that if modified after disposition of any land in the project area, said Authority shall obtain the written consent of the then owner of such land whose interests therein are materially affected by such modification.

Attack on Blight Planned By City Housing Authority

Plans for a massive, six-year assault against the blighting influences that create slums are being completed by the Richmond Redevelopment and Housing Authority.

Frederic A. Fay, executive director of the authority, said the plans are expected to be finished by the middle of July.

They will be incorporated in a community renewal program designed to unite private and public forces in a campaign to prevent the development of blight and to attack it wherever it has begun.

This is the way the program would work:

For the purposes of the program, the city has been divided into 19 districts. The physical, social and economic characteristics of each district have been analyzed, and the attractive and unattractive features of each district have been identified.

The program will identify those areas that urgently need anti-blight attention. One such area is Fulton. Fay said it would be premature to disclose a complete list of the districts in this category.

To be executed over the six-year period, the community renewal program would involve the use of many anti-slum weapons, such as redevelopment, rehabilitation, the enforcement of housing codes, and public and private building programs that would upgrade neighborhoods.

Preparation of the program has been underway for more than three years. Although the housing authority has supervised the project, city officials and agencies have made major contributions.

Preparation for the project has cost about $120,000, of which $80,000 came from the Federal Housing and Home Finance Agency. The balance represents the city's share, which was in the form of personnel and facilities needed for the study.

THE VIRGINIA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

17 EAST CARY STREET RICHMOND 19, VIRGINIA 648-4445

ROBERT LEE COMBS, Executive Director

A council that seeks — through fact-finding, discussion and action — to attain equal opportunity for all people in Virginia.

9 June 1965

Representatives from the Richmond Council on Human Relations and the VCHR appear today, 9 June 1965, before the Richmond's Commission on Community Relations to discuss the subject of "Fair Housing" in the City of Richmond, Virginia. We sincerely request you to study the following areas.....

(1) Would you please make a study of the "panic conditions" which exists in certain areas of the city due to the transition of population from all white to Negro; include in your study areas that are on the fringe of such a transition but as yet no Negro family has purchased a home in the block? We raise these questions ----- Who is really creating "panic" among the white home owners? Is it the (a) Negro purchasing the white owned home, (b) the white home owner who wants to sell and get out, (c) the Real Estate Agency or Salesman who wants to just increase sales, (d) or, are there other causes?

(2) Who really determines that a block or a section of a community has now become "colored" or Negro? Therefore, how many Negro families must buy a home in a block or a section to determine that the block or section is now a Negro community? What are the major causes of this labeling -- (a) Is it advertisement placed by the Real Estate Salesman in local papers, "For Sale-Colored, (b) Is it the fault of the white home owner, or white owners who rent the property, (c) Is it the fault of the Negro purchaser, (d) Or, are there other causes?

(3) What other pressures exist that cause or create a community to be based on definite racial or religious boundaries?

(4) Is there religious exclusions existing in certain communities which prevent a person of the Jewish Faith, Catholic or other religious minorities from purchasing or renting the home of their choice in the neighborhood of their choice?

(5) What are the methods the Real Estate Agencies use to cover up their operations to still appear legitimate when dealing in sales of a fringe or transitional neighborhood that borders another racial community? Are members of the Richmond Real Estate Board really abiding by their Code of Ethnics and the Code of Ethnics-National Association of Real Estate Boards? What about the Real Estate Agents who are not members of the Richmond Real Estate Board, are their methods legitimate in dealing with fringe or transitional neighborhoods? Is there an effort to include ALL Real Estate Agencies within the Richmond Real Estate Board? Is there an effort to embrace a clear policy of "Fair Housing to ALL?"

(6) What pressures are exerted to prevent a Negro or a Religious Minority from buying the home of their choice? What pressures are employed to prevent these people from -- moving into the home they have purchased in a different neighborhood from their racial or religious background, or remaining as a resident in that home once they have moved?

(7) How available is money from Mortgage Corporations, Banks, Building and Loan, and other private lending agencies to racial, religious, and ethnic minorities who desire to borrow money in order to purchase the home of their choice. Is money more available to the white majority than the Negro or Religious Minority, and yet, the person seeking the loan is just as qualified as the white protestant?

OFFICERS Mr. David H. Scull, President Mr. Harold O. DeWitt, First Vice-President Mr. John O. Lapp, Mrs. George E. Mattus, Mr. M. C. Martin, Vice-Presidents

Dr. Edna M. Colson, Secretary Dr. J. Rupert Picott, Treasurer

(8) Mr. A. Howe Todd, Richmond City Planning Commission, expressed this idea before the Bellevue-Ginter Park Civic League meeting on June 7, 1965 at the Ginter Park Methodist Church --- the re-zoning of the area located north of Lombardy Street, south of Brookland Park Blvd., and along both sides of Chamberlayne Avenue was accomplished because of race. This happened some years ago, because of the pressure of whites wanting to leave and yet they did not want to sell to Negroes. The change was from a " R " Zoning to a " C " Zoning. We request you to study the zoning policy to determine if decisions are still being made because of the above mention reason? Is there discrimination in zoning decisions?

(9) Mr. R. A. Chandler, Assessor of Real Estate, City of Richmond, expressed this idea before the Bellevue-Ginter Park Civic League meeting on June 7, 1965 at the Ginter Park Methodist Church --- one of the charateristics used to determine assessed value of property is social...we look for the homogeneous neighborhood, that is, race, religion, and vocation. We sincerely request that you make a study to see if discrimination is being employed in determining the assessed value of a piece of property because of race or religious minorities?

(10) We kindly request you to review the zoning and building enforcement. Is there a "double standard" of approach and enforcement of the building and zoning codes in certain areas of Richmond when dealing with racial, ethnic, or religious minorities?

We are grateful to you for allowing us to appear today before you. We sincerely urge the above listed subjects be given a fair, factual study and a report be made public indicating your findings.

THE DIMENSIONS OF A COMMUNITY

Today, those of us who wish to see and effect social change are called upon to become more sophisticated, and more informed than any generation ever before. We must understand the conditions and barriers which prohibit change; conditions which our parents would have never dreamed of questioning. Students who wish to bring our state more nearly in line with modern human aspiration are compelled to become students of the "community." That is to say, if we wish to be effective and to avoid blind action and wasted efforts we must come to understand even the most subtle historical, social, psychological, economic, and political factors in the functions and organization of our communities. Out of this knowledge comes the most success for bringing to all Americans civil, social and economic rights and liberties.

In order to begin one's study of the "community" or before one begins some social action calculated to improve the conditions in a given community, one needs certain basic tools. Following is a short list of some such tools. They are sources of important information about Virginia's cities, towns, counties and even magisterial districts. Familiarity with such data is essential to those who anticipate working on projects in local communities. They are also essential for those who have never examined what the American community really looks like in terms of its social and economic conditions.

A. Background information on communities (e.g. population distribution; economy; family and personal income; occupational data; housing conditions; age distribution; education; migration; labor force; agriculture; etc.)

1. County and City Data Book, 1962 (latest edition) Bureau of the Census. Available in the reference section of most libraries.
2. "Economic Data." A separate report for each county in Virginia. Free to the public from the Virginia State Division of Industrial Development and Planning, Richmond.

3. U. S. Census of Agriculture, 1959. Bureau of Census. Available in libraries and at the Bureau of Census, Department of Commerce library in the Federal Building, Richmond.

4. U. S. Census of Housing, 1960. Bureau of Census. Available in libraries and at Bureau of Census, Department of Commerce library, Federal Building, Richmond, for 421 cities in United States and Puerto Rico. These include a housing census in 10 Virginia localities.

5. Census Tract, 1960. Available at libraries and at the Bureau of Census, Department of Commerce library, Federal Building, Richmond, for 180 cities in United States and Puerto Rico. Virginia's 3 largest metropolitan areas and the Washington, D.C.-Maryland-Virginia area are objects of these studies.

6. United States Census of Population, 1960, including:

   PC (1), 48 A, Virginia, "Number of Inhabitants."
   PC (1), 48 B, Virginia, "General Population Characteristics."
   PC (1), 48 C, Virginia, "General Social and Economic Characteristics."
   PC (1), 48 D, Virginia, "Detailed Characteristics."

   Available at most libraries and at the Bureau of Census, Department of Commerce library, Federal Building, Richmond.

B. Maps

1. Virginia Department of Highways, Richmond, sells and distributes free to the public state maps as well as detailed maps for each county. "Base" maps of the state for various uses are also available there.

2. City Departments of Public Utilities as well as City Planning Commissions have very helpful and interesting maps which are for the most part distributed to the public.

3. State and Local Chambers of Commerce distribute maps of the state and localities to the public.

C. Government Structure

1. Virginia's Government, A Description of the Structure and functions of the State and Local Government of the People of Virginia, published and distributed by the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce, Richmond.

2. Constitution of the Commonwealth of Virginia, Available in paperback form from the Department of Purchases and Supply, Richmond.

D. Officers and Officials of the State, Cities, Towns, Counties and Magisterial Districts.

1. Report of the Secretary of the Commonwealth to the Governor and General Assembly of Virginia, Depart of Purchases and Supply. Published every other year and available in libraries; or for $3 from the Office of Martha Bell Conway, Secretary of the Commonwealth; or from the Department of Purchases and Supply.

E. Property Ownership, Tax Records and Records of Council and Supervisors Meetings.

1. County and city property tax books found in the county courthouses and city government offices. Duplicates for most years are found in the Archives of the Virginia State Library, Richmond.

2. Proceedings of Boards of Supervisors and City Councils - found in county courthouses and city government offices.

F. Education (including finance, curriculum, school census, education officials, etc.)

1. Annual Report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction of the Commonwealth of Virginia, published by and available through the State Board of Education, Richmond.

2. Educational Directory, published by and available through State Board of Education, Richmond. This includes all major education officials for state and local school divisions including principals in local elementary and secondary schools.

G. Health and Medical Care.

1. "Statistical Annual Report of the Virginia State Department of Health," published and distributed yearly by the Virginia State Department of Health, Richmond.

H. Organizations and Agencies.

The publications and research reports of the following organizations and agencies often provide a wealth of information about Virginia communities.

1. Community Organizations

The local area community council or United Givers Fund very often (e.g. Richmond Area Community Council) publishes a "Directory of Social Services."

2. Education - Professional Associations

Virginia Teachers Association, 316 East Clay Street, Richmond

Virginia Education Association, 116 South Third Street, Richmond

3. Health, Welfare and Crime

a. Virginia Council on Social Welfare, Richmond, a private state-wide organization which studies and encourages solutions to certain social welfare problems in Virginia.

b. Virginia State Department of Mental Hygiene and Hospitals, 9 North Twelfth Street, Richmond.

c. Statistical Section, Virginia State Department of Welfare and Institutions, 429 South Belvidere Street, Richmond. This agency publishes arrests, public assistance, probation and parole, adoption and foster care and other data for the State and all localities.

FROM THE RICHMOND COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS AND THE V.C.H.R. TO THE RICHMOND'S COMMISSION ON COMMUNITY RELATIONS ---- "FAIR HOUSING"

The VCHR contends that there exists discrimination and policy maintaining of housing segregation by the Richmond City zoning policies AND PRACTICES:

WE OFFER THE FOLLOWING EVIDENCE:

(1) Mr. A. Howe Todd, Richmond City Planning Commission, expressed this idea before the Bellevue-Ginter Park Civic League meeting on June 7, 1965 at the Ginter Park Methodist Church --- the rezoning of the area located north of Lombardy Street, south of Brookland Park Blvd., and along both sides of Chamberlayne Avenue was accomplished because of race. This happened some years ago, because of the pressure of whites wanting to leave and yet they did not want to sell to Negroes. The change was from an "R" zoning to a "C" zoning.

(2) We request you to study the zoning policy to determine if decisions are still being made because of the above mentioned reason? Is there discrimination in zoning decisions?

Southern Regional Council, Inc., "Research Design for a Study of Southern Housing Patterns" suggests the following is being used as a mechanism for maintaing housing segregation . . . zoning ~~policies and~~ practices. (Note: use of zoning is legally uneforceable, this does not prevent segregating of the races residentially)

Questions: Do racial zoning "Laws" exist, and are they "in force" because they have not been challenged successfully? Is land zoned for certain uses (e.g., parks, cementeries, expressways, municipal facilities) in order to create buffers between white and minority housing areas?

Redevelopment and Housing Authority
POST OFFICE BOX 2-AF
RICHMOND 5, VIRGINIA

FREDERIC A. FAY
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

The Richmond Redevelopment and Housing Authority, under Virginia law a political subdivision of the Commonwealth of Virginia, is the official slum clearance and urban redevelopment agency for the City of Richmond. All programs and undertakings of the Authority must be approved by City Council. In carrying out its activities the Authority is guided by a "Cooperation Agreement" or contract with the City, authorized by Council, which states the responsibilities of the City and the Authority with respect to the activity involved.

Commissioners of the Authority are appointed by City Council and serve for a term of four years without compensation. The Chairman and Vice-Chairman are elected at the annual meeting of the Authority in October.

The Authority works closely with all affected City agencies and departments and in effect considers it a part of the City government. In fact the Authority has patterned its personnel policies, including compensation, after those of the City.

The Authority, under Virginia law, is exempt from real and personal property taxes, but makes a payment in lieu of taxes to the City each year. Payments over the last few years have approximated $87,000. each year, the total to date exceeds $626,000.

The Authority's low-rent housing and urban redevelopment programs attract many visitors interested in such programs.

Information - Richmond Redevelopment and Housing Authority

The Richmond Redevelopment and Housing Authority was established in October 1940 pursuant to the provisions of Title 36 of the Code of Virginia as amended.

The members of the Authority, appointed by the Council of the City of Richmond are:

Mrs. Evelyn Byrd Purcell, Chairman
Mr. Lewis T. Booker, Vice Chairman
Mr. Herbert C. Moseley
Mr. Fred S. McCall
Mr. Clarence L. Townes, Jr.

Members are appointed by City Council for a term of four years and serve without compensation.

The Authority maintains its administrative headquarters in its own Central Office Building at 901 Chamberlayne Parkway. The Authority employs a total staff of about 130 persons.

The Authority operates seven low-rent public housing projects in the City described later and is undertaking an urban redevelopment program also described later.

The following income limits for admission and continued occupancy are in effect in the Authority's projects:

Number of Persons	Limits in Net Income After Exemptions
	Admission		Continued Occupancy
	Regular	Special
One or Two	$2600	$2900	$3250
Three or Four	2800	3150	3500
Five or More	3100	3500	3875

Each family is entitled to an exemption of $100. for each minor dependent. Certain other administrative exemptions are permitted by the Authority in the case of members of the Armed Services and for child care.

REDEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

CARVER PROJECT - Completed

Located north of Leigh Street between the Belvidere Extension and Lombardy Street and generally surrounding the Carver Elementary School. The 45 acre area, one of the City's worst slums, was acquired by the Authority, cleared and sold for various public and private uses as follows:

Richmond-Petersburg Turnpike Authority

Carver Elementary School

Virginia Electric and Power Company

Viking Development Corporation of Richmond (residential)

Lewis Printing Company

Begun 1955, completed 1961.

Total site acquisition and clearance costs were $1,814.941.

Proceeds from the sale of land were $667,505.95

Annual tax revenue before redevelopment $13,353.00

Annual tax revenue after redevelopment (approximate) $24,600.00

A distinctive feature of the redevelopment is the use of a modified form of the principle of "condominium" employed in the Hartshorn Town House Community being developed as a joint venture by the Viking Development Corporation of Richmond and the Reynolds Aluminum Service Company of Virginia. This development of middle income housing is being developed for Negro occupancy and sells for $11,500. In this type of development title to the dwelling and a small plot of ground is conveyed to the purchaser with recreational, parking, service and circulation areas being owned in common and administered and maintained by a community group. The Carver Project is the first redevelopment project in Virginia to have been completed.

17TH STREET REDEVELOPMENT PROJECT

Located between 17th Street and Mosby Street, Mechanicsville Turnpike from Marshall to Whitcomb Street, this 150 acre project is planned as Richmond's second urban redevelopment project. The Authority began acquisition and clearance of the area in January of 1962.

The area is one of the City's worst slums and has been blighted since Colonial times when the jail and gallows were located there. The renewal of the area contemplates major revisions in the street pattern, the development of new industrial and residential areas, two new schools, a church and an attractive and modern juvenile detention home and courts building. The area has been completely acquired and cleared at a cost of $3,193,413. and land has been offered for sale for private redevelopment.

Annual tax revenue before redevelopment $29,019.00.

Annual tax revenue after redevelopment (estimated) $160,000.00.

COMMUNITY RENEWAL PROGRAM

Richmond is the first city in Virginia and one of the first in the Nation to undertake the preparation of a Community Renewal Program. The study is being undertaken with the cooperation of the City at a cost of approximately $90,000. of which two-thirds is a Federal Grant. The balance has been contributed by the City in the form of services and personnel. The program defines all areas of blight in the City, analyzing the causes and projecting a schedule of renewal activity coordinated with the City's Master Plan and Capital Improvement Program. The study will be complete and ready for presentation to City Council in the summer of 1965.

The Carver Redevelopment Project is part of an over-all long-range urban renewal plan being initiated by a growing and progressive city. Richmond, as a site location, has many advantages. It is headquarters city for the upper South, state capital, nerve center for communications, utilities, government, and sales and service activities.

Richmond is a transportation gateway with 6 trunkline railroads, 5 air lines, 6 inter-city bus lines, 50 motor freight carriers and water freight service at the deep water terminal on the James River.

All networks are represented in the three television and ten radio stations. Combined circulation of the two daily newspapers is 246,950.

City is governed by council, mayor and city manager. Real estate tax rate is $1.88 per $100.

Richmond is the center and headquarters of the 5th Federal Reserve District. There are 10 other banks and trust companies; 5 savings and loan companies; 34 insurance company home offices.

Corporate population is 242,000. Metropolitan area population is 411,000 with an increase of 148,000 since 1940.

Richmond has a well-balanced, year-round economy, with no one field of business dominating. Long range growth trend is consistently above that of the nation as a whole.

FREDERIC A. FAY
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

DEAR TENANT:

The Richmond Redevelopment and Housing Authority takes this opportunity to welcome you to your new home and to wish you good health and happiness in one of our projects. It is our earnest hope that your residence here will mean a great deal to you and to your family.

This is your project. It is up to you to create the kind of community life of which you can be proud. The Authority is ready at any time to assist you in any way we can.

As a resident in this community you will undoubtedly have a great many questions to which you would like to have answers. This booklet is an attempt to explain what you can expect of us and what we consider your responsibilities to be. It is important that you read it carefully and that you understand it completely. If you have any questions do not hesitate to talk with your Manager. He is the Authority's representative on the project.

In order to make your association with us a pleasant one, it will be necessary that you comply with our project policies. At the same time we will welcome any ideas and suggestions as to how we might improve conditions in the project. We hope we may count on your cooperation in this matter.

Sincerely yours,

Frederic A. Fay

FREDERIC A. FAY,
Executive Director.

You and Your Manager

Your Manager is your contact with the Housing Authority. Feel free to come in and see him about your problems and those of the project. Maybe there's some family trouble or emergency on which you need advice. Maybe you want help over a period of time and would like to know which of the community agencies to contact. Whatever it is—his services are always at your disposal. He's willing and eager to help you in any way that he can.

Our Mutual Understanding

THE LEASE

Your lease is the agreement between you and the Housing Authority. It's important for you to understand it thoroughly. When you signed your lease all of its provisions were explained to you. If you still have any questions, be sure to ask your Manager about any point that isn't clear. He will be glad to answer any of your questions.

PAYMENT OF RENT

Draw a circle around the first of the month; that's the day when rent is due. Remember please, that the only place authorized to accept your money is the Management Office. We can't run the projects without rent any more than you can wash without water. Therefore, anyone who has not paid by the sixth may lose his home. We don't like to take this kind of action, and we hope that your prompt rent payments will make it unnecessary.

Your lease states that if legal action to collect your rent is started four (4) times in any twelve (12) months period, your lease is cancelled. No exceptions are made to this policy—do not ask for any! If you pay your rent promptly this point will not affect you.

A full month's rent is due on the day that you move into the project. If you move in on any day other than the first, you pay a full month's rent at that time, plus a security deposit, and an adjustment is then made on the following month's rent. If you don't understand the necessity for this arrangement, your Manager will be glad to explain it to you.

SECURITY DEPOSIT

When you pay your first month's rent, you also pay a security deposit to cover anything that you may owe us when you leave. Don't say "good-bye, forever" to this money, because it will be refunded after you move out IF:

1. You do not owe us any rent.
2. You have paid for all damages for which you were responsible.
3. You have cleaned your unit thoroughly enough, so that there is no extraordinary cleaning to be done after you leave that would involve unusual expense to the Authority.
4. You have given us fifteen days notice in writing that you intend to move, so that the Authority can rent the unit promptly, and not lose any money because you failed to let us know in time.

FAMILY CHANGES

When important family events occur, don't forget to tell us about them. A change in the size of your family can affect your rent or the size dwelling that you need. Marriages, births, deaths, and other happenings that make a difference in the size of your family must be reported to your Manager promptly.

CHANGES OF INCOME

If you change your job, if you get a raise in pay or if your income is changed in any way, you must let us know at once in order that your rent may be adjusted either up or down.

Failure to do so may mean cancellation of your lease.

TRANSFERS

As we mentioned above, a change in the size of your family may mean that you need a larger or smaller home, and the Management may then require you to transfer to another unit.

BOARDERS AND LODGERS

The dwelling unit into which you move has been carefully selected to meet the space requirements of your family. Like a glove, it's a good fit, but snug. For this reason, our rule is "No boarders or lodgers."

SUBLETTING

You may not sublet or assign possession of your home to anyone else.

HALLS, ENTRANCES AND STAIRS

Halls, entrances and stairs are not safe parking places for toys, bicycles, and other wheeled vehicles. Please make certain that these much used spaces are kept clean and uncluttered at all times.

BUSINESSES AND ADVERTISING SIGNS

Because these houses were built to be your home, no one is permitted to operate a business in them. For the same reason we must ask you not to make billboards of your homes. No advertising signs, please.

KEYS AND LOCKOUTS

If you are one of those people who never forgets his key, don't read any further. Those of you who do read further, however, will want to know just what can be done to help you get into your homes in case you forget your key. The Authority does not provide lockout service. If you are locked out of your home during hours when the Management Office is open you may borrow a key after you sign a receipt for it. Keys will not be given to children.

We do not allow our maintenance men to let you into your home. They do not always know the tenants and we cannot afford to let just anyone into your house.

If you are locked out when the Management Office is not open you will have to get in the best way you can. You will be charged for any damage or repairs.

PETS

No pets are allowed under any circumstances.

REPAIRS

Your maintenance man is a good person to know. He's the person who makes the necessary repairs when something leaks, breaks, or otherwise needs repairs, so please request his services promptly by getting in touch with the Management Office. An early repair job often saves a lot of trouble and expense. When you make your request for repairs, be sure to give the date and hours during which some member of your family will be at home to admit the repair man. You will be charged for any damages to the home resulting from your negligence, or unusual wear and tear.

When placing request for repairs please remember that the maintenance men are kept busy with such requests and that, unless it is an emergency, your call might not be answered as promptly as you desire. It is the intent of the Authority to take care of your needed repairs as promptly as possible and you are requested to have patience—the repair man will be there as soon as he can.

AUTOMOBILES

No parking, please, on walks or lawns.

Automobile repair work will not be permitted on project streets.

If your car has outlived its usefulness, please don't leave it on the project.

OUTSIDE RADIO AND TELEVISION AERIALS

Outside aerials of any kind will not be permitted.

ACCIDENTS

Accidents that occur in your home, or anywhere in the project, should be reported to your Manager immediately.

PAINTING OR ALTERATIONS

No repairs or alterations by tenants will be permitted. Painting will be done only under supervision of Management.

UTILITIES

When you move in, your Manager will tell you what utilities (gas, electricity, heat, and hot water) are included in your rent. A fixed amount for utilities has been set in establishing your rent. If you use more than the quantities specified in your lease, we must penalize you accordingly. Use what you need for comfort and convenience, but don't waste. We furnish the heat—therefore—electric heaters are an unnecessary expense, and are not permitted. Refrigerators and ranges are furnished and no substitutions will be permitted.

TELEPHONES

Telephones may be installed only in approved locations. If you plan to install a telephone, consult your Manager as to the proper location.

RE-EXAMINATION

Since your rent is based on the income and size of your family, the Housing Authority is required by law to review with you annually your family income and any other circumstances that might effect the status of your residence in the project. Once a year you will receive a new application for your unit from the Manager. You will be asked at that time to give us information on all the members of your family living with you and to declare all of their income. Although the information you give is confidential between you and the Authority, it will be verified with your employer. It is necessary that you give us complete and accurate information. Failure to do so may result in your losing your home.

WHEN YOU VACATE

When you decide to move out, please come to the Management Office and notify the Manager in writing at least fifteen days in advance of your departure so that he may rent your home promptly to another family in need of housing. If you do not give us fifteen days' advance notice in writing, we'll have to charge you for fifteen days' rent, unless the unit is occupied in less than that time, in which case we charge you for the number of days for which the unit was vacant. When you leave, please clean your home thoroughly—leave it as clean as it was when you moved in. Return all keys to the Management Office.

EMERGENCIES

We all know that unforeseen things happen even in the most well-ordered households, and sometimes these situations can become emergencies. Real emergencies demand immediate attention for the protection of someone's life, health, or property, whereas at other times, when something's out of joint, it can wait awhile to be corrected. Certainly a fire, either in your home or in the project, is a real emergency. If a fire starts, don't wait any longer to call the Fire Department than the shortest time it takes you to get to the nearest telephone. Burglary, vandalism, and disturbances of the peace are situations for the police to handle, so they are the ones to call.

Maintenance emergencies require different handling, but, first of all, let's explain what they are: gas leaks, broken sewer pipes, serious damage to roofs, as a result of storm, and any failure of lights when it involves hazards to life, health, or property. If any of these situations arise, report it to the Management Office and a maintenance man will be sent as soon as possible to make repairs.

If you have a lighting panel in your unit, you may be able to restore service by resetting the switch. To reset the switch, press hard down to the "OFF" position for a few seconds—and then throw to the "ON" position.

CARE OF THE GROUNDS

Keeping up the appearance of the project is a job that you and the Management share. Management is responsible for the care of all grounds and walks used by the community as a whole. Your help is requested in seeing that your project never has that "after the picnic" look and that new grass is given a chance to grow. The Management will keep the grass cut and the shrubbery trimmed in order to keep the appearance of the project uniform and attractive. A small amount will be charged with your rent each month during the grass cutting season to take care of this work. We expect you to keep your walk clean, and clear of snow and ice during winter months.

GARDENS

Because of a lack of space and the need for maintaining a uniform appearance, we regret that it is not possible to allow flower and vegetable gardens on the project. If you would like to have a garden it may be possible for you to find some available vacant land nearby.

FENCES

No fences will be permitted. Temporary barriers for the protection of newly seeded areas will be erected and removed by project maintenance personnel.

TREES AND SHRUBBERY

Please try to preserve the trees. They may look small, but they're awfully expensive, and we would like to give them a chance to grow into real shade trees. Explain to your children how important it is not to cut the bark, climb into or swing on the branches, or lop them off. Most children don't realize that young trees die and older trees are injured from this kind of treatment.

The shrubbery that is planted by the Authority, like the trees, is not one of your problems, except to see that it is well treated by everyone. Both shrubs and trees will be trimmed and pruned by specially trained people.

YOUR MAILING ADDRESS

Do the people who want to write to you know where you live? Be sure to give them your address by street, number and city zone. If you give only the name of the project as your address, your mail goes to the project office. The result is delay for you and trouble for the office.

Your mailing address is for the use of the people who live in your home. Please be certain that others do not use your address to receive their mail.

ABSENCE FROM HOME

To insure protection of dwellings and to prevent damage, you are asked to notify the Management whenever all members of your family are going to be away from home for more than two days. It is also wise to leave an address where you can be contacted in the event of an emergency. Be sure that all windows are closed and locked, and all water and electrical devices are shut off.

GARBAGE AND TRASH

Ugh, ugh, ugh! That's the way everybody feels about garbage oozing out of cans and trash spilling out of containers, so here are a few suggestions for getting rid of these two menaces to good project appearance:

Be sure to close the lid of your garbage can securely.

Be sure to find out from your Manager the collection days for your project.

If you leave home for several days, put out your garbage and trash before you go and make arrangements to have your garbage can brought in after the collection.

You know the old saying, "Don't send a boy to do a man's work,"—that applies to sending small children to empty garbage and trash. They mean to do the right thing, but they're very likely to spill it in their efforts to reach the container.

If the project has a service drive behind your building there is a place for a garbage can in back of your home. If the project does not have a service drive, you are expected to place the garbage can at the curb on the morning of the collections days. As soon as the garbage has been collected, return the can to your apartment.

Your lease requires you to furnish a garbage can with a well-fitting top and in good condition. The Management will inspect the project from time to time to make certain that this requirement is followed. All garbage receptacles must be approved by the Manager.

We maintain a stock of garbage cans, of approved type and size, for your convenience. These cans may be purchased through the Management at a substantial saving.

EXTERMINATION AND INSPECTION

Your home will be turned over to you free from insects and vermin. With good housekeeping you can keep it that way.
If roaches, ants, bedbugs, etc., get in your home it is your responsibility to get rid of them. The Management will be glad to advise you on the best way to do this.

We will insist that you keep your home clean. Periodic inspections will be made by Management to make certain you are cooperating. Any bad conditions will be called to your attention and unless you remedy them promptly you may lose your home.

LAUNDRY

Of course you have the laundry problem, just like every other homemaker. Most project people do their wash in their kitchens or bathrooms. Certain types of washing machines may be used if approved by your Manager. If your clothesline is shared with other tenants, give the others who share it a break by removing your laundry just as soon as it is dry.

Homemaking Advice

FLOORS

Cleaning your floors regularly will keep them in good condition. Cement floors should be washed with a mild soap and water, then rinsed and wiped dry.

Never put paint or enamel on cement floors. Linoleum must not be glued to floors.

PAINTED SURFACES

Painted surfaces may be washed with a solution of any reliable mild soap, soap flakes or powder. Do not use strong soaps or powders, or you'll suddenly find your nice finish has become a thing of the past.

STOVES

Top grating, burners and drip pans of the stoves should be cleaned frequently with soap and water. The enamel surfaces should never be washed while hot because the enamel will crack. Always light match and hold near burners before turning on the gas in order to keep from being burned.

REFRIGERATORS

Your food will keep better if the inside of your refrigerator is cleaned at least once a week. Wash the food compartments with warm water to which two tablespoons of household ammonia, borax or baking soda have been added for each quart of water. Then wipe thoroughly dry with a soft cloth. Do not use gritty cleansers.

Defrost when the coils of your refrigerator are coated with frost more than one-half inch thick, don't wait until you need a snow plow. To defrost, open the door and turn knob on freezing compartment to defrost position. Remove all food from the tray beneath the froster, since water will drip from compartment while defrosting goes on. When frost has completely melted, your box is again ready for use. Then turn knob back to freezing position.

CONDENSATION

When you keep your windows closed tightly water may collect on them. This water should be wiped up before it has a chance to run down the wall onto the floors. Unless you keep your kitchen windows open when cooking or washing, water will collect on walls and will eventually ruin the paint. It is also a good plan to open your windows wide for a short period each day so that the fresh air can sweep away the stale air and odors.

PLUMBING FIXTURES

A homemaker knows that the kitchen sink receives the hardest wear of any of the plumbing fixtures. Soap and hot water are the best cleansers for an enamel sink. If soap does not take off stains, use a light powder cleaner. A gritty powder will scratch the enamel and once scratched, it is very difficult to keep clean. Do not place acid foods (oranges, lemons, tomatoes) in your sink, for any of them may stain it. Put your leftover grease in cans for disposal. If you pour it down the drain, your drain pipe will become clogged and then you'll really have trouble. Be sure that faucets are shut off completely after each use, as dripping faucets waste water, and the faucet is damaged by the small stream of water.

The bathtub and bowl should be cleaned immediately after using. They are also enamel and should be cleaned the same as the sink.

The toilet is best cleaned with soap and water and a long brush. Do not pour hot water in your toilet, because this may crack the bowl. Please warn children not to drop any object (ball, soap, newspaper, rags, etc.) into toilets which may stop them up.

The cost of removal of any object from the toilet will be charged to you.

Do not drop heavy or sharp objects on any of the plumbing fixtures. It will crack or chip the porcelain finish.

SHADES AND SCREEN DOORS

Be sure to close your windows when you are to be away from home. Also, keep your screen doors closed securely so that they will not break as they swing free in a high wind.

When pulling your window shades up or down, be sure to take hold of the shade pull. Do not raise or lower shades by the wooden slat in the hem at the bottom of the shade. You are apt to tear the shade so that we will have to charge you for a new one.

Brackets for curtain rods are in place at your windows. Do not try to drive nails for your own brackets into the wall.

When your windows are open, roll up your shades so that they will not flap and become damaged.

Tenant Activities

COMMUNITY ORGANIZATIONS

Many of the neighborhoods in which our projects are located have what are known as community organizations. These are groups of residents who deal with needs that arise in the community. All of their undertakings—civic, educational, health, and recreational—help to make the community a better and more harmonious place in which to live. Each of you has talents or interests which would mean a great deal to a group of this kind.

The Authority is working for conditions throughout this community which will benefit all of the tenants. The Manager needs the assistance of interested groups who will work closely with him toward this end. Your Management Office will give you the names of tenant leaders in the project. Why not contact them so that you can take part in their activities? They will welcome your help and suggestions.

On all of the projects you will find activities which will be of interest to your children. They are warmly invited to participate.

PLAY AREAS

Play areas have been provided within or adjacent to the projects for your children.

The playing of baseball, football, etc., by children or grownups in the building courts or around the buildings is dangerous and cannot be allowed. Have your children play at the playground.

YOUR NEIGHBORS

When people live close together, life for all is much more pleasant if they respect and try to understand each other.

Loud radios, over-time parties, shouting, and slamming of doors can be very annoying to your neighbors. With a little effort and good will on your part, all of these can be controlled.

Safety Don'ts

Don't delay in spotting your nearest fire alarm box when you move into the project. If no fire alarm box is nearby, find the nearest telephone from which you may report a fire in an emergency.

Don't ignore the ODOR OF GAS even for a moment. Immediately open all windows and put out all flames. If you have checked and found that all the jets are turned off, notify the Management Office, so that the leak can be repaired at once. Escaping gas has caused many bad explosions.

Don't let the children play in the streets. Get them into the habit of using the playgrounds, which have been provided for their safety.

Don't neglect the cords on your toasters, electric irons, radios and lamps. Check carefully for frayed covering, bent prongs on plugs, and loose wiring.

Don't store paint, oil, gasoline, cleaning fluid, oily rags, clothes with oil or paint on them or newspapers in your home or around it. These are first-class fire hazards and the law says they must be put out of the way.

Don't clutter up the space around ranges or refrigerators. Keep it clear at all times.

Don't let your children ride their bicycles on project walks.

Don't allow your children to throw glass, tin, nails, or other dangerous objects in the play area. Cut feet and other injuries can follow.

Don't put your faith in rumors. If you hear talk about some new regulations that affect you, go straight to your Manager. He can give you the true story.

A Few Facts About Public Housing in Richmond

What is public housing?

Homes built and partly supported by public funds for rent to low-income families at rents they can afford to pay.

Why is public housing necessary?

Because every family should have a decent home in a good neighborhood and because there are many families in Richmond whose incomes are too low for them to obtain decent homes in the private market.

How is public housing brought within the means of low-income families?

By the help of the Federal and local governments. The Federal Government gives the Housing Authority a certain amount of money each year to make up the difference between the low rents paid by the tenants and the actual cost of running the projects. The City of Richmond does not collect full taxes on Housing Authority property. However, the Authority makes a payment to the City each year for the services rendered by the City for the Project, such as providing schools, police and fire protection, trash and garbage collection, and other necessary public services.

Who is eligible to live in Richmond's low-rent public housing projects?

Families who are living in bad housing and whose incomes are too low for private business to build houses for them. They must have lived in the Richmond area for at least six months, and the family head must be a citizen of the United States. Families of veterans are given preference among applicants, as are families displaced by any slum clearance operation.

What fixes rents?

The combined income of all persons living in the unit.

The size of the unit is determined by the number, sex and age of the members of the family group.

HUMAN RELATIONS COUNCILS IN THE SOUTH

The Southern Regional Council with a grant from the Fund for the Republic has been working on a special project to set up Human Relations Councils in these twelve Southern states: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, N. Carolina,S. Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia. Professional staff has been engaged in all but Florida and they plan to do so shortly.

The concept of work is this: in attempting to create self-sustaining, self-perpetuating, self-governing state organizations, SRC underwrites on a diminishing basis the salaries of staff and other expenses for a three year period. Something of a pump-priming effort. The state organizations must be responsible for raising an increasing amount of their budgets during that three year period and at the end of it are on their own.

Each state organization has a Board of Directors, composed of local people (the majority of whom are old SRC members) who set policy, guide the staff, raise funds, and work for improved human relations intheir area. All facets of the state's population are represented on the Board; they work as an integrated (not just bi-racial) group to consider local problems, to assess resources-- including their own, and the application of these resources to the problems at hand. They also seek to find new resources to fill unmet needs. They believe in working with people, not on nor for them.

Two patterns of staff composition and method-of-work have evolved. In the majority of states (all but two) an Executive Director has been selected and provision has been made for an Associate Director. Where one is white, the other is Negro and vice versa;they have equal status and equal pay. Efforts are being made to secure Associate Directors for only recently has money been available for for two staff people on a full time basis.

In two states, Kentucky and Tennessee, the method of work is different; here some ten consultants are used on a part time basis. They are professional people who have other full time responsibilities in areas of specialization which would qualify them as consultants in the field of human relations. There is a state central office which serves as a coordinating device and communications center for the consultants.

The consultants have a dual role: one is as the eyes and ears, the observers an recorders for the state organization; the other is as professional consultants to the communities which they seek to serve. Thus far, the biggest part of the work has been as "eyes and ears".

The chief problem on which state organizations are concentrating is the challenge and opportunity presented by the Supreme Court decision declaring public school segregation unconstitutional; and the implementing decrees spelling out how it should be ended.

They recognize that the scope and intensity of the problem varies not only from state to state but from community to community. It seems logical then that approaches to the problem must be flexible. The Regional Office in Atlanta does not try to tell the state Councils how to work. It seeks to assist them in planning with local people what approach they will use; the one requesite is that all facets of the population consider the problems and the methods of solving them; that they consider it together in full democracy; and that the solution be aimed at ending segregation as quickly as practicable.

It is hoped that at the end of the three years there will exist in each of the twelve Southern States selfgoverning, self-sustaining, effective human relations agencies, working on a variety of problems, having gained the respect and support of many right-thinking Southerners of all races, all creeds, and all classes.

This might be a bit interesting. I thought so

MEET THE PRESS

ANNOUNCER: Now MEET THE PRESS, produced by Lawrence E. Spivak. Remember that the questions asked by the members of the panel do not necessarily reflect their point of view; it is their way of getting the story for you.

Now here is the Moderator of MEET THE PRESS, Mr. Ned Brooks.

MR. BROOKS: Welcome once again to MEET THE PRESS. For the past several months a new strategy to end racial segregation has been spreading through the South. It takes the form of sit-in demonstrations by Negro students against segregation in public eating places. It is part of a broader campaign of nonviolent resistance led by the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., who is our guest today. Dr. King is a Baptist minister and head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, which is spearheading the passive resistance movement. Dr. King first attracted nationwide attention in 1956 when he led the boycott against segregation in public buses in Montgomery, Alabama. His activities have resulted five times in his arrest, and his home and church were bombed. Early this year Dr. King moved his base of operations from Montgomery, Alabama, to Atlanta, Georgia. He is 31 years old, born in the South and educated for the ministry in the North.

MR. SPIVAK: Dr. King, former President Harry Truman recently said this: "If anyone came to my store and sat down, I would throw him out. Private business has its own rights and can do what it wants." Former President Truman is an old friend of the Negro, I believe. Isn't this an indication that the sit-in strikes are doing the Negro race more harm than good?

DR. KING: No, I don't think so. First I should say that this was an unfortunate statement, and we were very disappointed to hear the former President of the United States make such a statement. In a sense a statement like this serves to aid and abet the violent forces in the South. Even if Mr. Truman disagreed with the sit-ins, he should certainly disagree with them on a higher level. Following his past record, it seems to me that Mr. Truman wouldn't have faced such a situation, because there wouldn't be a segregated store in the beginning, if he were running it, according to his statements in the past.

I do not think that this movement is setting us back or making enemies. It is causing numerous people all over the nation and in the South, in particular, to reevaluate the stereotypes that they have developed concerning Negroes, so that it has an educational value, and I think in the long run it will transform the whole of American society.

MR. SPIVAK: You yourself have said that the aim of your method of non-violent resistance is not to defeat or humiliate the white man, but to win his friendship and his understanding. How successful do you think you have been or are being in winning the friendship and understanding of the white men of the South?

DR. KING: I should say that this doesn't come overnight. The non-violent way does not bring about miracles, in a few hours, in a few days or in a few years, for that matter. The first reaction of the oppressor when oppressed people rise up against the system of injustice is an attitude of bitterness. But I do believe that if the non-violent resistors continue to follow the way of non-violence they eventually get over to the hearts and souls of the former oppressors, and I think it eventually brings about that redemption that we dream of. Of course, I can't estimate how many people we have touched so far. This is impossible because it is an inner process, but I am sure something is stirring in the minds and the souls of people, and I am sure that many people are thinking anew on this basic problem of human relations.

MR. SPIVAK: You speak of your movement as a non-violent movement, and yet the end product of it has been violence. You have also called upon the white people, of the South particularly, to live up to the law as the Supreme Court has interpreted it. Don't you think you would have more standing in your fight if you, yourself, called upon your people to live up to the law rather than to break the law and to risk jail in these sit-ins?

DR. KING: I would say two things to that: First, the end result has not been a violent result. I would say that there has been some violence here and there, but the non-violent resistor does not go on with the idea that there will not be any violence inflicted upon him. In other words, he is always willing to be the recipient of violence but never to inflict it upon another. He goes on the idea that he must act now against injustice, with moral means. He feels that in acting against this injustice he must never inflict injury upon the opponent, but he is always prepared to absorb the violence which emerges, if such violence emerges in the process.

MR. SPIVAK: But aren't you urging him to break the local laws when you are asking the white people to live up to the laws, and is this a good method of procedure?

DR. KING: I think we will find that the law of the land is a law which calls for integration. This has been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the nation, mainly in the 1954 decision outlawing segregation in the public schools. It made it palpably clear that separate facilities are inherently unequal, so that in breaking local laws, we are really seeking to dignify the law and to affirm the real and positive meaning of the law of the land.

MR. LEWIS: In connection with the sit-in movement and other aspects of the racial question, there has certainly been an increase in tension in various parts of the South—what Mr. Spivak was speaking of—regardless of the motivation. During the last week The New York Times has run some stories about Birmingham, Alabama, suggesting that a kind of reign of terror is taking place there, with the officials on the side of those terrorizing those who believe in racial equality. My question is, what role do you see for the federal government in this situation? Do you think the federal government has a place to play, say, in Birmingham or in connection with your sit-in demonstrations?

DR. KING: Yes, I do. I think the federal government has the responsibility of protecting citizens of this nation as they protest against the injustices which they face. I also feel that the Executive branch of the government should do more in terms of moral persuasion. The Legislative branch should certainly do more in giving the proper legislation, so that the transition will be made in much smoother manner than we are facing now.

MR. LEWIS: We have just had a civil rights bill passed—you speak of the Legislative branch. I wonder what you think of that, and what more you would have had Congress do?

DR. KING: I must confess that I was disappointed with the final bill because so many things that I felt were basic happened to have been deleted or omitted. And the whole question of school integration—I am convinced that the nation, the federal government, will have to face it in a much more forthright and courageous manner than it has in the past, and by omitting this section of the bill, I think we face something very disappointing. Even in the area of voter registration, I think there is much more that can be done. The bill that we have, which is mainly in the area of voter registration, will help, particularly in some communities, but it is not at all a panacea. It has certain red tape complex qualities about it which will still make the process a long one, and I think ultimately the federal government should set forth a uniform pattern of registration and voting so that no citizen will have a problem at this point.

MR. LEWIS: You spoke of the Executive branch, also, and moral leadership being needed. What precisely would you have the President do—President Eisenhower or his successor?

DR. KING: I think there are several things. Certainly the President can do a great deal in the area of executive orders. He has certain executive powers, where orders can be made, and the country must follow it and comply with these orders. On the other hand, there is a great deal that a man as powerful as the President of the United States can do in the area of moral persuasion, by constantly speaking to the people on the moral values involved in integration and urging the people to comply with the law of the land.

MRS. CRAIG: There have been court decisions saying that a storekeeper can select his customers. Are you saying that the end justifies the means and you are apparently breaking local laws, hoping for a better conclusion?

DR. KING: I would say, first, that the Supreme Court has not rendered a decision at this point. It is true that there have been other decisions, but I think on the basis of the 1954 decision, if the Supreme Court follows what it set forth in 1954, it would have to uphold the law in this area—that segregation is wrong, even in lunch counters and public places—because that decision said in substance that segregation generates a feeling of inferiority within the segregated, and, thereby, it abridges the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. I am sure if we follow this through in this area, the same thing will follow.

On the other hand, if you are saying, are we breaking laws because we feel that the end justifies the means—we feel that there are moral laws in the universe just as valid and as basic as man-made laws, and whenever a man-made law is in conflict with what we consider the law of God, or the moral law of the universe, then we feel that we have a moral obligation to protest. This is an American tradition all the way from the Boston Tea Party, on down. We have praised individuals in America who stood up with creative initiative to revolt against an unjust system, so that this is all we are doing. In our institutions—we give the Boston Tea Party as an example of the initiative of Americans, and I think this is an example of the initiative and the great creative move of the young people of our nation.

MRS. CRAIG: But, Dr. King, this is a nation that lives under law. Above the Supreme Court is engraven "Equal Justice Under Law." Is each of us to decide when it is all right to break a law?

DR. KING: I would say that, as I said a few minutes ago, when the law of our nation stands in conflict with the higher moral law, and when a local law stands in conflict with the federal law. then we must resist that law in order to dignify and give meaning to the full out-pouring of the federal law and the moral law.

MRS. CRAIG: But, sir, we have Congress to change a law. We have the courts to interpret the law. Are you going beyond them?

DR. KING: We have discovered that in any non-violent movement you have a way of direct action. In many instances the courts have made for slow movement, so to speak As one Attorney General says, we are prepared for a century of litigation. We have observed the sometimes-hypocritical attitudes in Congress and the slow movements there and the apathy, so that this is a direct-action approach. The whole aim, the end result will be to arouse the conscience of those who are using these stalling and delaying methods to block our advance.

MR. VAN DER LINDEN: Dr. King, in your own book "Stride Toward Freedom" you say you thoroughly studied the writings of Karl Marx and the teachings of communism, and you don't agree with everything that the father of communism said, but you do say this, and I quote from page 95 of your book: "Insofar as Marx pointed to the weaknesses of traditional capitalism and challenged the social conscience of the Christian churches," you responded with a definite, Yes. I would like to know just where does communism or collectivism fit into your program of resistance here?

DR. KING: It doesn't fit into this particular program of resistance at all. I have made it crystal clear on many occasions that I feel that communism is based on an ethical relativism and a metaphysical materialism that no Christian can accept. I do not feel that the end justifies the means, because the end is preexistent in the means, and I believe firmly that we must follow moral means to secure moral ends, so that that particular quotation does not apply to this particular struggle. I was referring to something else altogether.

MR. VAN DER LINDEN: You said also in your book at page 220 "Our ultimate goal is integration, which is genuine intergroup and inter-personal living." You also soft-pedal as so-called irrational fears that this program may lead to racial intermarriage. You say marriage is an individual matter. Is it correct to say that you don't oppose racial intermarriage?

DR. KING: I would certainly say, properly speaking, individuals marry and not races, and therefore, I would not at all say there should be laws prohibiting individuals of different races to marry, because this is an individual matter. It is not a matter of a group marrying another group, but an individual marrying an individual.

MR. VAN DER LINDEN: Would you then attack next the state laws against such intermarriage?

DR. KING: I haven't planned a particular attack on that, but I don't think America will ever come to its full maturity until every state does away with laws prohibiting individuals to marry on the basis of race. But I think basically this is an irrational fear because it is an individual matter, and I think the question here, at bottom, is a question of illicit miscegenation, and I think if you will follow the record there you will find that illicit miscegenation has existed more in the South where you have rigid segregation laws than it has existed in the North where you don't have such barriers. It hasn't been the Negro who is the aggressor at this point. We just need to look around, and we can see that.

MR. SPIVAK: You say that the Negroes have a moral right to occupy the restaurant seats. You have had a Supreme Court edict on the school integration. Would you say that your children, the Negro children, have a right to occupy the seats in classrooms, too, and would you consider that form of non-violence?

DR. KING: I am sure that Negroes have this right on the basis of the Supreme Court to go into schools. I haven't gone into, I haven't thought through the strategy at this point, how non-violent resistence can apply in the school integration struggle. I do think it can apply, and I think we need to think through some of these methods. The main thing is that the methods must always be non-violent and they must always be based on the principle of love. But the specific application I am not prepared to say at this time. I do know that we have that right on the basis of the decision from the Supreme Court.

MR. SPIVAK: Wouldn't you be on better ground, both legal and moral, if you occupied school seats than by occupying a few restaurant seats?

DR. KING: I am not sure about that, because I think that we have an economic factor involved here, and even if one denied the legal aspect or the legal right to do it, there is a deeper moral right. As Governor Collins of Florida said, it is a blatant injustice to welcome individuals into a store at all of the counters but the eating counter. This is a blatant injustice, and it is very unfair. So that we have not only legal rights involved here, but also moral rights.

MR. SPIVAK: Wouldn't you be on stronger grounds, though, if you refused to buy at those stores, and if you called upon the white people of the country to follow you because of both your moral and your legal right not to buy?

DR. KING: I think, sometimes it is necessary to dramatize an issue because many people are not aware of what is happening. I think the sit-ins serve to dramatize the indignities and the injustices which Negro people are facing all over the nation. I think another reason why they are necessary and they are vitally important at this point is the fact that they give an eternal refutation to the idea that the Negro is satisfied with segregation. If you didn't have the sit-ins, you wouldn't have this dramatic—not only this dramatic, but this mass demonstration—of the dissatisfatcion of the Negro with the whole system of segregation.

MR. LEWIS: You just had a strategy meeting in Raleigh, North Carolina, on this whole question, and I notice that one speaker was quite critical of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, speaking of it as too conservative and too slow-moving. Do you share that view, and just what was the feeling at this strategy meeting? What was the conclusion—that you have to move more quickly than you have been?

DR. KING: I should say first that I didn't hear a speaker make that particular point, so that I can't speak on that—whether the speaker said it or whether he didn't say it. I heard all of the speakers, and I didn't hear that. I didn't find any anti-NAACP attitude at the strategy meeting. All of the leaders from the Southern sit-in movement assembled there, and they assembled there with the awareness of the fact that the NAACP has given absolute support to the sit-ins. The NAACP has made it very clear that this is a good movement, a positive movement that it will support throughout. There was some criticism, not of the NAACP, but of the snail-like pace of the implementation process, the implementation of the Supreme Court's decision and dissatisfaction with the conniving methods and evasive schemes used to avoid following the law of the land. This isn't a criticism of the NAACP; it is a criticism of the agencies and the courts that will use the law to delay and get it bogged down in complex litigation processes.

MRS. CRAIG: I have been told that there are places in Harlem which refuse to serve white customers. Do you know if that is true? If so, do you justify it as either morally or legally right?

DR. KING: I am very sorry, I do not. I don't know of places in Harlem who will not serve white customers. If such places exist, I think it is a blatant injustice, and just redevelopment of the thing we are trying to get rid of, so I certainly wouldn't go along with that.

MR. VAN DER LINDEN: Dr. King, how many white people are members of your church in Atlanta?

DR. KING: I don't have any white members, Mr. van der Linden.

MR. VAN DER LINDEN: You said integration is the law of the land and it is morally right, whereas segregation is morally wrong, and the President should do something about it. Do you mean the President should issue an order that the schools and the churches and the stores should all be integrated?

DR. KING: I think it is one of the shameful tragedies, of our nation that 11 o'clock on Sunday morning is one of the most segregated hours, if not the most segregated hour, in Christian America. I definitely think the Christian church should be integrated, and any church that stands against integration and that has a segregated body is standing against the spirit and the teachings of Jesus Christ, and it fails to be a true witness. But this is something that the church will have to do itself. I don't think church integration will come through legal processes. I might say that my church is not a segregating church. It is segregated but not segregating. It would welcome white members.

MR. BROOKS: I think at this point I will have to interrupt. I see that our time is up. Thank you very much, Dr. King, for being with us.

Beaufort County - 1960

This study is designed to provide a statistical outline of Beaufort County and to help locate problems warranting special attention.

Since Penn Community Services works primarily with the Negro community, this study is focused specifically on Negro, or non-white, statistics. We realize that these problems are not limited to the Negro community. While the responsibility of improvement lies partially with the Negro community, significant changes must necessarily involve total community cooperation.

Some figures stand out in the following tables:

Population: During the decade 1950-1960, Beaufort changed from a predominantly Negro County (57%) to predominantly white (62%). The county experienced the highest percentage increase (64%) of the state -- primarily white persons, through establishment of the Marine Corps Air Station.

Education: 81% of Negro students enrolling in 1950 ~~at the St. Helena School~~ dropped out before graduation; 46% of the Negro population over twenty-five years old are functionally illiterate, yet the public schools spend per Negro pupil only 70% of the funds that it spends for each white student.

Farm: Negroes comprise 74% of the farm operators but farm only 8% of the land; only 3% are tenants.

Employment: Almost one-third of the Negro families earn less than $1,000 annually, and over one-half earn less than $2,000. More than one-half the workers hold unskilled jobs.

Rural Housing: One-third of the total homes in the county either have an outdoor privy or no facility whatsoever. 15% of the homes do not have flues for heating, while one-third are without piped water.

Health: 55% of Negro babies are delivered by a midwife, and 3[illegible]% of Negro births are illegitimate.

Registration: Negroes comprise about one-third of registered persons for voting, yet only 17% of those eligible are registered.

Several terms should be defined: The definition of farm was changed in 1960, to include farms that have at least 10 acres or sell $250 worth of products annually; earlier the figures were 3 acres and $150. The new definition partially accounts for the large decrease in number of farms.

Figures for the Beaufort Division include those of Beaufort city. The city statistics are listed because of their significance.

Annual Report

1962

Dr. Charles G. Gomillion, President of the Tuskegee Civic Association, standing before the Law School at Ohio State University

Rendered at

MOUNT OLIVE MISSIONARY BAPTIST CHURCH

Sunday, December 9, 1962---3:30 p. m.

REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT

The Tuskegee Civic Association considers itself primarily a civic education organization. Its major effort is to enlighten its members, its followers, public officials, and other community leaders and civic-minded citizens. The Association attempts to perform this service through public meetings, publication of significant policies and other civic data, and through letters and telephone conversations. During the year, the Association has followed its usual program of monthly meetings on Sunday, and semi-monthly meetings on Tuesday evenings. Four special programs have been rendered. In February, the Association observed Race Relations Sunday and Negro History Week. The guest speaker on Race Relations Sunday was Mrs. E. Robert Ashworth. The feature of the program in observance of Negro History Week was the report on"Negro Women in Government" by Mrs Mary H Gresham, a teacher in the Macon County Public School System. The program in observance of Negro History Week was under the sponsorship of the Beta Xi Omega and the Gamma Kappa Chapters of the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority. The guest speaker at the Fifth Anniversary program in June was Mrs. Amelia C Tucker, a member of the Kentucky Legislature. The program in November in observance of American Education Week was presented under the sponsorship of Iota Omega and Lambda Epsilon Chapters of the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity. The guest speaker on this occasion was Mr. Emory O. Jackson, managing editor of the Birmingham World.

In addition to the four special programs, the Association presented a series of programs of political issues and the records of political candidates who offered themselves to the electors in Democratic primaries in May and in the general election in November. During the past two months, the Association has presented a series of programs under the general title "The Structure and Personnel of Government in Tuskegee and in Macon County". This series of programs will extend through April, 1963.

As in the past, the Association through its president and some other officials and members has cooperated with other civic education and civic action agencies, among which have been the Alabama Democratic Conference, the Alabama State Coordinating Association for Registration and Voting, the Highlander Research Center, the National Sharecroppers Fund, the Penn Community Services, the Southern Conference Educational Fund, the Southern Democratic Conference, and the voter registration project of the Southern Regional Council.

The Association, as usual, has encouraged its members and other citizens to vote as intelligently as possible in the several elections, and to spend their earnings as effectively as possible. It has specifically encouraged the citizens in Macon County to trade with their friends.

The Association is not unmindful of the fact that its success during the year has been due largely to the support of a large number of persons and agencies within the County. Special thanks are due its supporters. Among those who have contributed significantly to the work of the Association have been the following: citizens who encouraged and facilitated the registration of Negroes, citizens who have appeared on the various programs of the Association on Sundays and Tuesdays, the Negro Digest and Freedomways for having published articles dealing with the political situation in Macon County, the article "Minority Politics in Black Belt Alabama" by C.V. Hamilton and published by the Eagleton Institute of Politics, other periodicals which published stories concerning the difficulties and experiences of Negroes in Macon County in their effort to participate as first-class citizens, and the U. S. Supreme Court for upholding the decision of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals that the names of fifty-four (54) Negroes placed on the registration roll by Judge Frank M Johnson should remain there.

Again, the president of the Association thanks the executive secretary for the many hours which he has devoted to the Association in the effort to carry out as effectively as possible the program of the Association. The work of other officers is also appreciated.

REPORT OF THE
EXECUTIVE SECRETARY

This office endeavored during the year, to assist in the study and interpretation of local and national trends and problems; in the collection and dissemination of useful civic and political data; and in encouraging intelligent and courageous civic action.

Increasingly, we are called upon to assist other civic organizations in our neighboring counties. Some of us have gone into Russell, Lee and Bullock Counties to lend whatever assistance we could, to developing effective civic education and civic actions. In addition, we have conducted correspondences with leaders in other Alabama counties, suggesting to them, the best we know how, how best to promote and conduct civic education programs, voter registration campaigns and how best to be an instrument for good in their communities. In the process of interchanging ideas and information with these people, we learned from them.

We have made our facilities, copies of reports and materials available to others in an effort to help in our area and in the state. In addition, we have regularly paid our $300.00 yearly assessment to the Alabama Coordinating Association for Registration and Voting to assist that organization in conducting voter registration campaigns in the state. And, where we could be of service, have offered and given our talent to this Association.

During the year, we have continued to perform those duties and commit those acts which fell within the purview of this office. We have tried, to the extent of our abilities, to make an accurate, honest and correct accounting of the funds entrusted to our keeping.

We have assisted in conducting membership campaigns, with special emphasis on life memberships. As a result of our effort in this endeavor, we have the largest membership during this reporting period than ever. While our life membership increment during the year is not as spectacular as in previous years, it is substantial. We have $8,215.51 in the Life Membership Account - an increase of $1,757.67 over the last year report.

REPORT OF THE MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE

The Chairman and Co-Chairman take this opportunity to thank all who gave so willingly of their time and money in making the annual membership drive a success for 1962.

We more than realized our goal of 1200 regular members. This we are proud of and wish to thank all who participated. At the beginning of our campaign we had a total of 466 fully and partially paid life memberships. We added 55 life members during our drive and took in a total of 1341 regular annual memberships. Thus, we had a grand total of 1862 members of all types during the year - the largest in the history of the Association. In addition, 66 persons who are paying their $25.00-life membership on the installment plan, either paid on their obligation or paid out in full. A total of $2,214 were collected during the campaign.

One hundred fifty persons were authorized to solicit memberships during the campaign. One hundred ten responded in varying degrees. Thirty-seven failed to assist us and did not return the material sent them. Three solicitors did not work but returned their material.

REPORT OF THE
VOTER FRANCHISE COMMITTEE

Period: December 1, 1961 - November 30, 1962

We continued, during this reporting period, to direct our efforts toward the registration of all eligibles in Macon County. We have encouraged registration through notices to churches, which announced voter registration clinics as well as registration days and hours, and through personal contacts. In the latter, we were assisted by the Tuskegee Woman's Club. Personnel of the committee have conducted clinics on the Sundays preceding the first and third Mondays in the TCA office, in churches, lodge halls, homes and even in cars. We have been compelled to direct more attention to encouraging registration than has been true in previous years. We recognize that much of this is due to apathy on the parts of non-registered Negroes, while some of our difficulties stem from a history of erratic and sometimes non-existing registration by the Macon County Boards of Registrars. It is a fact that for years it has been next to impossible for Negroes to become registered to vote in this county. It is understandable then, that some Negroes are not quite sure that the court injunction now makes it considerably easier for them to become registered voters.

Even so, 1581 applications were made by Negroes during this 12-month period, and 1188, or 75%, were registered. We are pleased with the turn out by Negroes at the polls. Particularly were we gratified with their showing at the May 1st. Democratic Primary, when approximately 2500 Negroes voted.

During the year, more people and organizations evidenced an interest in encouraging Negroes to register. We shall need even more assistance in the years ahead if we are to bring Negro registration more in line with its relationship to the population.

We shall always be grateful to the U.S. Justice Department and the Federal Courts for their parts in causing the uninterrupted registration of citizens of our county during the past 20 months. Without assistance from these media, we could not have realized the degree of progress in the registration of Negroes in Macon County.

The month-by-month schedule of registration follows on next page.

REPORT OF THE
PUBLIC EDUCATION COMMITTEE

Primary focus was placed this year on a specific evaluation of the three Negro High Schools in Macon County. The purpose of this evaluation was to determine whether or not curricular or other offerings meet the needs of the changing and increasingly complex society in which our children will function. Documentary evidence of this is the first step to any constructive remedial approach. This analysis is still in progress.

At the same time, the committee has been working with certain persons interested in the immediate availability of improved educational opportunities for their children. As a result, certain plans have been made which, it is hoped, will accomplish this objective. It is the feeling of the committee that these proposed plans will be beneficial to other members of the community and to the American society at large.

REPORT OF THE
COMMUNITY WELFARE COMMITTEE

December 1, 1961 - November 30, 1962

Notable gains have been made during the year in the area of community welfare. Although much remains to be achieved, more progress was noted during this period than in previous years. To point out these achievements, we list the followings:

1. Conferences were held with city officials and petitions were sent to them.

2. Paving of South Church and South Wright Streets.

3. Providing recreational facilities in a centrally located part of the community.

4. Extending of garbage collection services.

(*)5. Laying the ground work for delivery of mail in the Greenwood and Carver Court areas by placing street markers, thus activating the delivery of mail.

()6. Keeping our streets in better condition.

Although cooperation from city officials has improved, we have not received the support of the Macon County Board of Revenue. Outside the City Limits remains the responsibility of the Macon County Board of Revenue to pave, improve and maintain the streets and roads. A large segment of our people live outside the Tuskegee City Limits, and therefore do not reap the benefits enjoyed by city residents.

As stated in this report, we must realize that much remains to be accomplished. To realize our desires, we must channel our requests through a single committee. While we may have our own particular interest or needs, and while we may differ in opinion, we must stand as a united people. To insure this unity within ourselves and to disseminate the impression of unity among others, demand that we submit our petitions as a group and not as individuals. We should remember at all times, that in community living, a man supported by others attains far more than he would attain alone.

K. L. Buford

REV. K. L. BUFORD, Chairman
Community Welfare Committee

(*) This was realized through the cooperative effort of the late Postmaster, Mr. Larry Robinson.
()With the purchase of new equipment we expect better service in this area.

QUARTERLY REPORT

January 1963 Number 6

Res

PILOT PROJECT OF PENN COMMUNITY SERVICES, INC.
St. Helena Island
Frogmore, S. C.

Thomas C. Barnwell, Jr.
Field Director
Pilot Project

Courtney P. Siceloff
Director
Penn Community Services, Inc.

The Pilot Project moved into an important phase during this past quarter. Following an initial visit by Mrs. Mary Lou Skinner, Health Educational Consultant for the Regional Office of Health, Education and Welfare in Atlanta, and Miss Betty Ficquett, Consultant Nurse for the Division of Maternal and Child Health, South Carolina State Board of Health, a meeting was set up to include other agency personnel. The purpose of the meeting was to find how the various agencies could cooperate in the program in community development in Beaufort County. In addition to Mrs. Skinner and Miss Ficquett those present for a meeting in early December included: Miss Maisie Bookhardt, Supervisor of Health Education for the South Carolina Department of Education; Miss Helen L. Woods, Public Health Nurse with the South Carolina Department of Health; Mrs. Lutitia Anderson, Supervisor of Adult Education, South Carolina Department of Education; Mr. Somers Pringle, the Beaufort County Health Officer, and teachers from School District I and II.

It was decided at this meeting that one section of the Beaufort County should be selected for an area of concentration, rather than carrying out the program in the entire county. The Bluffton area, where there has been a serious incidence of infestation of internal parasites and where both Negro and white members of the community were quite concerned about this problem, was selected as the area. Following the meeting which was held at Penn, these persons went into Bluffton to talk with the local doctor, county nurse, and the school superintendent. Likewise it was decided that the Field Director would work more closely in Bluffton and has met with the Negro PTA to find out if there is interest for work in that area. In additiom to the officials from Atlanta and Columbia, the school superintendents of Districts I and II will be invited to a follow-up meeting to be held in February.

PORT ROYAL INDUSTRIES, INC.

Last spring it was announced that through the efforts of the Beaufort Development Board, the first industry, a sweater knitting mill, would locate in Beaufort. The financial arrangements for this factory would include a loan from the Area Redevelopment Administration as well as money raised in the local community. The Penn director approached the chairman of the Development Board, the manager of the sweater factory, and officials of the Area Redevelopment Administration toward making jobs available on a non-discriminatory basis. Since it was discovered that there were no provisions with the ARA loan for hiring according to merit, the decision rested with the manager. When the manager agreed to test Negro applicants, the Field Director advised a number of persons of these jobs. At present the Port Royal Industries has an integrated work staff without any segregated facilities.

The field director likewise has made known Civil Service job openings at the three Federal installations in Beaufort County. A sign letterer is one of the most recent to be hired.

COMMUNITIES ON ST. HELENA

Coffins Point

The activities of the community were centered around the Praise House this quarter. The ground work has not begun, but the committee has agreed on the size of the building, and a few pieces of materials have been brought from the river banks. These materials were observed by a community man while he was fishing, and were brought to the community by a committee. Because the shrimp season is closed, employment is low in the community; this creates the problem of securing adequate financing for the material.

Mary Jenkins Community Center

Progress in the center is slow, but the men of the center have begun to put up the rafters of the new building. They hope to encourage the participation of the high school boys that the work may be done faster. The building is now at a point where people can work on it in groups. It is hoped that it will be nearly finished before the farming season begins.

HIGH SCHOOL SEMINAR

The American Friends Service Committee Regional High School Director conducted a seminar at Penn Community Services for High School students in December. The theme of the seminar was "What Will the World Be Like Twenty Years from Today?" Most of the students attending this integrated seminar were from Beaufort County, recruited by the Field Director.

ALUMNI MEETING

The approximately twenty persons in South Carolina who have attended the Bethel, Maine, National Training Laboratory, sponsored by the National Education Association, have been meeting regularly. Considering the background and training received by these persons, this bi-racial group could be an important force in the state. It is primarily concerned now with how to carry out the principles of the workshop within the separate agencies rather than undertaking group action. However, there is a possibility that this group could sponsor such a workshop here in South Carolina.

EMANCIPATION CELEBRATION

The Field Director was elected co-chairman of the four-county Emancipation Proclamation Centennial Committee. Through intensive efforts, a large meeting was held honoring a New York lawyer, formerly from Port Royal. Approximately $1,000 was raised at this time for efforts toward further emancipating the Negro today.

BEAUFORT COUNTY STATISTICS - 1960

The enclosed booklet is a culmination of several months work in compiling what seem to be the most significant statistics regarding Beaufort County and its sub-divisions. It is felt that by the marshalling of such information local communities can identify some of their needs more readily. This should prove valuable in the planning of community goals. Copies of this booklet are being sent to most county officials, in the expectation that there will be public awareness and action on these problems as well.

Dear Friend:

You will be interested in our new programs. In the words of Board of Directors Chairman, Dr. B. R. Brazeal, "The Highlander idea, like a Phoenix rising from the ashes, has truly been born again in the Highlander Center."

The summer program includes a South-Wide Voter Education Internship Project designed to broaden and deepen the new Negro voter's concept of his rights and responsibilities. Need for this program became clear as we developed the Citizenship Schools now being spread throughout the South by Dr. Martin Luther King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference and student civil rights organizations. Other Highlander activities to be carried on in Mississippi, the South Carolina Sea Islands, and the Knoxville area are listed in the enclosed schedule.

We are glad to inform you that the Internal Revenue Service has declared contributions deductible for income tax purposes in a ruling retroactive to the date of incorporation. The Highlander Center is now a recognized educational institution with government approval.

Thanks to the loyalty of our contributors and sponsors, Highlander is preparing for a challenging future. We have also made new friends. A university professor writes: "The entire community has benefited from your work and let us add our names to those Knoxvillians who are happy to have you with us."

We hope to hear that you would like to enroll in a workshop, or to make a contribution to help a brave Mississippi Delta leader praticipate.

Cordially,

Myles Horton

MISSISSIPPI DELTA HIGHLANDER EXTENSION REPORT
(GREENWOOD - SHAW - RULEVILLE)

I returned to Mississippi on April 3, 1963. At this time, eight of the leaders in the voter-registration movement in Greenwood were still in jail. On April 2, nineteen others were jailed for marching to the Court House to register.

On April 4, a training session was started with canvassers on techniques of canvassing, after which some 15 workers went out canvassing. From this session, I went into another session with 30 people who were waiting to walk down to the Court House to register. We went over the registration application question by question, explaining the meaning of each. These 30 people then took off for the Court House with Rev. Tucker (who had been bitten by the police dog a week earlier) leading the march and Dick Gregory bringing up the rear.

Everyday thereafter at 7 a.m., I met with canvassers to discuss their rights and responsibilities, to check reports of the previous day's canvassing, to study areas to be canvassed, etc. At 9 a.m., I conducted a session with the transportation committee. 10 a.m.--an instruction session with those who are going down to register. 2 p.m.--a session with canvassers and follow-up teams on Mississippi Government. We discussed the screening and selection of candidates, the elected laws, etc., using the Handbook on Mississippi Politics. 4 p.m.--a role-playing session of situations met in the voter registration campaigns and a public speaking session. There were always 20 or more at each of these sessions.

Each night a Citizenship Class is held in Shaw, Mississippi, where the enrollment is now up to 41. Since the class began on March 25, nine persons have attempted to register.

On Sunday, April 7, I met with a group in Ruleville, Mississippi, at which time they organized themselved to reactivate their voter-registration drive. The two weeks since our meeting, 63 persons have been contacted, and 33 have attempted to register. Citizenship classes are being held here by a Dorchester trained person.

On Saturday, April 20, at 11 a.m., we took 20 workers from Greenwood to Ruleville and met with 15 local workers, held a short briefing session, and sent them out canvassing. 2:30 p.m.--we met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. McDonald (this is the couple who last October sat in the bathtub when shots were fired into their home). There in the front yeard, we held a training session on the questions on the registration form, role-playing, and reviewed fundamental parts of Mississippi laws they needed to answer questions that might be asked by the people of the community.

I note with pride, how former students of Highlander workshops, are heading up committees and taking over sessions, with little help from me.

PENN COMMUNITY SERVICES

St. Helena Island — Frogmore, S.C.

Spring, 1963

WORKSHOP ON RURAL PROGRAMS

"Good players are being benched because the people who are calling the signals in their communities have not yet awakened to the full meaning of democracy." This charge was made by John A. Baker, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, at a workshop on rural development and re-training programs, which was held at Penn in mid-February. In his speech to the workshop, he also stated that prejudice is a primary problem in making effective the federal government's Rural Areas Development program.

Over 200 Negro farmers from across the state attended the three-day workshop and heard speakers from the U. S. Departments of Agriculture, Commerce and Labor, as well as representatives from the S. C. Departments of Education, Agriculture Extension and Employment Security. The speakers explained the functions of each program, what funds were available to farmers and for what purposes, and suggested means whereby Negroes could take advantage of the financial resources available to them. Questions from the audience were perceptive and indicated several major problems concerning the need for adequate information about the programs, and the difficulties encountered by Negroes seeking access to federally supported re-training programs for underemployed workers.

The principal address of the workshop was Mr. Baker's, which was delivered by Dr. L. A. Potts, Special Assistant to the Secretary of Agriculture, after Mr. Baker was unexpectedly detained in Washington. The workshop was sponsored jointly by Penn and the South Carolina Council on Human Relations. We have enclosed a copy of the program.

VOTER EDUCATION WORKSHOP

In January and early February, Penn held two of three scheduled voter education workshops for the residents of Beaufort County. The workshops were designed to supplement voter registration drives by explaining to voters how their votes can be used more effectively. For a voting right to be a truly democratic instrument, citizens must understand their government, their responsibilities and how voting is related to community improvement. Thus, the first two workshops provided a basic introduction to the government of the county and state. Leaders in local communities conducted the two days of discussions for each workshop, which covered such topics as government and party organizations, the functions of elected and appointed officials, and agricultural committees. In addition, speakers analyzed Negro registration and voting, and briefly discussed techniques of voting and campaigning.

Attendance at the workshops was much better than we had anticipated, and we feel that the enthusiasm of the participants is a healthy sign. Throughout the workshops, audience participation was vigorous and pointed, with questions and suggestions concerning problems which might be solved through more effective voting. At the first workshop, Frank D. Reeves, National Democratic Committeeman for the District of Columbia, addressed a ~~standing-room-only~~ crowd.

In the third and final workshop, which is in the planning stages, we expect to bring into focus the major problems of Negro voters in the county, as well as their potential voting strength, in the hope that it will provide a basis for more concerted and effective participation in future elections. Senator Leroy Johnson, Georgia's new Negro senator, has agreed to deliver the major address to this workshop.

BEAUFORT COUNTY STATISTICS

In January, we published a brochure of statistics on various aspects of Beaufort County which we felt would be important to our Pilot Project. Based on 1960 census reports and county records, the statistics covered population changes, educational levels, farm characteristics, employment, income, housing conditions and voter registration. Whenever possible, the figures were broken down into white and non-white categories to help give a perspective to the problems with which the Pilot Project is specifically concerned. The data was also divided according to the county's six census divisions, in order to help identify the most pressing problems in each community.

Hale Chamberlain spent a full year combing records and compiling the data, and we feel that the result has been an especially comprehensive study. The twenty-page brochure was sent to all public officials in the county and is being provided to individuals associated with the Pilot Project.

Among the problems concerning Negroes which stood out most dramatically were these: 81% of the Negro students enrolling in 1950 dropped out before graduation; 46% of the Negro population over twenty-five years old is functionally illiterate, yet the public schools spend per Negro pupil only 70% of the funds that it spends for each white student; Negroes comprise 74% of the farm operators but cultivate only 8% of the total farm land;almost one-third of Negro families earns less than $1,000 annually, and over one-half earns less than $2,000; one-third of the total homes in rural areas have either an outdoor privy or no sanitary facility whatsoever, and one third lack piped water.

PILOT PROJECT

The Beaufort County Pilot Project moved into an important phase in early December. A meeting was held at Penn, attended by representatives of state and local health departments, the state department of education, and the regional office of the U. S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare, as well as Courtney Siceloff and Thomas Barnwell, the Pilot Project Field Director. The objective of the meeting was to discuss where the health and education agencies and the Field Director might work simultaneously on common problems. It is thought that community development efforts can be substantially expedited through inter-agency cooperation, especially since the involved agencies approach similar problems at various levels. The group was particularly interested in Bluffton, where several community improvement projects are underway; Bluffton also has a high incidence of infectation by internal parasites, a serious health problem. In connection with this inter-agency cooperation, Tom will spend additional time in Bluffton. The group plans to continue meeting, in order to share information about what each is doing.

The Coffins Point Improvement Committee, organized as a result of Tom's work in this St. Helena community, has begun construction of a praise house. The building will also be used for Sunday School classes and general community meetings. Although the thirty members of the committee are contributing to the construction, a financial problem has arisen as a result of the shrimp season's being closed and many community residents temporarily unemployed.

Tom has also been working closely with young people in Beaufort County. He contacted approximately fifteen high school students, who attended a bi-racial conference at Penn entitled, "What Will the World Be Like Twenty Years From Today?" The conference was sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee. (see CONFERENCES) Tom also secured a scholarship for a week-long seminar in Greensboro, N. C., for Samuel Burke, a high school student from Sheldon. The seminar was also sponsored by the AFSC and was called, "The Courageous Generation."

COURTNEY AND TOM VISIT
PUERTO RICO AND JAMAICA

Courtney Siceloff and Tom Barnwell left Penn on March 16, for a ten-day observation of community development projects in Puerto Rico and Jamaica. The projects, sponsored by the governments of each country, encompass many of the same problems we have found through our Pilot Project, and by studying their techniques, we can develop methods for making our own programs more effective. Courtney and Tom will interview administrators of the projects, and then will be individually assigned to field workers, in order to directly observe their methods. In our next newsletter, we will have a report of their findings.

$5000 LIBRARY AWARD

The Beaufort County library system, consisting of the Beaufort Township Library and the Laura M. Towne Library at Penn, has received a national, first prize award of $5000 from the Book-of-the-Month Club. The annual award, given in memory of Dorothy Canfield Fisher, was presented to the county system on the basis of its efforts to bring adequate library services to rural areas. John Mason Brown, a member of the editorial board of the Book-of-the-Month Club, will speak at the presentation ceremony, which will be held at the Beaufort Chamber of Commerce Building on April 21 at 3 P.M. Several representatives of the Club will be present, as well as state library officials. The ceremony will be open to the public.

CONFERENCES

Among recent conference groups at Penn have been two highschool seminars, sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee's regional office at High Point, N. C. The seminars were led by Bill Dreyer, the highschool secretary for the region. Norman Whitney, consultant in peace education for the AFSC, participated in the second seminar, March 15 - 17.

The SC Student Council on Human Relations a bi-racial group of college students, met here in early December, and will return in April for another three-day conference

Thirteen students from the Meeting School in New Hampshire, spent two days here in January, on a return trip from Jamaica.

Students from the new Arthur Morgan School in the Celo Community (Burnsville, N. C.) visited us for a week in March, touring the islands and meeting local residents and students.

The Guilford College A Capella Choir will give a concert in Frissell Community House on March 30th. The concert will be sponsored by the Penn Nursery School.

STAFF

Hale Chamberlain and Jimmy Hazelton, two of our short-term staff members, left us in December. Hale, from Brevard, N. C., is now living in New York, and Jimmy , who was raised in Paraguay, is living on a dairy farm in Connecticut. Dave Habercom, from Antioch College, arrived in September and will be here until the end of the summer. Margo Martin, a sophmore at Oberlin College, will join our staff in June for two months.

RALEIGH SPEAKS

We believe the following resolution, approved by the Directors of the Raleigh Merchants' Bureau on May 13, is of tremendous significance:

"God-fearing people, as responsible citizens, and all people of good will, must face the fact that peace in human relations is essential.

"Being charged with the responsibility of offering leadership to business in the community of Raleigh, we are convinced we should, without further delay, remove all policies in both government and business which deny rights and services because of race.

"The overriding challenge now confronting every Raleigh business person is to do these things that would further human relations and the continued economic growth of Raleigh."

The Board of Directors of the Greensboro Chamber of Commerce endorses the principle of equal treatment for all persons, without regard to race, color or religion and urges business firms to begin immediately serving all persons of the community.

The Board also recommends cooperation of community organizations to muster support of Greensboro citizens for the principle endorsed by this resolution.

Further, in the interest of public safety and to encourage the continued development of good community relationships, the Board urges that gatherings of large masses of people, which endanger public safety and disrupt the orderly movement of people and traffic, be discontinued along with unlawful activities of any kind.

> "We the directors of the Charlotte Chamber of Commerce, recommend that all businesses in this community catering to the general public be opened immediately to all customers without regard to race, creed or color."

An AP dispatch from Greensboro on Friday, May 17, contained the following:

> In a surprise meeting Thursday, directors of the Greensboro Merchants Association recommended that "all policies be removed in both government and business facilities within the city of Greensboro which deny rights or services to any citizens." A spokesman said this meant a recommendation for the end of segregated service for all business establishments.
> Meeting separately, directors of the Greensboro Chamber of Commerce urged business firms to "begin immediately serving all persons of the community." The resolution endorsed "the principle of equal treatment of all persons, without regard to race, color or religion."

PRESS RELEASE

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY

JUN 28 1963

The U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce national convention in Louisville has been asked by its group of Ten Outstanding Young Men of 1962 to take five steps aimed at resolving the current crisis in race relations in America.

The TOYM awards are presented annually by the JayCees as proof of their dedication to the belief that the American way of life presents unlimited opportunities to all young men of faith, vision and courage...and to reaffirm that part of the JayCee Creed which says, "service to humanity is the best work of life."

For perhaps the first time since the awards came into being a quarter of a century ago, the ten 1962 recipients have taken a public stand on a controversial issue. In a three-page petition presented to the National JayCee President, Doug Blankenship, the group notes that the JayCees have risen to meet many challenges in the past. The challenge posed now by the controversy over civil rights, the petition states, spells opportunity as well as danger.

The danger lies in the certainty that our ideals will wither if we apply them sporadically or selectively. The opportunity presented is to demonstrate anew that social problems are best solved within the framework of a free and democratic society.

In recognizing these facts, and in recognizing the need for dynamic business leadership in this as in all other challenges to our society, the TOYM call upon the officers and members of the U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce to take the following five steps:

1. Remind the business community that racial discrimination is incompatible with a free enterprise system;

2. Urge employers to hire, train and promote regardless of race or color;

3. Impress businessmen serving the public that racial discrimination is a slur on America;

4. Stimulate businessmen to actively participate on biracial committees to alleviate current racial tensions;

5. Encourage businessmen to assure Negroes free choice in the housing market as part of a community-wide effort to build stable and prosperous neighborhoods.

The TOYM of 1962 also offer their assistance to advance the stated objectives in any manner which the JayCees deem appropriate.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY
JUNE 25, 1963

PETITION

TO: United States Junior Chamber of Commerce Annual Convention
Louisville, Kentucky

FROM: Your Ten Outstanding Young Men of 1962

We were greatly honored when you selected us as America's Ten Outstanding Young Men of 1962. You urged us to continue to work for the betterment of America and to take this responsibility seriously. It is in this vein, and for this reason, that we feel impelled to make the following statement. What we say, we say with the JAYCEES Creed in mind:

> That the brotherhood of man transcends the sovereignty of nations; ....That earth's great treasure lies in human personality; And that service to humanity is the best work of life.

The JAYCEES have risen to meet many challenges, have contributed immeasurably to the improvement of our communities, and have never turned away from a task because of its difficulty.

The current crisis in race relations in America is only the latest in a series of challenges to our Nation's basic principles. It is one to which the President and other high government officials of both parties have frequently and urgently addressed themselves in recent weeks. It is a crisis which is neither sectional nor partisan.

As in the past, the challenge spells opportunity as well as danger. The danger lies in the certainty that our ideals will wither if we apply them sporadically or selectively. We pride ourselves that the American society holds individual dignity inviolate and that it imposes no restraints on the lawful ambitions of any citizens. This conviction is the heart of our vaunted liberty, and the secret of the success of our free enterprise system. America is what it is because our ancestors fled from societies in which men were judged by birth and not by ability. Yet, in 1963, there is within our society a group of persons to whom, in large measure, we deny equal opportunity because of the color of their skin. The President has pointed out that no Negro baby born in America today can hope to have an even chance unless we awaken to the violation of our most sacred principles.

The challenge we now face presents an opportunity to demonstrate anew that social problems are best solved within the framework of a free and democratic society. We who like to teach by example cannot hope to convince the world's overwhelming non-Caucasian majority of the validity of our political and economic system until we can prove that it assures to all persons, regardless of race or color, equality of opportunity. Moreover, the economy of our country, as well as its spirit, is bound to benefit from the entry of 20 million citizens into the mainstream of American life.

Recognizing these facts, and recognizing the need for dynamic business leadership in this as in all other challenges to our society, we call upon the officers and members of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce to take the following steps:

1. Remind the business community that racial discrimination is incompatible with a free enterprise system founded on the premise that both persons and products should compete on their merits.

2. Urge employers in their hiring, training and promotion policies affirmatively to seek out persons with talent and potential regardless of race or color.

3. Impress on businessmen who serve the public that refusal to serve persons because of race is a slur on America as well as on the individual victim and perpetuates the exclusion of Negro Americans from the American way of life.

4. Stimulate businessmen to make a long range commitment of time and energy to work on biracial committees, and other agencies, to find ways to alleviate current racial tensions and make Negroes full participants in the life of our communities.

5. Encourage businessmen to assure Negroes a free choice in the housing market as part of a community-wide effort to build stable and prosperous neighborhoods.

We offer you our assistance to advance these objectives in any manner which you deem appropriate.

Cincinnati Pastor Named As Head Of 'Red Front'

CINCINNATI ENQUIRER

June, 1963

To help its readers keep on guard against propaganda, the Cincinnati Enquirer brings you this authoritative weekly report.

BY JACK LOTTO

One of the top leaders of the integration movement in the South has been named head of a big pro-Communist front.

He is the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, (965 Dana Ave., pastor of the Revelation Baptist Church, 1556 John St.

The post he was elected to is President of the ""Southern Conference Educational Fund," with headquarters in New Orleans, and active in 17 southern states.

Both the Senate internal security subcommittee and the House Committee on Un-American Activities have described the SCEF as an organization set up to "promote Communism" throughout the South.

This group has a long history of activity in the South. It originally was known as the "Southern Conference for Human Welfare." One of its founders was a veteran Communist, the late Louis E. Burnham.

When the SCHW was cited as a Communist front in 1947 by the House committee, it ostensibly went out of business.

It quickly reopened at the same New Orleans address, under the new name and and with the same telephone number.

According to the Senate subcommittee, the Southern Conference Educational Fund was "operating with substantially the same leadership and purposes" of its predecessor.

Said the House report on the SCHW:

"It seeks to attract southern liberals on the basis of its seeming interest in the problems of the South. Its professed interest in southern welfare is simply an expedient for larger aims serving the Soviet Union and its subservient Communist party in the U. S."

The field secretary for the SCEF, and editor of its publication, "The Southern Patriot," is Carl Braden, of Louisville, Ky. Braden, identified in sworn testimony as a member of the Communist party, recently finished serving a one-year prison term for contempt of Congress.

New additions to the Board of the Southern Conference Educational Fund included the Rev. James A. Zellner, Methodist minister in Panama, City, Fla. He is the father of Bob Zellner, the "freedom-walker" active in the "student nonviolence committee," and now serving a jail term in Alabama.

ANOTHER BOARD member is Mrs. Diane Bevel, of Cleveland, Miss., active in Nashville student demonstrations, and currently working in Alabama and Mississippi.

She is jailed in Gadsden, Ala., for taking part with Zellner in a pro-integration march, following in the steps of William Moore, the postman shot and killed during a one-man protest march.

Communists and pro-Communists are moving into the South to provoke friction between whites and Negroes. On the scene is James E. Jackson, a member of the four-man ruling secretariat of the U. S. Communist party.

Jackson, who is propaganda boss in the U. S. for the Reds, is also the party's secretary for southern and Negro affairs—a polite term for chief racial troublemaker.

This Moscow-trained Negro has been in the forefront of Communist organizational and agitational work in the South for years.

In 1959, he went to Russia as the representative of the U. S. Communist party, at the 21st World Congress of Communist parties. There, he hailed the Soviet Union and denounced the United States.

Won't Answer Charges, Accused Minister Says

Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth, contacted in Birmingham, Ala., where he has been a leader in demonstrations there, gave the following statement:

"I do not intend to become involved in verbal gymnastics with those, who for years, have prided themselves and made themselves famous for slandering the character of others without proof and for making a mockery of the democratic process which says a man is innocent until proven guilty.

"I have the highest regard for this organization (SCEF), for the work it has done since I have been a member of the board, and I have seen nothing on the part of any persons, with whom I have been associated, to give any substantiation to these charges.

"Generally, the House committees are governed by Southerners who will label any organization subversive or communistic that seeks to further the American aims of integration, justice and fair-play.

"To a segregationist, integration means Communism. I can think of nothing more un-American than the House Committee of Un-American Activities."

Carl Braden, a former Cincinnati newspaperman, touched off a heated UC faculty controversy with his March 7 appearance at the university

Readers' Views

'Rev. Shuttlesworth: A Great American'

TO THE EDITOR: I know Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth personally, and I am familiar with the Southern Conference Education Fund, of which he is president, and the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, which he founded. These are peaceful, patriotic, American organizations, working for the equality Negroes deserve and have waited for so patiently and so long. Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth is an intelligent, courageous, great American, and we should all be proud to have him and his family as residents of Cincinnati.

The column by Jack Lotto which was in The Enquirer on Sunday, June 9, was a disgrace to the field of journalism and was completely untrue and slanderous. Mr. Lotto appears to be one of those people who enjoy shouting "Communist," whenever anyone disagrees with his way of thinking. It's easy for the cowardly segregationists who have no facts to claim all people who work peacefully for integration are Communists. The McCarthy era is not over. There are still Jack Lottos around who use hate and ignorance as the only weapons they know. The Enquirer has stooped to a new low by publishing such an unfactual column of malicious, ignorant propaganda, which poisons unlearned minds and ruins the reputations of innocent people.

Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth is not associated with any Communist movement and is a great American. I am proud to live in the same neighborhood as his family.

ROSS BARNETT
Testifying yesterday

Barnett Says JFK Aids Reds

By E. W. KENWORTHY
© New York Times News Service

Washington, July 12.—Governor Ross R. Barnett of Mississippi charged Friday that President John F. Kennedy and his brother, Robert, the Attorney General, had "encouraged" civil-rights demonstrations and thus aided a "world Communist conspiracy to divide and conquer" the United States by fomenting racial strife.

Barnett, who lost a battle last fall to keep his state's university segregated, began 3 hours of testimony before the Senate Commerce Committee by saying:

"The President and the Attorney General have encouraged demonstrations, freedom rides, sit-ins, picketing, and actual violation of local laws. What is happening in our nation today fits the pattern of what has been happening throughout the world insofar as the Communist activity is concerned."

Appeals To Congress

He wound up his 16-page formal statement with an appeal to Congress to defeat the President's civil-rights legislation.

He said:

"The President and the Attorney General are sowing the seeds of hate and violence. The nation could reap a bloody harvest, which we certainly do not want.

"Gentlemen, if you pass this

Col. 1, back page, this section

civil-rights legislation, you are passing it under the threat of mob action and violence on the part of Negro groups and under various types of intimidation from the executive branch of this Government.

"This legislation must be defeated if this nation is to survive as a constitutional republic of sovereign states.

"The decision is yours. May God have mercy on your souls."

Barnett said it was "obvious to many" that "racial agitation, strife, and conflict" has been "largely Communist-inspired."

However, he declared, those holding high the banner of the civil-rights issue "fail to read some of the writing on the banner" and "fail to realize that the Communist Party hopes to incite civil insurrection in the South with the purpose of then fanning the flames into a holocaust in the Northern racial strife areas."

Several senators protested these statements. Senator A. S. Mike Monroney (D., Okla.) said the President and Attorney General had been trying to discourage violence, and he asked Barnett for some instances of encouragement.

The Governor said the President had stated in his speech to the nation that "the Negro is not being treated fairly and not getting his just due, and what else can he do but resort to the streets."

"Since then," Barnett said, "we have had more demonstrations."

Monroney then asked the Governor what evidence he had that demonstrations were Communist-inspired and not merely protests by "American citizens seeking rights they are entitled to."

Called 'Red School'

Barnett said the Rev. Martin Luther King, head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, had been "a leader of the agitators."

He then pulled from his briefcase a leaflet printed by the "Georgia Commission on Education," which he identified as a branch of the Georgia State Government.

* A group picture on the leaflet was described in a caption as a "Communist training school." Barnett pointed out that the group included Mr. King; Aubrey Williams, president of the Southern Conference Education Fund and onetime New Deal official, and Abner W. Berry, identified by Barnett as "a member of the central committee of the Communist Party."

He said the picture was taken at the Highland Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn., before the school was closed as subversive by the State of Tennessee. In the picture also was Myles Horton, a former director of the school.

The Southern Conference Education Fund, founded in 1938 in New Orleans, is an interracial group from 17 Southern and Border states and the District of Columbia. Its stated aim is "to eliminate through education and action all forms of racial discrimination and segregation."

Later a spokesman for the House Committe on Un-American activities said records show that neither the education fund nor the school has been cited as subversive by any federal agency.

He also said Horton had never been identified as a Communist. Williams he said, had been identified as a Communist by two former party members before the Senate internal security subcommittee, but they were unable to say that he carried a card. Later, the spokesman said, Williams denied before the same committee that he was a party member, and his denial was never challenged in court.

Monroney inquired whether, in view of the Governor's statement that the F.B.I. was concerned about "the real motivation" of the civil-rights leaders, he had asked J. Edgar Hoover to verify any "communist association."

No Data From Hoover

The Governor said he had no evidence from Hoover but thought "we should ask if any of those in the picture were Communists." Monroney said he wanted more evidence than "one picture."

Later Senator E. L. Bartlett (D., Alaska) asked Barnett, "Do you have any information that (the F.B.I.) believes the demonstrations are Communist-inspired?"

"I don't have anything with me that is sufficient," the Governor said.

Senator Philip A. Hart (D., Mich), noted that "the witness said he didn't know whether Martin Luther King or Aubrey Williams was a Communist."

He continued with a reference to the McCarthy era of the 1950's:

"I would hate to think that this meeting today would create an atmosphere we all experienced within our memory. It was a tragic period when it happened. I would walk with Martin Luther King. I hope that doesn't make me suspect."

*On July 11 pickets marching in front of Southern Conference Educational Fund headquarters in New Orleans, carried signs attacking the Fund. On the back of each sign was a blown-up group picture, evidently the same one displayed by Ross Barnett, with the caption, "Martin Luther King....At Communist Training School."

way to keep the shippers going, no doubt, would be to order the various international "conferences" which set rates in and out of the US to peg these rates high enough for US firms to show a profit. If the Europeans didn't go along, we could follow the airline pattern and close our ports to rate busters. Exporters and importers would, however, raise hell if this were attempted. So instead Congress simply gives the shippers $200 million a year in operating subsidies and $120 million a year for new construction. If the Europeans want to run inefficient airlines, they ought to do it in this same above-board way. But it is unlikely that they will.

Food for Greenwood

I was surprised by the activity roaring around Local 28, the United Packinghouse Workers Center. Chicago friends of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee were loading food and clothing on a truck bound for Greenwood, Mississippi, where a voter registration drive is going on. Last-minute phone calls had not been promising; the SNCC undergraduate labor force was taking final exams. I was prepared for a long night of work.

Instead I found an army of Negro boys lined up from the basement, along the narrow stairway and into the trailer. They were the Rebels and Rebels Junior, a local gang contacted by an enterprising SNCC member.

I climbed into the trailer and joined one of the two lines passing boxes. They were clapping in rhythm as they worked, making a game of it, going as fast as they could. Whenever there was a break in the flow of boxes they shouted, "Keep them coming, keep them coming," as they danced or sparred with each other – all Listons, no Pattersons.

Some girls came to keep tally and tie up broken boxes. Instantly the Rebels had their shirts off and were edging to the door of the trailer where they could be better seen. A girl asked for a knife to cut twine. A rustle and click! click! click! – a forest of blades.

Those of us who remained in the hot, dark end of the trailer had to run to catch boxes flung at us, scooping up heavy ones that skidded along the floor and then running back to pile them up.

I turned to grab one box and got banged in the ribs with another. "Keep it moving, keep it moving, keep it moving," "heavy one, heavy one," (or if you wanted to show your strength, "light one, light one.").

The young kid working on my right was a serious one, but to the two older Rebels working to his right it was all a big joke. "Come on man, move it. We need strong men here. This no place for *weak*lings." The boy would push a box to me, turn around, wham! catch one in the chest, fumble it desperately, turn, wham – another in the shoulder.

"Hand the boxes," I shouted. "Hand them; someone's going to get hurt."

"Don't lose you cool, man."

"You hear the man. Hand them," the kid pleaded. Wham!

"You *mo*ther hands them."

"You ain't got no mother," the kid said as another box bounced off his head. He broke his back trying to keep up with them.

In half an hour I was prostrate, while the Rebels beat out rhythm, danced, boxed, posed and flung 50 pound boxes around. The young kid had left, but surprisingly the two older boys continued at top speed.

An SNCC member who had paused to wipe off his face with his arm said, "No matter how you slice it, work's work." But to the Rebels it wasn't: they transformed it. They threw themselves into it as if the entire fight for civil rights hinged on loading this truck. Their zeal would have been appropriate to something cataclysmic, millennial, like founding the Kingdom of Saints or winning the World Series.

One of the SNCC workers suggested a beer.

"Say man, now you're talking," a Rebel said.

The SNCC worker laughed. "I'm not contributing to the delinquency of a minor."

"Who you calling a minor, man?" the Rebel threatened. "I'm 21 and can prove it."

His buddies turned and examined the SNCC member with distaste.

Another SNCC member was explaining that the Teamsters had volunteered the truck and driver. Wasn't it dangerous to drive into Mississippi? No, the truck was unmarked and sealed. Mississippi officials could weigh it but not look inside.

A Rebel said, "They know better than tangle with the Teamsters."

The SNCC member said, "They don't mind defying the federal government, but when it comes to fighting the Teamsters, that's going too far."

"You putting me on, man?"

When these young field workers for SNCC come North they're invited to speak at the universities and the synagogues; they're entertained in the suburban homes of professionals in the civil rights movement; they're lionized by intellectuals and all those sweet young girls – by everyone except the Rebels, who side with Sonny Liston and the Teamsters.

Anyone who saw the Rebels at work saw more than a bunch of high-spirited teenagers in love with noise and motion. They were working on this job, so mundane and routine to the members of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, because they hoped it would lead to the final battle for which they have no words.

They know what doesn't interest them: voter registration in Mississippi or any other civil rights movement. After the job was finished we sat in little groups, smoking. A young man talked about his sit-in experience. "Oh they did a lot of shoving and pushing. And they squirted mustard and ketchup over us, stuff like that."

"I wouldn't let nobody do me that way," a Rebel said.

FOREIGN REPORTS

ITALY: At Odds and Ends

★ The President found Rome distracted and uncommunicative, after the manner of Antonioni. The cops roughed up Theodore Sorenson and McGeorge Bundy, and that quite literally was all that happened.

Both the French and the Americans chose last week to descend on Italy to seek assurances from a government that does not yet exist. While it is widely assumed that the Christian Democrat, Giovanni Leone, will shortly round up support to win a vote of confidence, it is also known that these votes will be forthcoming on the grounds that the government last no longer than October, at which time the Socialist Party will meet, either to iron out its internal dilemmas or to collapse.

Italian politics is less and less a matter of division between parties, more and more concerned with internal party fractures, opened and embittered by personal feuding. This is particularly true of the Socialists. Mr. Nenni, their leader, had worked long and painstakingly with Aldo Moro, a Christian Democrat, to lay out social and economic plans which the left-center parties could endorse. But at the last moment, Nenni's program was brought down by Riccardo Lombardi, leader of a group of intellectuals within the Socialist Party who said the Nenni proposals lacked vitality. Lombardi probably would have aired his dissatisfaction earlier, were he not so interested in advancing his own personal ambitions. Nenni immediately submitted his resignation as party secretary; it was refused, and the Socialists now are left to dither until October. Then, Nenni will have to consolidate his power, or the party will split into a hopeless mess. Meanwhile, Italy will hobble through the summer with a caretaker government, and the "opening on the left" in abeyance.

CANADA: Getting It Back from the Foreigners

★ It was a fairly sure bet that Mr. Pearson's government would survive the vote of confidence on its finance policies, if only because Canadian politicians do not have the cash to finance another general election. But despite his 40-vote victory the Prime Minister's much ballyhooed "60 Days of Decision" ended on a sour note, and his government emerged looking like a group of bungling amateurs.

At the center of the bungle is Walter Gordon, the finance minister, monetary wizard and chief architect of Liberal victory at the polls. When the budget was first presented June 13, Gordon was widely acclaimed for his proposals to "repatriate Canadian industry." Foreign interests control 59 percent of the manufacturing industry, 75 percent of oil and natural gas and 61 percent of mining. These figures send Canadians up the walls in fits of national emotion; the fact that Canada has insufficient capital to finance rapid expansion is either not realized or conveniently ignored. Mr. Gordon first ran into trouble when the press discovered he had used the services of members of leading Canadian brokerage houses to prepare the budget. But the real storm broke on a delayed reaction to the budget's specific proposals. One provision would have imposed a 30 percent tax on sales to a "foreigner" of Canadian shares in excess of $50,000. "This kind of tax," Mr. Gordon said, "would have stopped in their tracks most of the takeovers of recent years." Such changes in ownership, he claimed, "rarely confer any benefits on the Canadian economy. Another provision of the "Face the Facts" budget puts stiff taxes on foreign (i.e. US) companies unless they permit at least 25 percent Canadian participation.

The results were dramatic. First, Eric W. Kierans, the highly-respected president of the Montreal Stock Exchange, stuck the knife into the government he had helped elect. "The tax is utter and complete nonsense," he said. "It is unconstitutional and an axe to murder the record of trust and confidence between Canada and other Western countries." The industrial stock index took a nose-dive unequalled since the Cuban crisis of last year. Canadian investors became panicky; US investment capital into Canada slowed; some US financial houses reportedly postponed underwriting Canadian borrowings; in what amounted to a broker's "strike," neither bids nor offerings on Canadian stocks were available from New York brokerage houses.

NEGRO PRESS DIGEST

Statement of Purpose

The Negro Press Digest is published for the purpose of providing its readers with news and views of Negro newspapers and news magazines circulated in New York City. The Digest is not intended to present a cross-section of the content of the publications it reviews but focuses upon articles dealing with such matters as civil rights, civil liberties and intergroup relations. Emphasis is given to articles of local interest and national consequence.

News that has been adequately treated, in the judgment of the editors, in the daily press or on the broadcasting media is not duplicated in the Digest unless the Negro press reports such news from a distinctly different point of view.

The New York Chapter of The American Jewish Committee hopes that this publication will help fill an important need in intergroup relations, which is: improved communications bringing fuller knowledge of the problems, aspirations and frustrations of the Negro community as expressed in their press. This periodical, therefore, is designed to foster greater understanding and thereby further the development of truly effective human relations efforts.

BLACK MUSLIMS

MALCOLM X, IN DC, RAPS JACKIE, FLOYD, DR. KING

Amsterdam News (May 25th)

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., Jackie Robinson and Floyd Patterson were scathingly criticized in Washington by Minister Malcolm X of the Black Muslims movement as unwitting tools of white liberals who give their financial backing in the hope these men will head the next columns (Negroes) away from trouble. He said the Negroes have lost their fear of the white man's reprisals and will react today with violence if provoked.. anywhere in the country.

THE INEXPLICABLE MUSLIM BUILD-UP

New York Courier - Editorial (June 8)

One of the current curiosities is the extent to which some white people in authority have been so easily hornswoggled into attaching great importance to the so-called Black Muslims. The Black Muslims represent a passing social and noisy aberration completely alien to the Negroes. Negroes have rejected crackpot proposals such as theirs since 1820.

SELLS PROPERTY TO MUSLIMS FOR MOSQUE: MUSLIMS OPEN MOSQUE

Amsterdam News (June 8)

In Brooklyn, hundreds of Negroes jammed Muhammed's new Mosque to hear dedication ceremonies and welcome Muslims to Brooklyn.. "to help solve the gigantic social, economic and other problems that exist among Negro people here" (Malcolm X). In Trenton, New Jersey, a minister who is also state NAACP president, has sold property to the sect for the erection of a Mosque.

THE BLACK MUSLIM MOVEMENT - Chicago Daily Defender, Series by H. D. Quigg,(June 17, 18, 19 and 20.)

MALCOLM X AT DEM CLUB - Amsterdam News (June 22)

Competent observers estimate that not more than 100,000 American Negroes are Muslims. They are law-abiding, clean, non-smoking or drinking or dope-taking and bitterly non-white men. There are about 20,000 in Chicago and 15,000 in New York. Malcolm X says things like: "We rejoice when the white man dies", yet testifies that Negro Muslims are not a hate organization. The movement is outspokenly anti-white and racist but forbids aggression unless attacked. It has a tremendous record of rehabilitation of criminals. One Los Angeles police officer says the group is dying a natural death and the only thing that keeps them going is publicity. Malcolm X vows the crimes of the white man will be avenged; he urges Negroes to get away from the white man's wicked world. His father was a Baptist minister and in 1925 their Omaha home was burned by "Christians" and when the family moved to Michigan, their home was burned down again and his father was later killed by whites, he says. Prof. Eric Lincoln believes the Black Muslims "do attract the support of the masses and of a small but increasing number of intellectuals - and they will continue to expand as long as racial tension is permitted to flourish in America".

BUSINESS

IN THE WINGS

Amsterdam News - Column by Dave Hepburn (May 25)

In "Operation Mousetrap" we are ready to supply ad agencies with college-bred men and women to refute the agencies' claim that they have not been able to find qualified Negro employees. The only reason the Negro has not made any big tries for ad agency work was because he has not been able to get in and knew it was a waste of time.

BANKER WARNS MAYORS, HATE HURTS POCKETBOOK

Jet (May 27)

Vice-President of the Bank of America, Alan K. Browne, warned delegates to the U.S. conference of mayors that racial violence in cities will hurt the sale of their Municipal Bonds.. said bond investors don't like unfavorable publicity of any kind surrounding the issue of bonds. The impact of violence on credit may be reflected in borrowing costs. Thus the whole community suffers.

WOOLWORTH AWAITS LOCAL ACTION ON COUNTER BIAS - Chicago Defender(6/6)

WOOLWORTH EYES DESEGREATION- Amsterdam News (6/8)

According to the Defender, the F. W. Woolworth Co. has no intention of desegregating its stores on its own initiative, but will await "community cooperation" - a policy statement which shows it has no intention of integrating its eating facilities in segregated cities. The Amsterdam News says that Woolworth issued a formal statement indicating that they would desegregate lunch counters in the South as part of community cooperation campaigns. Both papers quote the same statement in which Woolworth explains the success of its policy of desegregation under local leadership and without violence.

SALESMAN CLAIMS BAR CHAINS DISCRIMINATE AGAINST NEGROES

Amsterdam News (June 22)

Several Harlem bar chains owned by non-resident whites were accused of discriminating against Negro liquor salesmen by taking only TOKEN orders from them while purchasing the bulk of their liquid stock from white salesmen.

EDUCATION

HARLEM PRINCIPAL MAKES LILY-WHITE SELECTION .. ACCELERATED STUDENTS ALL-WHITE

Amsterdam News (May 25)

The Harlem community was up in arms this week over the revelation that pupils selected to participate in a highly desirable accelerated program in P.S. 125 are all white pupils. Not one of the 19 Negro children in two classes were tested. An offer to test them belatedly was turned down by the parents who claimed that their children would be subjected to too much strain in trying to catch up with the program which has been in progress for seven weeks.

ANOTHER LOOPHOLE STOPPED

New York Courier - Editorial (June 15)

The Supreme Court has not been deceived by some school transfer plans based solely on racial factors, which would perpetuate segregation. The plans allowed transfer of a child from a school in which he was in a racial minority. A white child was easily permitted transfer under these conditions, but Negro pupils had to show "good cause" which could never satisfy school boards in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida and other Southern states. Now our white "friends" will have to think up some other scheme.

LAW TO "GET" MUSLIM SCHOOL MAY HELP NEGROES

Jet (June 27)

A bill introduced in the Illinois Legislature aimed at closing a Muslim school in Chicago because it allegedly teaches racial hatred, could become fresh ammunition for Negroes fighting segregated public schools. Allowing the state school superintendent to close any school teaching racial hatred or the superiority of any race, the measure "would also apply to any white supremacy school", said sponsor Senator Arthur Gottschalk.

EMPLOYMENT

LABOR STILL CRITICIZED ON EXCLUSION OF NEGROES - Amsterdam News (6/8)

NAACP Labor Secretary Herbert Hill said the AFL-CIO has refused to move decisively even where there are state and municipal fair employment practices commissions, to break the pattern of exclusion of Negroes in the building trades. Failure to take advantage of Negro manpower is costing the nation an estimated total of $28 billion according to National Urban League estimates. If the yearly earning power of the Negro equalled that of whites, the yearly personal income for Negroes would be boosted by $11,850,000,000. The present situation creates a heavy loss for industry, profits, dividends, inventories, etc. plus the cost of blighted housing, racial violence and a higher crime rate.

FOWLER URGES LABOR, UNIONS TO CLEAN UP HOUSE - FAST! - (6/8)

THE UNIONS' RESPONSIBILITY - Editorial (6/15)

LONG ISLAND -- INSIDE OUT - Column by Thomas A. Johnson (6/22)

All the above from the New York Courier

Discrimination in employment is the key problem confronting the Negro. Fault lies with the unions, which refuse to permit the Negroes to work, particularly skilled labor, and in not admitting Negroes for apprentice programs. President Kennedy's means and will to force skilled unions into line in the hiring for Federal construction programs is questioned. George Fowler, chairman of the State Commission for Human Rights, in an address to the Annual Convention of the Union Label and Service Trades Department of the State of New York urged labor to evolve a positive program for promoting the needed equal work opportunity. Discontented with the snail's pace of integration efforts, the NAACP in New York has noted that unfair practices are still prevalent in the unions. At the Flushing World's Fair Grounds some minority workers perform in skilled capacities, but must work under the supervision of a union member and must be satisfied with laborer's pay.

HOSPITALS AND MEDICINE

EXPERT SAYS RACIAL GHETTOS SPAWN NEW MENTAL ILLNESSES

Jet (May 30)

Present methods of psychiatric treatment cannot hope to meet with the problems of persons living in racial ghettos. The pervasive patterns of racial segregation in large areas of American life damage and make ineffective the personalities of its victims and create deep feelings of inferiority in Negro youth, declared Dr. Kenneth Clark in an address before the Association for Improvement of Mental Health, Inc.

ASK COUNCIL TO BACK BAN ON HOSPITAL BIAS

By Ted Coleman - Chicago Daily Defender (6/11)

THE STETHO SCOPE - By Earl B. Smith, M.D. IMHOTEP, N.Y.Courier (6/15)

An important legislative approach to the problem of segregation of patients and doctors was suggested at the IMHOTEP National Conference on Hospital Integration, in Georgia. At the gathering of professionals in the field, the suggestion was made to the Congress to delete the section of the Hospital Survey and Reconstruction Act which says that a state should provide separate but equal hospital facilities for its residents. The AFL-CIO has given its support to the proposal. In Chicago, the City Council Committee on Health recommended passage of an amendment banning discrimination in hospitals through advance inquiries in race. It received unanimous approval.

HOUSING AND REAL ESTATE

AN END TO BULLDOZERING?

New York Courier - Editorial (May 25)

The policy of laying waste to blocks of bad housing with a bulldozer may be coming to an end. It may be displaced by a policy of rehabilitating run-down residences and subsidizing poor tenants. Bulldozing of whole blocks has scattered neighborhood populations, causing social disruptions, increasing delinquency, also perpetuated housing segregation.

"WE ARE FED UP" TOO

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (June 4)

In recent years in Chicago the lines of racial demarkation have been drawn with greater precision and rigidity. Urban renewal has compounded the concentration of the black ghetto. Entrenched real estate interests, politicians, city newspapers have all blocked free choice of residency. School districts are gerrymandered to fit the residential pattern. Chicago is the most segregated big city over 500,000. A Look Magazine survey and the President's Civil Rights Commission agree on this. Chicago may not be as segregated as Birmingham, but it isn't too far behind.

CONFAB CITES HIGH COST OF ILL. HOUSING JIM CROW

Chicago Daily Defender (June 13)

Evanston attorney Donald Frey addressed an all-citizen statewide conference on the high cost of racial prejudice in real estate. He said that communities must be refashioned without prejudice and that enhancing human values will enlarge property values. Other speakers stressed the high economic, social, political and moral cost of continued racial segregation.

WESTCHESTER POTPOURRI

New York Courier - Column by Inez H. Henderson (June 15)

Negroes have been looking to white real estate brokers to find homes for them in sections where the number of Negro neighbors is small. This is good since it aids in preventing a so-called ghetto. Heretofore the Negro brokers' hands were tied. The new Metcalf-Baker Law should help them. If the Negro brokers will cooperate, the Urban League will give them leads in practically lily-white sections.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

UNCIVILIZED METHODS

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (May 22)

South Africa continues to shock the conscience of the world, now with a bill to detain political prisoners indefinitely after their sentences expire. The same law prescribes death for South Africans who advocate overthrow of the regime, even if they are living abroad. The Nazis also assumed their laws to be binding outside of their country.

BRINKLEY'S STONE AGE

Amsterdam News - Column: Poppy's Notes by Poppy Cannon White (5/25)

Anyone who knows Haiti will resent the recent Brinkley report which mentioned mainly Duvalier's reign of terror .. until recently financed and endowed by the American taxpayer. In spite of warnings and protests the U.S. Government bolstered dictator Duvalier for years. The most incredible remark Brinkley made was that the Haitians are still in the stone age. What of Dantes Bellegarde, one of the world's most honored historians; Madam Ambassador Lucienne Estime; erudite dancer Jean Destine; anthropologists like Dr. Jean Price-Mars; Haitian writers, poets, artists, musicians, scholars, doctors.

JIM CROW POLICY FIGURES IN U.S. DECISION ON JETS FOR SOUTH AFRICA
Chicago Daily Defender (June 17)

AFRICAN LEADER ASKS U.S. STOP SENDING ARMS TO SOUTH AFRICA. (6/22)

COLD-SHUDDER NEWS - Column: Poppy's Notes by Poppy Cannon White (6/22)
Both of these articles appeared in Amsterdam News

South Africa seeks to buy American planes and if the U.S. government provides them, so that the South African government can kill South African Negroes, while American Negroes are in a ferment, it could be very damaging to this country. No such deal can be consummated without the go-ahead from the State Department, which, it appears, is not in an affirmative mood. The State Department has instructed our Embassy in Pretoria to integrate its independence day reception. Meanwhile the Pan African Congress seeks a policy statement from the U.S. that we will not supply arms or other weapons to the South African government. Other frightening news headlines atomic research and uranium mining in South Africa and announces that tear gas bombs can be sold without licenses to whites over 18. (Ital. ours.)

GOV. WALLACE FINDS SOME FRIENDS, JIM CROW TEACHERS IN SOUTH AFRICA
Chicago Daily Defender (June 17)

Governor Wallace's defiant act at the University of Alabama has been immortalized in verse by instructors in the Pretoria, South Africa Technical School, who urged Wallace not to budge. But the editor of the Pretoria News was censured for printing a cartoon drawing a close comparison between racist Mississippi and apartheid South Africa. Elsewhere in Africa reaction favored the firm stand of President Kennedy in forcing through the registration of the Negro students.

LEADERSHIP PROBLEMS

SO MANY VOICES

Amsterdam News - Column: White-on-White by Gertrude Wilson (5/25)

We find ourselves faced with a paralysis in our attempts to interpret a whole community and a racial group as a unit. There is one common denominator in skin color. Color is significant not in itself but in the attitude of the outside world toward color. But to find one person who can interpret a whole people's reaction to the influences of color is impossible. Adam Clayton Powell criticizes the NAACP because there are white people in high positions while Roy Wilkins castigates Powell. Social workers and teachers criticize those they are supposed to be helping, and people criticize the social workers and teachers for self-interest. To understand any group one must listen to many voices.

BRAINS AND BRAWN
Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James L. Hicks (June 1)

NO PROGRESS
Amsterdam News - Editorial (June 1)

Can the Negro leadership of brains maintain and hold on to the gains won by the Negro leadership of brawn? White people know that if and when a black and white showdown comes, a Hell of a lot of white people are going to get hurt too, even though the odds favor the white man to win. The measure of what the Negro gets will depend on whether his brawn is truly represented when they begin slicing up the civil rights pie, or whether his brains once more sell him down the river at the conference table. One of the amazing truths to come out of the current race relations situation is the fact that so many white people know so very little about the actual wants and desires of the Negro. We would be more than happy if we could get over to our white sympathizers that Negroes no longer consider a matter "settled" merely because white people agree to settle down and TALK to them about it. If the non-violent movement has taught the Negro nothing else, it has taught him that he is now in his strongest bargaining position with the white bigot.

LO, THE POOR MODERATES!

New York Courier - Editorial (June 1)

Whatever decisions are made to bring about the solution to the racial problems will be accomplished by the meeting of minds of moderate whites and colored around conference tables in each community. Ironically, these moderates are the target of the extremists on both sides When these extremists reach an impasse, they always turn for help to the moderates who recognize that people of the two races cannot survive without compromise.

IT'S NOW OFFICIAL: BOBBY KENNEDY GOOFED ON 'SECRET' RIGHTS PARLEY -- ALL-STAR CAST 'SHOCKED' AT ATTORNEY GENERAL'S NARROW VIEW OF ISSUES
New York Courier - Article by Evelyn Cunningham (June 1)

THE SHARPER SIDE OF NEW YORK
New York Courier - Column by Hazel Sharper (June 1)

VIEWS AND REVIEWS
New York Courier - Column by George S. Schuyler (June 22)

All participants of the private New York meeting called by Attorney General Kennedy to discuss the race problem have been sharply criticized. Mr. Kennedy never got the point of what the Negroes were saying - i.e. that the problem is an emergency for the country and not just for the Negroes. The Negro participants were described as unrepresentative because of their "complete removal from the special problems which beset the average Negro". Miss Sharper says that it is foolish to expect the Kennedys to kick themselves out of the White House in an attempt to solve the racial problem. Mr. Schuyler calls the Negroes who have criticized Mr. Kennedy ignorant and rude. He also called them cowardly for not daring to speak up in favor of Mr. Kennedy for fear of affronting the militant Negroes now in the ascendancy. This is dangerous brinkmanship and can lead to mobbism and a hundred Sharpevilles.

ADVICE TO WHITE FOLKS

Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James L. Hicks (June 8)

My advice to white folks who are all shook up about the sudden change in attitude of the Negro is to go out and meet some average Negroes on your own and get rid of your Negro advisers. The Negro "expert" has been moving close enough to his white benefactor so that he is detached from the Negro masses and their problems. He is misleading the white man into thinking Negroes are happy and simply wild over the crumbs he is letting them have.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

New York Courier - Column by George S. Schuyler (June 8)

The Negro salvation must be of his own making, as a result of intelligent planning and not mass meetings and freedom marches. With $20 billion income we can put some Negro families in every suburban area in the country and end de facto residential segregation. With capital and training, there would be no barriers to some Negro-owned businesses moving "downtown" and competing in the general market. Even the Orientals seem to find ways. Instead of funds being sought to bail out picketers, money should be sought for holding companies to finance such businesses.

REV. GARDNER TAYLOR WARNS OF PERIL IN RACE STRUGGLE by Marjorie Drexel

'FAIR DEAL TO NEGROES ONLY WAY OF AVOIDING BLOODSHED', TAYLOR

Both articles from the New York Courier (June 15)

At the Annual Meeting of the Urban League of Greater New York, Rev. Gardner C. Taylor, pastor of the Concord Baptist Church of Brooklyn, warned that the country was on the verge of a blood bath, if conditions for the Negro did not improve immediately. The former member of the Board of Education charged that the President is not exerting strong leadership, but, rather, reacting to events. He gave top priority to the problems of equality in employment.

NEGRO ORGANIZATIONS

NAACP CHIEF HITS CORE GROUPS AS CIVIL RIGHTS 'EAGER BEAVERS'

New York Courier - By Evelyn Cunningham (June 22)

Roy Wilkins of the NAACP bitterly brought to the surface a smouldering schism among leading civil rights organizations. He criticized such groups as CORE for claiming leadership in the civil rights fights throughout the country, when the financial burden was coming from the NAACP. Mr. Farmer of CORE denied the charges, stating that CORE was thoroughly financing itself. On another front, a member of the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions, who is making a study for the Fund for the Republic, characterized large organizations such as NAACP and CORE as doing nothing for the poorer Negroes. He referred specifically to the lack of code enforcement in housing on the West Side of New York, but he did find 3 good elementary schools which satisfied parents there.

MRS. EVERS ACCEPTS NAACP FUND - Jet (June 27)

SUM DEFENDER RAISED FOR EVERS TO BE TURNED OVER TO NAACP

Chicago Daily Defender (June 24, 25, 26)

Mrs. Medgar Evers said that "Medgar gave his life that his children and all children might enjoy full freedom in their native land" as she approved establishment of a NAACP-Medgar Evers Scholarship Fund which seeks to raise $30,000 for the education of the Evers' three children. Negroes and other citizens are urged to send their contributions to NAACP, 20 West 40th Street, New York 18.

NEW RIGHTS GROUP SET: WILL LOBBY IN WASHINGTON

Jet (June 27)

Newly formed (N.Y.) rights group, The Assembly To Secure The Blessings of Liberty, hopes to "solidify the Negro vote" and to lobby in Washington for new civil rights legislation, put pressure on Congressmen in behalf of Negro voters in large northern and southern cities.

NEGRO PRESS

NEGRO PUBLISHERS ANGRY AT TIMES

NEGRO LEADERSHIP AND TIMING

Both the above from the Amsterdam News (May 25)

The New York Times asked Negro publishers for statements of 200 words on Negro leadership and the timing of desegregation moves. The Times did not see fit to publish the statements in full but did publish excerpts out of context. The Pittsburgh Courier stands firmly behind the leadership of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the leadership typified by the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. The Amsterdam News stressed the fact that every former president played "footsie" with the Declaration of the Bill of Rights and that Kennedy and the Supreme Court have recognized that there are twenty million Negro citizens who want results. As for Negro leadership, if NAACP, CORE, Adam Clayton Powell, Jackie Robinson, Martin Luther King or the Muslims bring no results, then there may come a leader like Castro or Ben Bella.

RUMORS AND RIOTS

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (June 13)

These days of racial stress have spawned the inevitable crop of rumors and rumors often lead to riots. We have heard rumors but we won't repeat them since rumor mongers are wrong 90% of the time. Learn to distinguish between fact and fiction and don't get excited about fiction. Check it out.

PERSONALITIES

JACKIE'S ANSWER TO THE DAILY NEWS

Amsterdam News (May 25)

"Sir: I could not care less that the Daily News agrees with the Alabama Editor who advised President Kennedy that everything would be peachy in Birmingham if "outsiders" like myself and Floyd Patterson stayed away from the scene. .. Dr. King was also labeled an "outsider" by the Southern editor. It so happens that the Negro people of Birmingham invited Outsider King in to help them. It also happens they invited Outsider Robinson and Outsider Patterson to come to Birmingham. Whenever and wherever in the South the leaders believe I can be of help, I intend to go. I assess the dictates of my own conscience as infinitely more important than the approval of your newspaper.

Very truly yours,
Jackie Robinson"

BEN BURNS COLUMN

Chicago Daily Defender (June 17 and 20)

Author James Baldwin is getting increasing criticism for his extremist stand from liberals who think he's too engrossed in "hate". Baldwin is annoyed at being identified as a Negro spokesman; he says he speaks only for himself .... The NAACP is trying to convince President Kennedy to address their convention in Chicago in July. They feel his speech would have the effect of calming racial tensions, and would be the first time a President has addressed a Negro organization

WILL MARSHALL BE NAMED TO U.S. SUPREME COURT?

Chicago Daily Defender - Column by Ben Burns (June 18)

The rumor mill persists that Judge Thurgood Marshall will be nominated to the U.S. Supreme Court to replace either Justice Douglas or Justice Black. That will probably precipitate a major Congressional battle over his confirmation.

THIS IS 1963, SEN. DIRKSEN

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (June 20)

Senator Dirksen appears to be living in the 19th century. He has recalled with fervent support an 1883 Supreme Court decision which supported private property rights in public places. The passage of time brought enlightenment to these anachronistic Supreme Court decisions. What might have been considered a "good law" back in an unenlightened age does not necessarily make a "good law" in more mature times.

"BRAVEST MAN" RELATES MISS. PERILS
New York Courier (May 25)

After the attempt to assassinate Martin Luther King Jr. in Birmingham, Wyatt T. Walker, King's assistant, called Jackie Robinson to get government protection for King .. with the realization that if anything happened to one of the Negro leaders, there would be no stopping brutal race rioting throughout the country. Wyatt himself had already experienced the murderous brutality of Governor Wallace's storm troopers when the local Gestapo rushed into the patio of the Gaston Motel ordering all to go inside and Mrs. Wyatt, in turning to obey, was attacked by a hulking police officer who smashed the butt of his carbine against the back of her head. Later she was released from the hospital and was returning to Atlanta in the family car when she was arrested for "passing a stop light". When she argued that she was not guilty and refused to pay a fine, she and her four children were jailed. Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary of the NAACP, in speaking of the struggle faced by Negroes in LeFlore County, Mississippi, called the Rev. Donald B. Tucker, leader of the voter-registration drive in Greenwood the "bravest man I know". Rev. Tucker was bitten by a huge dog during a march of local Negroes to the Greenwood courthouse to register for voting. The police who had commanded the dog's attack joined the white hecklers. Rev. Tucker explained that Negroes went in groups because they were rightly scared to go singly. Teachers and others thought of as the "better colored people" are not taking part in the registration drive, he said, because they lived under fear of reprisals and loss of their jobs.

Leaders of the Toledo Negro community, backed by an eye-witness report by a reporter from the Toledo Blade, have demanded action to prevent brutality after a Negro was beaten in city jail. In New York an innocent bystander was knocked down and kicked by police during a Harlem riot and obliged to pay a sizable hospital bill for treatment of his injuries. A Chicago disc jockey was pushed around and arrested for an alleged traffic violation, by two Negro officers whose violent behavior toward a fellow Negro confused him badly.

RETURN TO SLAVERY
Amsterdam News - Column: White-on-White by Gertrude Wilson (6/8)

So-called free men who are Negroes in the South are not only told where they may eat, live or play, given long lists of what they may NOT do, but they are bossed, bullied and bedeviled and told they are happier that way. Now, in Jackson, Mississippi, black men who are prisoners are trundled out to lift their protesting brothers off the streets into the nearest paddy wagons so the outside world cannot say that white policemen, members of the Mississippi gestapo, manhandled or abused Negroes who are demanding their rights. These black trusties from the Jackson jails are slaves who cannot protest because they fear what would happen to them.

Inhumane molestings, rapings and other personal atrocities against Negro and white young women in Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi jails have been reported. Singer Lena Horne, Dorothy Height, of the National Council of Negro Women, and Dr. Jean Noble of the Delta Sigma Theta Sorority revealed the charges and the almost total lack of publicity about these occurrences. The Youth Emergency Fund has been formed by the women to give protection to young people and to attempt to prevent such happenings in the future.

For the moment, let the record show that the most influential minority of voters in New York City have only two representatives out of the present 25 members of the City Council.. and when the members are increased to 35, most likely there will still be the same imbalance. Does anyone believe that a balance-of-power minority will permit such imbalance to continue?

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS - Editorial, Chicago Daily Defender (6/15)

Commenting on President Kennedy's speech to the nation, NAACP secretary Roy Wilkins said: "In properly posing the moral issue involved in the present racial crisis, and condemning racism, the President gave forthright support to and encouraged those Americans who want to eliminate racial discrimination not only because it is illegal and imperils the national security, but also because it is immoral. It is notable, however, that he failed to include the urgent need for congressional action to bar discrimination in employment which is the most pressing problem confronting the Negro Americans today." However, it is obvious that this historic year will see more significant advances, more genuine achievement in the march toward freedom despite the South's answer with the brutal murder of Medgar Evers and Dixie Senators threatening with filibuster. Negro reaction to Kennedy's speech was expressed by words of glowing praise in numerous letters sent to the Amsterdam News .. echoed by columnist Jackie Robinson. White House sources confirmed to that paper that almost half of the speech was without a prepared text .. that he was speaking from the heart.

FAR BESIDE THE POINT

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (June 20)

Sen. Russell of Georgia called the administration's proposed civil rights program an "adventure in socialism" and "a step in the direction of communism"; whereas what the administration has in mind, it is believed, is that ownership and control of property cannot be used to deprive citizens of their constitutional rights in public places.

THE MAN WHO SETTLED THE BIRMINGHAM CRISIS. BIRMINGHAM RACE STRIFE CAUSES BIG DIP IN RETAIL STORE SALES

Chicago Daily Defender (May 23rd, June 3rd)

Sidney Smyer, head of the committee that met with Negro leaders in Birmingham, used to be very tough about racial matters. After a Rotary International Conference in Tokyo where foreign Rotarians gave him a rough time over violent acts in civilized America, he recognized the need of direct communication with Birmingham Negroes to plan for quiet desegregation of public facilities. He regrets that the slowness of the plan caused local Negroes to hold demonstrations. Federal Reserve Bank figures report department store sales in Birmingham for May were off 15%, mostly it is felt, because of the racial strife. Smyer said it was hard enough to persuade new firms to locate in Birmingham before the trouble, and that only enlightened leadership under a truce with Negro leaders can give the city a new face.

Amsterdam News (June 1)

Violence is the last thing expected as a result of the non-violent plans of the NAACP to remove all forms of segregation from Jackson, Mississippi, especially since the city is already integrated in many respects, with some job equality, also some integrated lunch counters, labor unions and churches. Some NAACP officials feel that this will be the last peaceful demonstration as Negroes are bitter over the slowness of the campaigns for integration, expect some violence to erupt because of bitterness on both sides.

BIRMINGHAM: WHO TRICKED WHOM?
New York Courier (May 25)

The victory of Negroes in Birmingham may be lost unless a single high command is appointed to carry out the strategy needed to accomplish first-class citizenship for the Negro. The hard-pressed leaders spend too much of their valuable time in jail. Either Roy Wilkins or Dr. King should be in command to work in concert with other units, through a merger of NAACP and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. There was something pathetic about the eagerness with which colored and white spokesmen in Birmingham accepted the assertion that a solution had been found overnight to a problem 300 years old. It is also an unprecedented thing in journalistic history that, although great property damage resulted from the rioting, no news service has carried an estimate of the damage done to private and public property.

She notes the contribution made by a small group of women in breaking the indifference or outright hostility of the middle class in the city. She points up the Negroes' unity and their awareness of their strength. They believe the recent settlement will stick because whites realize that Negroes' demands have to be reckoned with lest emotional forces get out of control.

BIRMINGHAM, U.S.A.
Amsterdam News-Column: People In Action, Dr. Martin Luther King (6/8)

Alabama's largest city, Birmingham, was chosen as a "target city" for very good reasons: In the last twenty-two months there have been twenty-four bombings of homes, churches; it is not an uncommon thing for Negro women to be accosted by city police, forced to submit to criminal assault, and their lips sealed under the threat of death to them and members of their family. Birmingham is the home of our strongest affiliate, the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights... Birmingham represented the hard-core recalcitrant, segregationist South. The loss of vital industry coupled with the ugly image created by the Bull Conner philosophy of race relations had thrown the South's largest industrial center into an economic demise from which it was struggling to survive. If Birmingham could be cracked, the direction of the entire movement in the South could take a significant turn.

Calling Jackson, Miss. a wonderful city, its mayor Allen Thompson said, that when all the agitation is over, Jackson will still be happy and prosperous. There will be no change, no meetings with NAACP, nor will the city permit anti-segregation demonstrations. (Remarks made during a telecast around June 1st). Demonstrators in North Carolina want the world to know that North Carolina is not all it is cracked up to be, said Dr. George Evans of Greensboro. A white business executive said that liberality in the state is in inverse proportion to the number of Negroes in a specific community - the more Negroes, the less freedom. The entire state of Florida is seething with NAACP activity. bi-racial committees have been appointed to work on overall programs of desegregation of schools, employment and public facilities in Cocoa, Gainesville, Daytona Beach, Tampa, Tallahassee and other cities. Greater Miami religious leaders of all faiths have issued an unequivocal proclamation stating their belief in equal rights and asking for countrywide action to guarantee them.

CAPITAL COMMENT

New York Courier - Column by Lynn Williams (June 15)

Congressman Adam Powell has gone off the deep end by predicting there will be one of the worst race riots in history in Washington, D.C. Although D.C. Negroes are victimized and tokenism has been used by "phony" white liberals to spike racial unrest, there are no visible evidences of racial bias. "Tan" government workers who should be assuming leadership are conspicuously silent and detached from the racial rumblings.

THE 'GOOD TOWNS' OF DIXIE

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (June 17)

After a serious race riot in Lexington. N.C., the editor of the local newspaper observed: ...."We thought we had a good town". The good towns have suddenly been disturbed to find their goodness was an illusion. There are good people in good towns in the South, but they have allowed men of evil to dominate because they feared to stand up for the right. Retribution is coming today to the good towns of the South, in riots and violence and sometimes in death.

LOUISVILLE'S EXAMPLE

FREE, WHITE AND 21 TOLLS DEATH OF LAST FILM TABOO - Jet (6/20)

Originally hailed as a film classic, "Birth of a Nation" was simply gross propaganda which glorified the KKK. The film is now being shown in Chicago in the University area, attended mostly by students whose laughter during the film shows they have come of age. Shown on the Westside of Chicago or in Alabama, it might create wholesale bloodshed among Negroes and whites. A new film, "Free, White and 21" proves justice can and sometimes does prevail in Texas, while in "Nation" there was no justice for the Negro. But "21" could cause harm to such militant organizations as CORE, SNCC and NAACP. Also it is not without its stereotype characters. It is a revolutionary flight of realism which was made in the South by a southerner, and it is viewed apprehensively by film censors even in the most liberal parts of the North.

LITTLE LEAGUE WORLD SERIES HIT BY BIAS

Chicago Daily Defender - Column: So They Say by Al Monroe (6/6)

It is a strange thing to see sports promoters with biased minds even though business men and politicians often attempt to force such a policy in the athletic picture. Now the Beckley Elks in W. Va., who will promote the "World Series" of Little League baseball, has chosen to stick by its policy of segregation and will not admit teams with Negro players. Little League headquarters has announced the games will be switched to another city. The Elks practice discrimination within the order. It is a shame they should be permitted to direct or stage baseball.

SO THEY SAY

Chicago Daily Defender - Column by Al Monroe (June 18)

Golfer Charlie Sifford was not invited to the Colonial National Invitational at Fort Worth, Texas, because, he says, he is "taboo". The Chairman of the match said Sifford failed to qualify but 1963 records show he is among the top 40 money winners, scores in the thirties.... It has been predicted that Negroes will shy away from professional baseball soon, when they find more lucrative employment in other fields. But could men like Willie Mays et al. in other fields attract a combined salary of over half a million dollars? Baseball will increase as a stepping stone for Negroes to solid careers in business after their athletic competition days are over.

UNIONS

Amsterdam News - Editorial (June 8)

Recently David Dubinsky's ILGWU drew some unsavory headlines when a Congressional Committee found that the union does not exactly practice what it preaches in the way of fair employment particularly when it comes to hiring Negroes in locals controlling the better paying jobs in the garment industry. More recently, the State Commission For Human Rights had hearings started when a Negro charged he had been refused admission to the cutter's union because of his race. The union did not get a clean bill of health. Now comes a blast from the union at Commissioner Fowler and his aides at SCHR for the way the investigation was handled. In other words "kill the umpire".

GOVERNOR HUGHES' LIGHTNING CHANGE

New York Courier - Editorial (June 15)

After stating that he was convinced that some racial discrimination was practiced in the building trades unions of the state, Gov. Hughes of New Jersey met with the union leaders. After 90 minutes of discussion with them, he was "satisfied that generally speaking", there was no racial discrimination practiced in the apprenticeship program or otherwise. He maintained that the leaders gave him more information than he had as a result of the survey made by his office on which he had based his first statement. It would be interesting to know what happened in that smoke-filled room in the Newark hotel.

USE OF LAW

COURTS: SLOW, BUT SURE

New York Courier - Editorial (June 8)

Almost every session of the Supreme Court comes up with a new decision that widens the door of freedom and opportunity to Negroes and limits the area of discrimination and segregation. Unthinking Negroes have argued that the court action is too slow. Communist tactics have been recommended by Benjamin Davis, the Communist leader, which would result in bloodshed, killings and destruction. Courts may be slow, but they act with the sanction of the law and the power of the state.

A NEW DAY

Amsterdam News - Editorial (May 25)

The Supreme Court's decision of May 20, 1963 may well have greater impact on the Negro's struggle for full equality in these United States than the May 17, 1954 rulings on school desegregation. The Court held that a city that makes segregation a policy by ordinance or official statements cannot prosecute Negroes for seeking service in "white only" stores or public places and that the storeowner cannot be held responsible alone.

New York Courier - Column: My View by Benjamin Mays (May 25)

I do not understand why it has been said that the Federal Government could not step into the Birmingham situation because no Federal law had been violated. CITY RACIAL VIOLENCE AT NEW HIGH - BERRY

Chicago Daily Defender (May 23)

Chicago Negroes and their property suffered more "serious" assaults this April than in all of 1962, Chicago Urban League's director Berry reported. HISTORY SHOWS - Column by J. A. Rogers

NEITHER POWER NOR MIGHT - Column: My View by Benjamin E. Mays

Both the above appeared in the New York Courier June 22nd.

Mr. Rogers feels that non-violence will not work and that Negroes have been pushed too far and must protect themselves. Court decisions largely just political temporizing, are often futile. Negro rights are all covered by the 14th Amendment and the enforcing of these rights by Washington, by armed force if necessary, is all that is needed. Fortunately, responsible white Americans are being aroused to do something about it..... Mr. Mays, on the other hand, sees in the sit-in demonstrations an indication that the Negroes are determined, and have overcome fear.

MEDGAR EVERS

New York Courier - Editorial (June 22)

In a state born and nurtured on violence, the murder of Medgar Evers was easily predictable. It was instigated by the white Mau Mau of Mississippi, whose state-subsidized reign of terror has extended over generations. Rev. King maintains that non-violence can and should combat violence. James Farmer advocates peaceful demonstrations. However, the Mississippi Mau Mau will yield only to permanent occupation by the only force they fear and respect - the Federal Government.

When Chicago's Oak-Woods cemetery refused to cremate or bury a dead Negro woman, 1500 ministers, funeral directors and NAACP members organized to march around the cemetery and demanded passage of a city ordinance to abolish this discrimination. The Defender editorializes that legal action has been sidetracked by a series of continuances and that the State Attorney's office is stalling. The city council is flayed for not taking action to legalize the right of a man to burial and warned that the issue can very well rise as an election-day ghost to haunt politicians. When it was learned that the county office of the State's Attorney has jurisdiction only in the county, Alderman Leon Despres urged the State Attorney General to file an injunction under the civil rights act against non-sectarian cemeteries (Catholic and Jewish cemeteries do not discriminate) to produce equality. Meanwhile a dead little unknown Negro boy whose body nobody claimed was buried by the townspeople of a lily-white Illinois town in a lily-white cemetery.

SIT IN, STAND IN, WADE IN, KNEEL IN

Amsterdam News-Column by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. (May 25)

Because we feel that one of the most significant steps the Negro can take to liberalize the political structure of the South is the short walk to the polls, we are going all-out to achieve the ballot for some 5 million Negroes who are potential voters. Our struggle will continue in other areas as well until segregation and discrimination have been removed from the American life and our Democratic health can be realized. We will continue to sit in, to stand in, to ride in, to wade in, and to kneel in. It is no longer a choice between violence and non-violence. It is now either non-violence or non-existence.

BLIND NO MORE

New York Courier - Column by Rev. Malcolm Boyd (June 8)

The answer to the role of the white man in the Negro freedom struggle must be determined by each man. Some give money, while others get involved in it all the way. Negro proponents of the segregation theory in organizations feel that integration can come after achievement of Negro equality. Also, they distrust whites' attitude toward violence, although they welcomed it in other revolutions. In the last analysis it should be pointed out, clearly, that the "involved" white man sees his involvement as being part of the human struggle for freedom, rather than the strictly Negro struggle for freedom.

IN RE: New Attack on Highlander

Two years ago, the State of Tennessee succeeded in destroying Highlander Folk School near Monteagle, Tenn. It was one of the worst atrocities in the modern history of the South.

Today, as the school seeks to rebuild in the Knoxville area, the same forces are trying to destroy it again. Young people have been arrested, the beginnings of a new camp site have been burned, and there are threats to revoke Highlander's new charter. We cannot let such destruction occur again. We call on all of you to raise your voices against this injustice.

THE BACKGROUND

For 29 years, Highlander at Monteagle was an adult education center to which people from across the South went to share experiences and learn from each other. Its director, Myles Horton, often called it a "school for problems"; it attempted to provide constructive approaches to the various problems that beset the South: first the depression and deep poverty, then the need for union organization, and always the task of finding ways to end racial segregation throughout the South. Hundreds of persons went to the school each year; thousands more were indirectly influenced in the communities to which the participants returned.

From the beginning, the school was under attack by those who want things to remain as they are. In 1957, the Georgia Education Commission distributed over the nation a brochure charging Highlander with being a den of subversion; the "evidence" was citations from the files of the House Un-American Activities Committee regarding some organizations to which persons connected with Highlander belonged.

This laid the basis for the Tennessee Legislature, in early 1959, to set up a special committee to investigate Highlander. The investigation made a lot of headlines, quoted many HUAC reports, but produced no evidence of subversion. Therefore, the following summer state and county agents raided a Highlander workshop session and made arrests and charged that they had found alcoholic beverages. The charge turned out to be mostly false, but the school was haled into court on charges of selling beer without a license and operation of the school for the private profit of its director. On this basis, its (Highlander's) charter was revoked. The U.S. Supreme Court was asked to review the verdict but said it could find no Federal question involved.

So the state confiscated the $136,000 property, and sold it for a third of its value. Soon thereafter the main school building was burned to the ground.

But Horton and others conceived of a new Highlander, rising like a "phoenix from the ashes." They leased an old home and a church manse in Knoxville, Tenn., as an initial base. They began to make their long experience and know-how available to people in other parts of the South who wanted to set up local educational centers on the order of Highlander.

And this summer, they began construction of a new camp and conference site on land they had leased in the Smoky Mountains. The land lies near the Great Smoky Mountains National Park. Young people from both North and South were invited to participate.

RECENT EVENTS

The first workcamp, in June, went well at first. There were 27 participants, ranging in age from 17 to 27. The young people had widely divergent backgrounds--many were from Birmingham, Ala., others from Chicago, Cambridge, Mass., etc. They quickly found a common ground and worked together. They cleared land, raised tents, built an amphitheater.

Meantime, a new attack on Highlander had been planned. In the late spring, the Knoxville Journal, long known for its backward policies, ran a series of articles attacking the center in Knoxville. There were the same warmed-over charges of guilt-by-association from files of the Un-American Activities Committee. One target of the attack was a Presbyterian minister in charge of student work at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville. This young man had provided a place for student integration action groups to meet. He had often visited Highlander, and this fact provided the link for attack on both him and Highlander.

By mid-June, an atmosphere of hostility toward the new Highlander was building up in the Smoky Mountain area. The camp site is in Blount County, of which the county seat is Maryville. This community has made a few moves toward token desegregation, but it is a Ku Klux Klan stronghold. The Klan with an estimated membership of at least 750, holds open meetings on the courthouse lawn.

On the night of June 19, the Highlander work campers returned last from a CORE meeting in Oak Ridge, Tenn. They fixed food, sat in their tents talking. Down upon them swooped a sheriff and his deputies and arrested them all.

The sheriff said the raid occurred because he had received threats that "blood would flow" if the integrationist campers were not removed. But the camp is far from any neighbors, and almost a half-mile from a public road. The sheriff and his party came in without any warrants of any kind, refused to give the young people time to dress properly before walking them to waiting cars down a mountain trail. The directors of the camp, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gustafson, of Putney, Vt., had with them their two small children. The sheriff refused to allow Mrs. Gustafson time to make arrangements for their care, and they were taken to jail in Maryville with the others. All persons were denied the right to make a phone call.

The next day news broadcasts said the sheriff had found quantities of "communist" literature at the camp. This turned out to be educational material on integration. Highlander secured release of all the prisoners on bond. Formal charges were placed against 8 of them: Mr. and Mrs. Gustafson were charged with contributing to the delinquency of minors, and he with possession of whiskey (which later turned out to be water in a vodka bottle). The young people were charged with disorderly conduct and one with possession of whiskey. Charges of lewdness were later added against all of them, but dropped in the cases of all but one girl. The charge against her seems to be that a man was sitting on her cot, fully clothed, in a tent in which a number of other people were engaged in conversation. Four of the raiding officers admitted in court that they did not see her involved in any"improper activities."

All those charged with disorderly conduct were convicted. The Gustafsons have been bound over to the August Grand Jury, at which time officials say they will conduct a full investigation of Highlander and its new charter. Meantime, shortly after the raid the beginnings of the new camp site were burned down mysteriously. A few days later, Myles Horton and Ed Lynch, a white Maryville lawyer who is defending those arrested were beaten up, without provocation, in a Maryville restaurant. Horton had to have stitches over his eye.

WHAT YOU CAN DO

It is obvious powerful people in Tennessee have decided to get rid of the new Highlander. We who hope to build a new South need Highlander; we need the people produced and developed by a place like Highlander.

Attorneys are appealing the convictions to the higher courts. They have the support of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights in Birmingham, where many of the work-campers came from. They also have the support of SCEF and leaders of other civil-rights groups.

But legal action is not enough. There must be a public outcry against the very fact that the raid took place. Sheriffs and their deputies have no right to invade this camp on private property, search the premises and arrest people without cause, and ultimately stop the work of the camp. These are totalitarian tactics. We urge you to communicate with the following persons and urge them to intervene:

1. Governor Frank Clement, State Capitol Building, Nashville, Tennessee.

2. The Tennessee Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights; Chairman: H.O. Forgy, Jr., Steel Warehouse, Burton Street, Jackson, Tenn., Phone: 427-6784.

3. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, D.C. Ask him to intervene and protect the rights of these people on the ground that their basic rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the U.S. Constitution have been trampled on.

Somerville, Tennessee
July 16, 1963

Dear Friend,

Our friends have written us and asked us what has been happening in Fayette County this summer. Quite a bit has been going on.

With racial violence having been narrowly averted only hours before, we had our biggest mass meeting since the time of Tent City here in Fayette County. That was Thursday and 400 people came.

On the previous day almost one hundred people registered to vote and the line sometimes stretched out of the Court House basement. Many hot and exhausted sharecroppers, most of whom had travelled twenty miles to the county seat of Somerville, were turned away to return the next Wednesday to register. (Wednesdays are the only days to register in Fayette County.) Altogether, in the three weeks of the drive about two hundred people have registered.

This expanded registration drive has come on the heels of an announcement by several prominent Negroes of the county that they would file for county wide offices in the Democratic primary coming up soon. The Vice-President of the League, Rev. June Dowdy, is planning to file for County Tax Assessor. The President of the local branch of the NAACP, Allan Yancy, will file for a county office too. Indications are that several other men will file also. These candidates would be the first colored men running for office in this county since Reconstruction.

These announcements have given a new boost to the registration drive which had already brought the Negro registration totals to approximate equality with the white totals. It is now almost certain that when the padded white lists are purged the Negroes will have more voters in this county. The potential of 65 to 70 % of the voters can be reached this summer if the drive is sustained.

The previous week also saw the beginnings of the Sit-in movement in this area. A half dozen groups of teenagers attempted to use the white sections of the various restaurants, cafes, drug stores, and the single Somerville movie house. They were, as expected, turned away - in fact one group was threatened with a pistol by the store owner, Mr. Wetzler. An affidavit on this matter has been filed with the Justice Department in Washington. The town has been bracing itself for the impending sit-in movement which will be launched within a few weeks. At this time extensive workshops on non-violence are being conducted at a local church by students experienced in the movement. The Sheriff, we are told, has deputized local whites and the Negro community is in the process of forming a negotiating committee to handle the integration of the downtown facilities.

Also, on last Wednesday, a controversial court case ended with a judgement against John McFerren, the President of the League and leader of the Negro community. It is alleged by the Negro community that this suit is an attempt to smear and intimidate Mr. McFerren and thereby to eliminate one of Fayette County's most effective leaders. The prominent Negro organizations have gone on record as supporting Mr. McFerren in this suit. He will appeal the present judgement.

These incidents, plus the presence of a dozen voter registration workers from out of the county, have led to a wave of intimidation and armed threats against the Negro community. An attorney for the League was nearly run off the public highway last Wednesday; registration workers were harassed on the same highways last week; some have been arrested and fined; automobiles belonging to the same workers have been broken into and tampered with; it has been reported that about 4 out of 5 white men carry weapons in their cars; finally, on Wednesday night, the Justice Department and the FBI were called into the county as six carloads of white gangs, armed with ropes and weapons, camped across the street from the building that houses the registration workers and threatened armed action. Due to FBI presence the situation has cooled. No one here expects this to last more than a few days.

Regardless of these new intimidations we, of the Citizens Committee and the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League, expect to continue the fight for full equality. But we are going to need your help. We cannot wage an electoral battle without outside financial support. The local Democratic party committee, which has - in the past - excluded Negroes from participating in party primaries, requires that all candidates foot the bill for the primary. We can withstand the intimidation, but we cannot afford these costs. Second, we must retain an attorney to handle these electoral matters. We expect to have scores of mass meetings - these cost money. On top of all this, when the sit-ins begin we will need a great deal of extra money for lawyers, bonds, appeals, etc. And, since everyone here interprets the suit against John McFerren as a direct assault on the League and its treasury we hope to raise part of his costs as well.

So you see we can continue our fight, but we cannot afford these many expenses which have come up. None of the candidates has a bank account, nor could he borrow (or pay back) election expenses. Most sharecroppers have a cash income which runs only into the hundreds. We do not have a huge staff, nor salaried workers. This mailing is being paid for by private contribution. We list below some of the expenses we will have, and money sent for any particular item will be used only for that purpose.

(1) $3.00 for gasoline to bring a carload of sharecroppers to the registration office.
(2) $10.00 would pay for the expenses of a mass meeting.
(3) $100.00 is the approximate cost of filing in the Democratic primary for a county office.
(4) $25.00 is the approximate cost of filing for district office.
(5) $2,500 is the approximate cost of building a community swimming pool, which would supply water for our incomplete community center.
(6) $4.50 is the cost of one issue of the League Link, the local periodical of the League.
(7) $7.00 will pay for a small lunch for the tired and hungry sharecroppers who stand all day to get registered.
(8) $50.00 will pay for bringing in a doctor to service the Negro community for one day.
(9) $15.00 pays the lease on the League office for one month.

Money sent for political purposes should be sent to the Citizens Committee of Fayette County, Harpman Jameson President. Other contributions should be sent to the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League, (both are at Route 4, box 133 A, Somerville, Tenn.)

To my friends,

I have lost the first round in a paternity suit which has been brought against me in Fayette County and I should like to explain to all those who have supported me and our voter registration drive just what this recent action is all about.

I knew nothing about the case until the week of June 10 when a warrant was served on me declaring that I was being sued by Mrs. Emma Jean Frazier for support of her child, born on Nov. 12, 1962. A hearing was scheduled for the next Monday, June 17, 1963. At the hearing the trial was set for Wednesday, July 10, 1963; it was tried in Juvenile Court.

The lawyer for Mrs. Frazier is John S. Wilder, and the judge in this case was A. V. Luck. Both of these men were sued, in 1961, by the Justice Department under the 1957 Civil Rights Act, for intimidating the voter registration effort led by myself and others in that year. Due to the work of our League these men were under a restraining order issued by a Federal Judge for many months.

Some pertinent information follows:

(1) Mrs. Frazier alleged that during the time that she worked for me at my store I became her boy friend and that the child born the next November is my child. Three witnesses testified that she worked for me for three days during the latter part of December, 1961 and at no other time. She brought no testimony to show that she had worked at the store longer than that, although she testifies that she worked there until February.

(2) Several days before the trial Mrs. Frazier told my wife, before many witnesses, that I twisted her arm and forced her at the time when she alleges that the child was conceived. But at the trial she claimed that we engaged in an extended love affair over many months and that I gave her a lot of money, and that we planned many trips. Her contradictory testimony remained unresolved throughout the trial.

(3) Mrs. Frazier was unable to tell the Court where the disputed act occurred, although she has been a resident of the county for many years and knows the county well. She was unable to produce any witnesses to testify about the alleged act.

(4) Her witnesses were all her relatives, although mine weren't. They included: her cousin, her uncle, and two of her mother's cousins. Even her relatives were unable to testify that they had seen us together.

(5) Her husband, Willie Frank Frazier, testified in Court that, of her five children, two of them are not his, the last and the fourth; it was further established that the first child was illegitimate.

(6) It was alleged at the trial, not only that I was her lover, but that I was the only one who drove her to and from her work place during the period Jan. 1961 to Feb. 1962. We produced three witnesses who escorted her about the county during that time, and could have had eight more if necessary.

I testified at the trial that my only dealing with Mrs. Frazier were during the three days in late December 1961 when she worked at my store. I have produced undisputed testimony at the trial that she only worked for these three days. During that time I drove her home once. If, as she claims, she became pregnant at that time, then the child was carried in the womb for 11 months. Furthermore, although I paid out $96 for blood tests for ascertaining the parent of the child, the results were not introduced at the trial.

Although most of her allegations were disputed by my witnesses and her testimony evidenced much contradiction, the Judge A.V. Luck awarded her $25 per month from me, as well as hospital costs, blood test costs, court costs, and other costs. My lawyers are appealing this ruling to a higher court.

I know that I am not the father of this child and I would like to explain how I have gotten into this trouble.

The State of Tennessee has recently passed new "Newburgh, NY" legislation dealing with welfare payments to women who have illegitimate children. These payments are discontinued unless the mother first names the father and attempts court action to make the father pay the support costs. In the case of Mrs. Frazier, it seems clear to me that pressure has been brought on Mrs. Frazier to name me as the father, as part of a deal to continue welfare support for her large family. I have nothing against Mrs. Frazier, she is just a victim in this Civil Rights struggle. The fact that her attorney was John S. Wilder, the judge was A.V. Luck, and that the case was tried in Fayette County, Tennessee, guaranteed her success. No one of the Negro community expected a fair trial under these circumstances, and none were suprised at the result.

But there is more to the case than that. Several days before the trial Mrs. Frazier sent a go-between to me who told me before witnesses that she would settle for $500 which would enable her to "catch a plane" and "go to California". I told them to tell her that I was not the father and that she would not get one nickel from me. And then, right after the trial, in the lobby of the Court House, Sheriff Pattat told me, "Why don't you compromise, and stop the sit-ins." There were five witnesses present. I told him that he hadn't "seen anything yet!"

"Why don't you compromise, and stop the sit-ins" - that statement tells the whole story of Fayette County. If I have anything to do with it, the sit-ins will continue until we have arrived at Full Citizenship. I will not be intimidated, I will not compromise.

Not too many years ago we were prepared to meet gunfire when we began our registration drive and the activities of our League, but nowadays we must be prepared to meet harassment from the Law Enforcement officials, continual surveillance, armed gangs of white youths threatening our people, and now cooked up lawsuits - in fact everything that the segregationists can deal out. But, we shall overcome.

PROCLAMATION, by the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League. Somerville, Tennessee, July 19, 1963

In the summer of 1963, one hundred years after the Emancipation Proclamation, the Negro lives in much of this nation half slave and half free. It must be recognized by the white citizens of our community that Negroes are denied an equal opportunity for the good life and the chance to grow as this nation moves ahead. While the white citizens have for so long dominated our community- by controlling the farms, the schools, the highways, the taxes, the police, and the commerce- the Negroes have labored for $2 and $3 a day to make this all possible. While the white parent can provide nutritious food, a comfortable home, indoor plumbing, and a college education, none of this is possible for the great majority of the Negro parents.

But more than these comforts of life, the Negro citizen lives in fear: in fear of suddenly being fired from his job; in fear of being evicted; in fear of family sickness which would overwhelm the family finances; in fear for the saftey of his family from arbitrary arrest and the whims of the white hoodlums who roam the streets unrestrained.

The Negro parent must work in the fields for ten hours a day under the hot sun with the almost certain knowledge that his children face the same fate. Better jobs for them require good schools, and these we have never had. Our children must leave for school at 5 A.M. in the winter slush which makes our dirt roads impassable. When they arrive at school they are taught by teachers who, for the most part, are intimidated by the County Board of Education and who are so frightened for their jobs that they will not fight for what is right.

While the races are separated in the schools, separated in the restaurants, cafes, movies, separated in the courts, separated in the churches, and live in separate neighborhoods of this county, the Negro will suffer inequity. It has been recognized by most people of this nation, as well as the rest of the world, that men and women must be treated equally regardless of the color of their skin. We ask no special privileges, no special treatment or concessions. But we demand an equal status in Fayette County.

Our hope is to achieve equality by lawful non-violent methods. We agree with the Supreme Court of the United States that we have the right to use all the facilities in our towns on an equal basis; this would include every restaurant, drug store, movie theater, ball park, motel, and the court house facilities. We support those who exercise these rights by sitting-in these places. We shall use the ballot box to elect our candidates to county positions, and we beseech the present office holders to discontinue the unfair election practices that have made a mockery of democracy in our county. We intend to inform the Justice Department of all our activities, but it is again our hope that Federal Court orders, injunctions, and Justice Department suits are not necessary. We demand the immediate integration of our schools before the school year opens, and expect to achieve this progress by legal methods.

We should like to repeat that we are no longer going to act like slaves and we shall not plead with the white community for special favors for one part of our community— for example, two Negro deputies, one Negro hired at one store.

We, of the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League, are always available and will be glad to meet with anyone at any time to discuss these most pressing matters. Let us avoid the mistakes of Birmingham and Nashville in our county.

News Release for Highlander Center
1625 Riverside Drive, Knoxville, Tenn.
by Virgie Hortenstine
5541 Hanley Road, Cincinnati 39, Ohio
July 19, 1963

Threats and harassment against Highlander Research and Education Center, Knoxville, Tennessee are continuing, Myles Horton, director, said today. He reported that windows were broken out on July 16 and that there have been threats of burning the Center at 1625 Riverside Drive. The Center is a continuation of Highlander Folk School, formerly of Monteagle, Tennessee, where many Negro leaders of the integration movement have been trained. There have already been three serious instances since June 20 of violence against Highlander personnel and its integrated Smoky Mountain North-South Workcamp.

Most recent of these acts was the beating of Myles Horton on the night of July 3 as he and Mrs. Horton, together with Attorney and Mrs. Edward Lynch of Maryville, were in a Maryville restaurant. Blount County, of which Maryville is the county seat, is a center for the Ku Klux Klan in the upper south.

The restaurant owner, without provocation or warning, attacked Horton, inflicting upon him a laceration to one eye which required three stitches to suture, and other bruises. The host then administered a blow to the right eye of the Maryville lawyer. Mrs. Horton ran for a policeman, but the policeman, himself a Klan member, refused to come, forcefully expressing his own distaste for Myles Horton's integration activities.

The first of the incidents against Highlander on June 20 was a raid by the Blount County Sheriff and 10 armed deputies against an integrated group of workcampers who were building a camp for Highlander Center on land in the Smokies given by a friend after the State of Tennessee confiscated Highlander Folk School's property at Monteagle last year. At about 3 A.M., according to camp personnel, the group had just returned late from a Congress of Racial Equality meeting in Oak Ridge, some 50 miles away. Some were fixing a late snack, some washing dishes, some talking, some sleeping. The sheriff and his 10 men suddenly arrived, brandishing pistols, shotguns and tear gas guns.

Mr. & Mrs. Gustafson, the 25 workcampers, several aged from 10 to 13 years old, and even the Gustafson's daughters, aged 2 and 4, were ordered to line up outside the tent. All were marched down the mile-long sippery dirt road without flashlights, some even in night clothes. They were loaded into cars and taken down the mountain to the county jail in Maryville.

Although the sheriff maintained that he had merely brought the prisoners into protective coustody because of warning phone calls saying that there would be "Negro blood on the mountain," charges were brought against eight camper prisoners. The Blount County Courthouse, were one week before a meeting of the Ku Klux Klan, 750 strong in Blount County, had been held openly on the lawn, was filled with Klansmen at the time of the trial.

Mr. & Mrs. Gustafson were charged with contributing to the delinquency of minors, Robert Gustafson with possessing whiskey; eight campers, disorderly conduct; and finally, one camper, possessing whiskey. The "whiskey" Gustafson possessed was tested by an Oak Ridge scientist who declared it to be water. The workcampers and staff lost on all the original charges. "We were, in effect, stripped of all our rights," said Myles Horton, referring to the Klan-dominated crowd and the fact that few camp witnessess were allowed to testify and that the defense was allowed to give little evidence. Horton obtained the release of the campers after considerable negotiating and after posting $4500 appeal bond.

The Smoky Mountain North-South Workcamp had already undergone some construction by the summer workcampers. The cabin had been painted; tent platforms had been built and tents raised; an amphitheatre had been built for meetings and concerts. Three nights after the raid the camp was burned to the ground, at an estimated loss of $5000.

The original Highlander Folk School at Monteagle which for thirty years operated as "one of the most important social-educational projects in America", according to John Dewey, was instrumental in training many Negro leaders in the Nonviolent Movement, including Martin Luther King and Fred Shuttlesworth.

In Somerville, county seat of Fayette County, Tennessee, a town with a large lighted cross over its water tower, nine persons are in jail tonight after a prayer vigil at the courthouse on Saturday. Two observers stated that white hoodlums are being permitted to enter the jail to beat up the prisoners. An observer, Charles Heyney, said he saw Sheriff C. E. Pattat throw a lighted torch into a crowd of teenagers. He then saw Pattat throw something that looked like acid to white hoodlums who threw it into the crowd. One worker from the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee, Jerome Shider, was injured and has gone back to Atlanta for observation and treatment. Among those jailed are David Brown, Quaker schoolteacher from Doylestown, Pa. and Robert Barber, also a teacher, from Kalamazoo, Michigan. Both men had gone to the area to live to help in the struggle for equal rights for all people. Arthur Emery, Quaker farmer from Iowa, also living in the area and working for civil rights with Mrs. Emery and their four children, is in jail tonight on traffic charges.

Emery said that several cars tried to edge him off the road. Voter registration workers report having also been harassed in this manner recently. He managed to escape, another car went off the road, and he was arrested for leaving the scene of the accident. He was fined $125, which he expects to serve out in jail for about 60 days.

The prayer vigil at the courthouse marked the opening of sit-in demonstrations in Somerville, which continued in spite of the jailing. Around 100 have participated. On July 11, 700 Negroes assembled to hear John Lewis, Chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, say, "We want freedom and we want it now."

Several hundred more Negroes have registered to vote in Fayette County after a mass meeting when two Negroes declared their intention to run as candidates in the coming election. Rev. June Dowdy, Vice President of the Fayette County Civic and Welfare League, announced his intention to run for County Tax Assessor. Allen Yancey, President of the local NAACP. said he will run for a county office.

Open harassment of voter registration workers began the night of the trial of John McFerren, July 10, president of the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League, on a paternity charge. Although the Judge, A. V. Luck, convicted John McFerren in the Fayette County Court, the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League supports McFerren in declaring that he is innocent and that the lawsuit is merely an attempt to discredit one of Fayette County's most effective leaders. Both the judge, A. V. Luck, and the lawyer who defended the Negro woman who brought suit John S. Wilder, were sued, in 1961, by the U. S. Justice Department under the 1957 Civil Rights Act, for intimidating the voter registration efforts led by John McFerren and others.

DANVILLE VA. --- The Rev. L. W. Chase, President of the Danville Christian Progressive Association (D.C.P.A.) was arrested at about 4:00 A.M. on July 29 when police kicked in the storm door of his home, seized him, and took him to jail bare-footed and in only a bathrobe.

His arrest was part of the aftermath of heightened anti-segregation activity in Virginia on Sunday, July 28 when 80 persons were arrested in Danville. 24 Negroes were arrested the same day for trying to worship in a white church in Farmville, Va.

The Rev. Chase refused to put on any clothes and went to court on July 29 dressed as he was at the time of his arrest. "Danville police continue to show their utter disrespect of human dignity when they grab a man from his bed and take him naked to jail," said Avon Rollins, Executive Committee member of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC.)

In the peaceful demonstration in Danville on July 28, demonstrators marched in twos to Main Street where they were arrested and put in waiting police vehicles and a large van allegedly belonging to the city Public Works Dept. As the Chief of Police threatened to have newsmen who had gathered for the announced D-Day put in jail, the demonstrators were charged with violating an injunction and an ordinance passed earlier to curtail protests.

SNCC field secretary John Robert Zellner was arrested one hour after the demonstration on the same charge although witnesses stated that he followed the marchers at over 50 yards. Four other SNCC workers were arrested for participating in the demonstration, three of them white.

Newsmen were repeatedly blocked from viewing the demonstration and CBS and NBC news representatives were shoved by police. One cameraman reported that his knuckles were rapped while he was filming the scene.

In other developments, six Negroes, most of them students from Virginia Union University in Richmond, were admitted to the Danville Holiday Inn but refused service. Local SNCC worker Gladys Giles reported that 342 Negroes have been successfully registered to vote since July 10.

Arrests of 24 Negroes in Farmville resulted from their attempt to worship at the Farmville Baptist Church when the Board of Deacons swore out a warrant for interrupting and disturbing public worship. Some Negroes were successful in worshipping in other white churches in Farmville.

These Farmville arrests brought to a peak the protest activity in Prince Edward County which began after SNCC workers Ivanhoe Donaldson and Rolin Sherrod went there several days ago. This is the first "direct action" there since a 1951 school strike.

Local minister L. F. Griffin said that the July 28 arrests, "Were evidence that the local white ministers and their communicants have failed to realize the moral issues involved in our fight for full integration. The attempt was conducted for the purpose of worship first, and then to show the world that the Southern white church is the most segregated institution in the world."

Prince Edward County is the only place in the nation that closed its public schools four years ago rather than to desegregate.

In viewing renewed Virginia protest, SNCC Executive Committee member Avon Rollins said that, "Those who are violent are beginning to outnumber those of us with a nonviolent persuasion, and it is evident that unless the white power structure of Virginia and Danville begins to respond with justice to the fair demands made by its citizens, there will be blood flowing in the streets."

"We are tired of the pious pronouncements of the Kennedy Administration," Rollins continued, "and more and more people will begin to take things in their own hands."

The Metropolitan Council of the American Jewish Congress announced this week the formation of a special panel of volunteer attorneys who will work with four leading Negro groups in the New York area in connection with their current campaign for civil and economic rights.

Commenting on the basic purpose of the panel, Howard M. Squadron, chairman of the Metropolitan Council of the AJCongress stated, "Although we may not always agree with the tactics being employed in certain demonstrations, we feel that the essential justice that underlies the goals being sought by Negroes must be actively supported by all those who truly believe in the American idea of democracy."

The panel, headed by Marvin Karpatkin, a prominent New York attorney, will work directly with the NAACP, CORE, Urban League and Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee in two ways: first, in providing legal councel for persons brought before the courts for actions arising out of the demonstrations, and second, in helping to establish the broad legal principals on which such cases are to be argued before the courts.

The information of the panel is only one facet of a new program undertaken by the Metropolitan Council of the American Jewish Congress. AJCongress is also organizing a business advisory group designed to aid small Negro businessmen and a committee on public school education which will devote itself to developing and supporting better opportunities for Negro and other disadvantaged groups in public schools.

DANVILLE, VA. --- Four daring youths Margaret Pinchback 17, field worker for Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), Larry Wilson 18, a member of Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), Sallie Harper 17, and Sally Heitt blocked traffic for 10 minutes on August 6 protesting segregation in this Southside Virginia city.

Bearing plackets protesting injustices, police brutality and segregation of employment in Dan River Mills the young demonstrators appeared suddenly on one of the major out-looks of the city at 4:00 P.M. All four were arrested and Larry was dragged to the police car upon going limp.

This action marked a sudden turn to a more radical and extreme form of protest in complete defiance of the recent permanent injunction barring any protest including mass meeting issued by Judge Aiken on August 3.

Other Demonstrations developed at the post-office where two Negroes picketed for 30 minutes and at the courthouse from which 25 singing persons marched two abreast down Union Street. There were no arrests.

Pfc. Buford Holt, the paratrooper who demonstrated on July 14 is still being held without bond at the request of army authorities. The citizens of Danville are circulating a petition in protest of this action.

Avon Rollins executive committee man for SNCC was convicted for contempt of court in failing to submit to a court-ordered medical examination despite testimony of the court directed physician to the contrary.

"I don't care what Dr. McNeely (court physician) testified" cried presiding Judge Leon Bazile before sentencing Rollins to 10 days and $100.00 fine. Appeal bond was set at $500.00 after the court requested that Judge A.M. Aiken fix the amount. Judge Aiken was not sitting in the case.

"It is an obvious conspiracy against justice" said Thomas Holt, Danville SNCC field secretary.

Rollins, who was to testify before the state court, lost consciousness July 31 and was admitted to Winslow Hospital where he submitted to a court-ordered examination. Rollins refused examination by Dr. McNeely on August 2.

According to the physician's testimony, he was not acting under court's order Judge Bazile discounted the testimony in his ruling.

"The interpretation of the court is that this man (Rollins) must be subject to examination to determine whether he can appear in court for the rest of his natural life" said Defense Attorney Downing.

Dr. McNeely further testified that it would be advisable for Rollins to go to New York "for further diagnosis."

Demonstrations protesting the unemployment of Negroes were scheduled to begin in Brownsville, Tennessee on Saturday, August 10 after Eric Weinberger was seriously injured on Monday by Brownsville police. Half the group of Haywood County Negroes who tried to demonstrate on Monda y were injured as police used dogs, tear gas, acid, cattle probes, sticks and fists.

The center of the attack on Monday was against Eric Weinberger. He was burned over two thirds of his body surface with acid. As he was lying on the ground, not resisting the attack, a dog was turned on him. Mrs. Elaine Weinberger reported that the dog bit him in the face and that there were dog bites over his entire body. Police also used a cattle probe on him and beat him with sticks and fists.

Eric Weinberger, a white man from New York, came to Haywood County early in 1962 and helped 70 registered Negro women to start a leather tote bag industry. The women make the bags by hand in their homes. Weinberger was jailed in March, 1962 on a false charge by Brownsville police and wa s tortured in the jail with an electric cattle probe. He returned to the tote bag project after his jail term, during which time he had fasted. Since then he has continued living in the building where the tote bag industry ha s its headquarters. The industry allots him $1.00 a day for food. The women call themselves Haywood Handicrafters; their address is 307 W. Margin St., Brownsville, Tenn., c/o Odell Sanders. This year they have branched out into the handcraft of leather belts and billfolds.

A fter the injury on Monday Weinberger was charged with assa ult and battery and jailed. He wa s permitted to see a doctor but denied the medication which the doctor prescribed. He was at last released on $1500 bond but it was two days after the injury before he could get into a hospital. By then some of his injuries had become infected. He was taken to the Crump Hospital in Memphis.

The protest in Brownsville was planned because a biracial negotiating committee which had been formed more than three months ago had brought no change in civil rights. The group had tried to get a permit to demonstrate but had been told there was no such thing.

Eric Weinberger was married in June to Elaine Makowski. He spent a month fasting in jail in May and June in Alabama. He had been arrested with nine others after continuing the Freedom Walk of the murdered postman, William Moore.

The Angels Are White

Intergroup Org. Misc.

Who Pays the Bills for Civil Rights?

by Reese Cleghorn

"Our Boston millionaires give money when it is solicited (properly), and they all include in their wills some bequests to Harvard and to Massachusetts General Hospital. That is all."
– Review of Reviews, 1893.

Marcus Garvey is said to have collected $10 million within two years half a century ago by creating Dukedoms of the Nile and the Niger, operating a black nationalist industrial and military empire and disclosing that both God and the angels are black. In those times a new and smaller power called the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was gleaning in the fields of Manhattan for enough money to stay alive; most of its angels were white.

Since then, more and more angels have been on the side of reform. In June some of these banded together to finance a new Council for United Civil Rights Leadership, and endowed it with $800,000. Another $700,000 is expected by the end of the summer, and those sums can probably be duplicated in the future.

We apparently have become so accustomed to announcements of million-dollar funds that this one did not seem very newsworthy. But $1.5 million is more than the NAACP budgeted nationally for 1963, and four times as much as Martin Luther King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference will spend.

The leading angel behind these silver linings is Stephen Currier, who was briefly mentioned in one news story as "a young and hitherto little-publicized man of wealth." That was only a whisper of the full truth; Stephen Currier has been as dedicated to anonymity as some men are to mammon. He now has emerged only to the extent of serving as co-chairman (with the Urban League's Whitney Young) of the new Council.

Even the mention of Currier's name was a little startling to those who had known of his civil rights interests. His modesty is suggested by the fact that his office tells reporters with blunt finality: "Mr. Currier does not speak with newspaper people." When he does speak it is usually softly, though he can be tart and he has a highly developed critical faculty. He is a young man out of Harvard, in his early 30's, of medium height and pleasant disposition. He wears spectacles and careful clothing. His business identification is Currier and Co., an ownership firm, and he is president of the Taconic Foundation, which has quietly engaged in various philanthropies but most recently in a widely-noted study of unemployment among young workers. The foundation has not participated primarily in civil rights work, though it has helped finance the Southern Regional Council's Voter Education Project.

Wealthy in his own right, Currier is married to an heiress of the Mellon fortune. In the world of philanthropy, that is all that need be said. Having concluded that competition for funds was at the root of the discord apparent in recent months among rights groups, he began to produce the solution: money. For three months now, rounding up cash has been his calling. "He is at it at 5 or 6 in the morning, and sometimes when I poop out around 10 that night he is still going," says his designated spokesman. (He, too, insists upon being anonymous.) Undoubtedly a substantial sum of his own money is involved, but the first $800,000 was raised among 96 corporation and foundation leaders who ate breakfast at Currier's expense on June 19 at the Carlyle Hotel in New York.

Since then Currier has moved resolutely about the city calling upon people of wealth. Besides these excursions, his path these days is principally that between his mid-Manhattan apartment, where he does some of his work, and his foundation's office on the 35th floor of the Tishman Building. Lately there has been little time to spend on his estates in Vermont and Virginia, and little to devote to his art interests. "He is dedicated," his anonymous spokesman says. "He is spending all his time at this now. And this is the first time he has ever asked anyone for money. Usually, it has been the other way around."

Perhaps because of his youth and a gentler bearing often associated with men who have inherited money instead of seizing it, one long-time acquaintance has said of him: "He is not exactly the type who would bowl over the board of Inland Steel." But he has been obviously effective, and the leaders of the civil rights organizations regard him as no dilettante. Two of these recently chose the same words: "Currier really understands what is going on."

It seems significant that most of the donors he has aroused are, though wealthy men, not members of the old wealthy families whose names would be widely recognized. Some have never given to such a cause before. Why this time? "Many people he talks to are just ashamed of some of the things happening in the South, and in the North," says the Fund's spokesman. "We go to people who have money, say this is what the civil rights groups are doing, and they need money." Then he adds what may be the best explanation of all: "I really think the photographs of Bull Connor and the police dogs did it."

Whatever the immediate inspiration, those interested in civil rights often have been moved less by the Emancipation Proclamation than by the Revenue Act of 1935. This seldom-memorized and scarcely-grandiloquent document began a change in American society that one day may rank it with Disraeli's Reform Act: it firmly established the enduring principle that private charities are of such social value that donations to them may be deducted from taxable income. The effect was so salubrious that corporations multiplied their charitable gifts by nine times between 1939 and 1945, and individuals five times. Besides giving life to the great foundations, the effect was to persuade such "non-deductible" organizations as the NAACP to assign their "deductible" functions, in this case legal defense and education, to separate organizations which might secure those blessings to which the Internal Revenue Service might entitle them.

One of the most impressive results of Currier's footwork is that of the first $800,000, donors of $300,000 agreed to give it to "action" groups which the Internal Revenue Service has not made deductible. The NAACP will get $125,000; the Congress of Racial Equality, $100,000; King's SCLC, $50,000; the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC – an independent offshoot of King's group), $15,000 with a promise of more later. Among the "deductibles," the Urban League will get $125,000; the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, $100,000; the National Council of Negro Women, $50,000. That left $235,000 unassigned, with more coming in every day.

It was a case of "to each according to his need," the Fund's spokesman said. There apparently was a determination not to leave out any of the seven chosen organizations if each would make any effo t at all to meet the basic requirements for financial statements and explanation of program. The fact that Dr. King received only $50,000 – and that his recently-established Gandhi Society is not included at all – may or may not be indicative. The Gandhi Society is SCLC's version of the NAACP's Legal Defense Fund, and some regard it as an unnecessary competitor for funds. As to why SCLC did not receive a bigger share, King is said to have told the other participants that his own fund-raising efforts this year have gone especially well (perhaps thanks, again, to Bull Connor's dogs) and other organizations might be in greater need.

The Council for United Civil Rights Leadership thus seems to be under way with a certain generosity of spirit and a minimum of discord. For non-deductible gifts, the council has opened an office at 10 East 44th Street, New York. For deductible gifts, it has established an allied Committee for Welfare, Education and Legal Defense (WELD, in the spirit of the times) at 10 Columbus Circle. Possibly attesting further to the orthodoxy of this revolution, WELD is being incorporated in Delaware. If there be any Marxists in the streets, that should send them back to their looms.

The suspicion will grow that this new council of unity is actually the seed of a great new community chest of the future. Its sponsors repeatedly emphasize its role as a fund raiser; yet it is obvious that all the participants were professionals at this already. It is known that at the Carlyle there was some discussion of working toward a United Fund approach for civil rights organizations.

Wilkins, King and others have talked of this before, contemplating the effectiveness of the United Jewish Appeal. Surely it has crossed their minds that such a mass organization as the NAACP, with 400,000 members in 1,500 units, and such an orator as King, with moral imperatives to support the efficacy of equality, would be a great combination with the collection plates. All that the sponsors of the unity council will say about this now, however, is that such talk is premature.

Each of the participants in the council now has a different base of support. In the NAACP's budget of $1.2 million (expected now to rise by at least $100,000 before the year is over), the members themselves bear the burden in systematic fashion, through dues, life membership fees, subscriptions and the like. This is the only one of the "action" groups so supported.

Dr. King's SCLC, with a current budget of $375,000 to $400,000, is only fractionally supported by its affiliate organizations. Its true base of support is King himself, whose personal appeal brings in most of the money through the mail and at benefits. (Professional fund raisers have said they know of no one who has better results in mail appeals.) CORE also relies heavily upon benefits, for a budget of $789,000. While the NAACP budget has remained stable in recent times, King's has burgeoned from $60,000 in 1960, and CORE's also has had great growth, both reflecting the restlessness of the times.

For rapid expansion, however, no one can better the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee. Founded under King's auspices during the 1960 college sit-ins, the Atlanta-headquartered committee went its own way and now has far more full-time staff workers in the South than any other organization. A late count shows 193 workers. Except for about 35 summer helpers from various colleges, they are full-time regulars. SNCC spreads amoeba-like; when one of its numerous field secretaries finds a likely prospect, he forthwith employs him by sharing his own pay until the main office can provide approval and finish the paper work. The "Snicks'" austerity is legend. Most of the paid field workers receive $10 to $20 a week, and some turn in expense accounts with notations such as "15 cents for bread." For these dwellers in the cotton fields, and for other purposes, SNCC has a current budget of $267,000. It is expected to receive much more of the unity council's fund: its initial $15,000 allocation was based upon a 1962 budget of only $72,000.

More Workers, Less Violence

While SNCC's parsimonius young students may be multiplied by the new fund, the NAACP expects to increase the number of older professionals less spectacularly. Its new staff members, rather than working out of farmers' unpainted houses as SNCC workers do, probably will operate from the main office in Freedom House on West 40th Street. "This all developed too fast for us to be certain how it will be worked out," said Dr. John A. Morsell, assistant to Wilkins. But he expects an increase in "task force" operations, such as sending out professionals quickly to assist local units when something comes up. The NAACP and other organizations have been flooded by requests for help, sometimes from groups that know they want to protest but have not even decided how or against what.

In encouraging funds for the "action" organizations, especially, Currier is said to have had his eye upon the demonstrations taking place, often without firm direction. Much of this money will be used to add to the professional staffs of the participants. It is not truly a case of infiltrating the revolution with money, the sponsors insist; it is just that money, as President Kennedy might say, is "a part of the great American tradition." If you are going to have a revolution, it might as well be solvent, and imbued with American know-how.

Soon after the new fund was announced, someone said for the press that this money would provide more professional leadership to prevent violence. Roy Wilkins snapped a little at this idea, as if to say this was no attempt to slow anything down. (The NAACP spares no effort these days to prove that it never lagged behind Martin Luther King in its belief in demonstrations. One NAACP field secretary was heard telling a young sign-bearing staff worker during a recent march: "If you see a photographer, you just make sure that sign is up front.")

Yet it seems obvious that prevention of mayhem is one idea involved here. Another is that additional professional staff will enable those leading these protests to define and achieve their goals more intelligently.

The need for money in another realm, legal defense, is perhaps of even greater urgency. The Legal Defense Fund now has nine lawyers and suddenly there are 6,000 civil rights cases in Southern courts. The unity fund is expected to finance the addition of six more lawyers very soon. Wilkins was complaining not long ago that other organizations rush people out to get arrested and the NAACP has to get them out of jail; that has been the pattern. For each lawyer, some $25,000 is required for salary, secretary and logistical support.

So far no one has complained about receiving the new money. Though such gifts often were denounced in the 1930's as bones thrown down from the Olympian heights of capitalist treachery, no one this time seems to fear the boodle. Heywood Broun said of Andrew Mellon's offer to give the federal government his Old Masters, as well as a museum in which to house them: "It is a thumping gift; but it is not enough to justify the existence of swollen fortunes." The civil rights organizations seem ready to accept even the strings attached to these latest spoils, which consist almost entirely of a stuffy demand for programming and orthodox audits. The capitalists are not trying to inject Adam Smith into the revolt, just Price Waterhouse.

There is another aspect. One close to the bullion observed: "Obviously this makes for more rapport between whites and Negroes. It is an answer to the increasing go-it-alone feeling on the part of the Negroes down in the ranks. It will have a tendency to diminish the prospect of racial polarization."

Then he had another thought that suggests genuinely enthusiastic rapport. "I have an idea," he said, "that there is a lot more money where this came from."

AUG 18 1963

FOR RELEASE SUNDAY A.M., AUGUST 18, 1963

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Aug. 17.---A far-reaching report, outlining regional goals to aid the South in its work for the improvement of care and treatment of the mentally ill and mentally retarded, will be presented to the Southern Governors' Conference here Monday (August 19) by the Southern Regional Education Board (SREB).

Governor Terry Sanford of North Carolina, chairman of the SREB, will deliver the goals report, a document prepared and sponsored by the SREB's Commission on Mental Illness.

The Commission, headed by Dr. Hiram W. Davis, commissioner of the Virginia Department of Mental Hygiene and Hospitals, will offer the report as a guide in the Commission's regional campaign against mental disorders. It will propose a three-fold, coordinated effort involving treatment services, professional training, and research.

Presentation of the report--first of its kind for any region in the nation--culminates a year's work by the Commission in formulating the goals for mental health in the South.

Dr. Davis and Dr. William P. Hurder, associate director for mental health of the SREB, both of whom will join Governor Sanford in presenting the report to the Governors' Conference, said the report is designed for the use of key elected officials and mental health leaders in the 16 states served by the Southern Regional Education Board.

FROM: RUDOLPH PATE

FOR RELEASE AT 10 A.M., MONDAY, AUGUST 19, 1963

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Aug. 19.---Three broad goals and 12 specific tasks "to help the South in making plans for the mentally ill and mentally retarded" were presented to the Southern Governors' Conference here today (Monday, August 19) by Governor Terry Sanford, chairman of the Southern Regional Education Board.

Calling it a "platform for progress," Sanford urged the governors to give their closest attention to Commitment to Health, a 54-page goals report by the Commission on Mental Illness of the Southern Regional Education Board.

Written partly as a guide for the 10-year-old Commission's regional campaign against mental disorders, the document is addressed mainly to key elected officials and mental health leaders in the 16 member states of the Southern Regional Education Board.

Dr. William P. Hurder, staff director of SREB's mental health program, indicated that the impact of the report was not limited to the Southern region. Describing the contents of the report to the governors, he called it "the most comprehensive of its kind because it deals with mental illness and mental retardation," and it offers "a unified approach on three fronts: treatment services, professional training, and research."

Dr. Hiram W. Davis, chairman of the 21-member commission which prepared the report, pointed out that it would be useful to the newly-appointed committees in each state which have been directed to make state-wide plans for the improvement of care and treatment of the mentally ill. Federal funds are available to help states carry out these plans.

√ SREB was established in 1949 under interstate compact, now ratified by the legislatures of Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia.

√ SREB aids in the social and economic advancement of the South by assisting states to improve the quality of higher education . . . provide the widest opportunity possible in higher education . . . build educational programs which meet the social and economic needs of the region.

√ SREB is devoted to helping Southern colleges build high quality research and educational programs . . . by providing regional support and utilization of advanced programs . . . and avoiding unnecessary duplication of facilities among the compact states.

Three Goals

Suggesting that "it is in our treatment of the mentally ill and the mentally retarded that we have come closest to shame," the report sets forth three fundamental goals for the future:

1) Preventing mental disorders before they start, and preventing the needless crippling effects which result when "help is too little and too late."

2) Providing the best care for the mentally disordered that we know how to give, with special emphasis on early, uninterrupted treatment and care close to the patient's home.

3) Helping people strenghthen the "emotional muscle" which is needed to overcome daily problems and occasional major crises.

Tasks for Professional Leaders

The bulk of the report is devoted to the tasks necessary to reach these three goals, and is aimed at mental health leadership and elected leadership in the states.

Tasks for mental health leaders include recommendations for improving services, training and research, with the caution that "neither services, professional training, nor research can flourish in isolation. A concerted effort on all three fronts is our best hope."

Providing all essential services for diagnosis, treatment (or training for the retarded), and rehabilitation is one of the tasks stated. Among the "effective weapons" listed is emergency psychiatric care available immediately 24 hours a day. "A man with a heart attack is not required to place his name on a waiting list for treatment, nor is he expected to get help hundreds of miles from home," the report says, adding that persons with acute mental breakdowns also need prompt attention.

(more)

Mental health leaders are also urged to break away from the traditional pattern of concentrating all personnel and services in one or two large institutions, usually located in a remote part of the state. The report recommends setting up a state-wide network of local mental health services within easy reach of all citizens, and urges more efficient distribution and use of scarce mental health specialists.

Public education to change attitudes "tainted with fear and superstition" is another task assigned to mental health leaders. A more enlightened view of mental disorders would cut down on the number of people who postpone getting treatment because of fear or embarrassment--delays which "border on the tragic," according to the report.

Better Training

Mental health leaders are also urged to establish the post of training director in all state departments of mental health, and to earmark funds in the budget specifically for training.

The report calls for a definite state policy allowing time off for all levels of mental health employees for training purposes--to learn new skills and techniques, or keep up with new knowledge and ideas.

Suggestions for training students as well as those already in mental health work include a recommendation for more "general specialists" familiar with all kinds and degrees of mental disorder and equipped to serve large numbers of people in local mental health centers. "We cannot afford the luxury of narrow specialists in tax-supported programs," Dr. Hurder told the governors.

More Research

To improve and expand research, the report recommends an explicit state policy of allotting time, money, personnel and equipment for research, along with the appointment of a state research director to do "an active job of planning, coordinating, stimulating, supporting, and advising on research." Such a policy should be backed up by earmarked funds in the mental health budget, the report adds.

In his explanation to the governors, Dr. Hurder cited three kinds of research called for in the report. Basic research is needed, he said, because "we still need to know a lot more about the causes of mental disorders." Like industry, mental health systems also need "market research"--information about patients and the population in general--as well as "quality control" research to test the effectiveness of treatments, Dr. Hurder said.

Tasks for State Leaders

The final section of the report--tasks for elected officials--calls on governors and legislators to create "a proper environment for the completion of the tasks already outlined." State officials are urged to concentrate on coordinating mental health efforts, financing them, modernizing laws affecting patients with mental disorders, and cooperating fully with neighbor states.

"The strength of a campaign against mental disorder--and one of its potential weaknesses--comes from the fact that it is the joint effort of both state and private functions, both professional and lay people," the report points out. It suggests that only elected state officials represent all the people of a state, and can tie together the work of the many individuals and groups involved with mental disorders.

State officials are charged with seeing to it that all the necessary services are available and properly coordinated. Local authorities must see to it that these services reach the people who need them, the report points out. Many people are unaware that help is available at all or, "worse still, that they need help."

"Substantial increases in funds" will be needed for fighting mental disorders, the report points out. States are urged to look to other sources in addition to state taxes to finance their health programs. These sources include health insurance plans, welfare funds, community chests, local and federal governments. More patients would be able to pay for their treatment if more private psychiatrists and general hospitals were available to treat them, according to the report.

Finally, elected officials are urged to share ideas and experiences with other states in the region to avoid unnecessary duplication of efforts as well as possible duplication of mistakes. The SREB's mental health training and research program stands ready to help states "pool their risk capital, specialized personnel, and clinical resources for ventures which exceed the resources of any one state," the report states.

The authors of the report conclude with a plea for a commitment toward building "confidence, self-sufficiency and inner feelings of worth and strength" in those afflicted with mental disorders. Such a commitment, they suggest, would result in "buildings, laws, services, and procedures planned on a human scale."

HUMAN RELATIONS REVIEW

518 CITY COUNTY BLDG

VOLUME 6, NUMBER 4 AUGUST, 1963

City Tightens Construction Contracts

The City of Pittsburgh in August inserted a rider into its construction contracts clarifying and tightening the City's fair employment requirements, with the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations designated as the compliance agency.

Under the rider, specific procedures are set up to insure compliance with the legal provisions that no contractors, subcontractors, or unions shall discriminate in employment on construction for the City of Pittsburgh because of race, color, religion, ancestry, or national origin.

CHR has been given authority to inspect relevant records of contractors, sub-contractors, and unions, and make necessary investigations, when discrimination is alleged. The findings will be then reported to a Contract Committee of three members, consisting of the Director of the City Department for which the work has been contracted, and two citizen members of the Commission on Human Relations.

Failure to comply with the City's non-discrimination laws can lead to contract termination with loss of all money due that contractor, under provisions of the Pennsylvania Public Contracts Act. While the new rider carries penalty clauses, it is not basically a punitive measure. Rather, it is an effort to develop creative and positive day-to-day implementation of fair employment legislation.

The new rider, included as part of every City construction contract since July 1, makes the following provisions: (1) Non-discrimination by contractors in hiring and personnel practices, including selection of employees for training, apprenticeship, promotion, etc. (2) All sub-contracts let by contractors must include the same provisions. (3) Formal and informal agreements between labor organizations, contractors and sub-contractors, if in violation of the Pennsylvania Public Contracts Act, the Pittsburgh Fair Employment Ordinance, or the new Rider. (4) Posting of notice by contractors and sub-contractors, in readily accessible places during construction period, of non-discriminatory employment policy. (5) Confidential access by CHR to books and records of contractors and sub-contractors, in connection with administration of the State and City Fair Employment Practices Laws. (6) Machinery for filing of complaint alleging discrimination, including provisions for immediate investigation and subsequent action. (7) Where finding is made of a violation constituting a "substantial breach of contract," provision that the

A continuing examination by the Pennsylvania Human Relations Commision of their racial policies was avoided by seven AFL-CIO crafts unions in Pittsburgh when, on July 10, the second day of public hearings scheduled to run for three days, they abruptly agreed to take immediate steps to admit Negro members and apprentices.

The State's integration order is substantially identical to a voluntary agreement reached between six of the union members of the AFL-CIO Building Trades Council and the Pittsburgh Commission on Human Relations on July 8. These six unions are: Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers, Local 751; Iron Workers, Local 3; Elevator Constructors, Local 6; Plumbers and Pipefitters, Locals 27 and 449; Asbestos Workers, Local 2. In addition to the above unions who signed an agreement with the City, the agreement signed with the State included the Electrical Workers, Local 5. The latter union concluded their agreement with the City on July 23.

The State agreement additionally applies to State contracts and to all territory covered by unions, which means beyond the City limits of Pittsburgh to much of Western Pennsylvania, in some instances.

St. Paul's Cathedral in Oakland was the scene of the first of a series of demonstrations urging stronger civil rights legislation, conducted by representatives of the Catholic Interracial Council during Sunday masses on September 22.

Placard-carrying demonstrators marched before the Cathedral armed with thousands of handbills which they distributed to parishioners and passers-by, with the approval of Bishop John J. Wright and Msgr. Andrew J. Pauley, rector of St. Paul's and a CHR Commissioner.

The handbills urged recipients to petition the President and House Majority and Minority Leaders Carl Albert and Charles A. Halleck, respectively, "expressing support of the administration's omnibus civil rights bill H. R. 7152, including an amendment establishing an enforceable Fair Employment Practices Act."

CIC Board Member Eugene Webb, of St. Richard's parish, Webster Avenue, is shown explaining the use of the CIC handbill to Virginia Hughes, of St. Edward's Parish, Blaw-Knox.

CHR GAINS SUBPOENA POWER

During the last session of the Pennsylvania Legislature, a law was passed giving subpoena power to any official of the City of Pittsburgh empowered to conduct public hearings. This action culminates years of effort on the part of the Commission on Human Relations to obtain the power of subpoena.

It was the belief of those concerned with the effective enforcement and administration of our local laws against discrimination that some power was needed to compel persons to attend and testify at public hearings to which they were a party. Since the formation of the Commission on Human Relations in 1955, three public hearings have been conducted and, in each case, the respondents have failed even to appear. It is obvious that a much more complete adjudication of a case occurs when respondents appear and present their defense to a charge of discrimination.

The bill (No. 1808) was originally introduced into the House of Representatives on March 18, 1963, by Messrs. Kramer, Kamyk, Clarke, and Fenrich, and referred next day to the Committee concerned with Class 1, 2, and 2A Cities and Counties. Under the new law, any person subpoenaed as a witness to attend a public hearing held by the Commission must attend. The law also gives the Commission power to issue subpoenas DUCES TECUM, which can compel the production of books, records, documents, etc., at public hearings.

Any person who refuses to obey a subpoena, or who refuses to be sworn or affirmed, or refuses to testify once he has appeared, may be cited for contempt, and for this purpose application may be made to the Court of Common Pleas of Allegheny County.

Seeking to learn whether Pittsburgh's manners have improved during the past thirty years, Editor Marion A. Keller interviews two Shrine leaders at their Hotel Penn-Sheraton Convention Headquarters in August. Shown agreeing that Pittsburgh's hospitality to outsiders was "most satisfactory" are, from left, James E. Denkins of Baltimore, Imperial Director of Public Relations, and Waynard H. Jones of Detroit, Convention Director, Ancient Egyptian Arabic Order, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

CITY RATES PRAISE

"Times have changed since 1933," recalled Mr. Waynard H. Jones in an interview with Editor Marion A. Keller on August 22 at the Penn-Sheraton Hotel during a Shrine Convention. Mr. Jones, Convention Director of the Ancient Egyption Arabic Order, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine (AEAONMS), remembered that the last convention held in Pittsburgh by the Shriners, thirty years ago, took place in the Hill District, with local residents offering their homes to the delegates, there being limited hotel accommodations then for the guests.

Since 1949, the Shriners have had an increasingly high rate of attendance at their conventions, held annually in different cities. In recent years, the Shrine Convention has been received well in all convention cities. Asked how Pittsburgh treated them by comparison with other cities, Mr. Jones stated that the reception in Pittsburgh was the "same or better; there is no known instance wherein anyone was refused service." No complaints regarding hotel accommodations or hotels were received by the Convention Director from any of the guests. There were approximately 8,000 Shrine members attending the 6-day convention in Pittsburgh, with representation from the total Shrine membership of 15,247, and Women's Auxiliary known as Daughters of Isis, whose membership is 6,400.

All in all, the Shrine Convention in Pittsburgh was considered by its own leadership to have been a "quite satisfactory" experience.

Other officers chosen to guide the activities of this citizen action group during the coming year include: Mr. Lee A. Harris, Sr., Vice-President; Mrs. Margaret Shaw, Recording Secretary; Mr. Budd Spangler, Corresponding Secretary; and Rev. Bradley Caddell, Treasurer.

The KABB Council is a broadly representative citizen organization brought into being through the joint efforts of CHR staff and interested area residents. The council brings together many social forces from the South Hills neighborhoods of Knoxville, Allentown, Beltzhoover and Bon Air, on a non-political, non-sectarian and interracial basis. CHR presently provides direct staff service to the council and its constituent committees.

The Commission decided to organize this action group only after a good deal of deliberation and study. Mr. Norman Taylor, a graduate student from the School of Social Work, University of Pittsburgh, carried out an in-depth exploration of intergroup relations in Beltzhoover from February until May of 1961, to determine whether or not there was a need for Commission activity in Beltzhoover and the surrounding South Hills neighborhoods.

Jobs Sought Under ARA

Recently organized by a group of Pittsburgh men and a woman to encourage new business and business expansion, the Business and Job Corporation hopes to create additional jobs in two areas having a high level of unemployment. Under provisions of the Area Redevelopment Act, this community non-profit corporation has as a goal the creation of increased employment opportunities in the Hill District and the Homewood-Brushton areas.

Having received its charter in July, the Business and Job Corporation already is sponsoring one project, which is expected to create eighty-two jobs. Two additional projects, involving manufacturing processes, have been suggested. Future plans call for consideration of ideas which will promote new business in the Pittsburgh area.

The Area Redevelopment Act (ARA) was enacted by Congress in 1961, and was designed to create a working partnership between private enterprise, the state, and the federal government. The purpose of the Act was to encourage new or expanding business to create new jobs, in areas which suffered economically due to high rates of unemployment.

For business firms, establishing or expanding in certified redevelopment areas, the Act makes possible low-interest, long-term loans. ARA loans from local commercial sources, and investment capital, provide the financial stucture necessary. In addition to loans being made available, the community must participate, through its willingness to invest in new or expanding business by supplying 10% of the needed capital in the form of loans. Repayment of the community loans occurs after all other fixed loans are satisfied. Because the Act states that the community must be involved, it is necessary to establish a legal entity.

The sixteen Incorporators of the Business and Job Development Corporation are: President, Russell Shelton; Vice President, Rev. Walter J. Hardaway; Secretary, Lenore E. Rainey; Treasurer, Leonard N. Browne; Harry Bray, James M. Burgette, Harry Fitzgerald, William Goode, Arthur Halloway, John V. Hicks, Luther J. Johnson, James Jordon, Silas Knox, Robert Lavelle, Luther Sewell, Henry Smith, Jr.

COMMUNITY TENSION — A CASE HISTORY

One Friday evening, a CHR field representative received a phone call at his home. The caller, a Negro mother, stated that her young son and a white boy who resided several doors away had had a fight, and as a result white teenagers were driving up and down the block threatening her family. An eruption of violence appeared imminent.

Arriving on the scene in short order, CHR investigator questioned the Negro family. Watching the scene, the white family sat on their doorstep five houses away. Tension and hostility, on both sides, were at a peak. Diplomacy of a high order was called for.

The story, later confirmed by the white family, was that the white boy accused the Negro boy of stealing his shoes at the high school they both attended. In the heat of the ensuing argument, the Negro boy struck the white boy in the face. His older brother, upon learning of this, went to the home of the Negro family, waving a screwdriver threateningly in the air, and cursing the Negro father to goad him into a fight. When the Negro father refused to fight, the brother left.

Soon after, two carloads of white boys drove up and down the street, shouting curses at the Negro family and warning them, "You'd better not fall asleep tonight." They carried baseball bats in their hands; it was suspected other weapons were hidden in the autos. To this, the Negro father's terse reaction was, "I have some guns upstairs—if they start trouble, I'll drop them in their tracks."

CHR investigator then talked with the white family, asking what they thought the solution to the problem might be. Agreeing as to the basic facts of the case, the young man with the screwdriver said, "Well, if they leave us alone, we'll leave them alone." They were reminded of their obligations as citizens to keep order in the neighborhood, and prevent racial outbreaks. The family agreed to accept this.

Returning to the home of the Negro family, CHR investigator told them of the white family's willingness to cease aggression, and suggested further contact between the two families be eliminated. The Negro family agreed to abide by the truce. Violence was averted, and the Negro family moved from the neighborhood, as they had planned for some time, seven days later. During this period, close follow-up was done by Commission staff, to make sure nothing could go wrong. Case was closed after the Negro family moved from the neighborhood and it was determined that no further community friction resulted from the original incident.

Getting into practice for a quick trip to the next 4-alarm fire, Battalion Chief Jack H. Harrison, of Sheraden, is ready to go with his driver, Chief's Aide James Flavin. Elevated in August to position of District #1 Battalion Chief, Mr. Harrison is the first Negro to be promoted to this position. He has 21 years service with the Fire Department, working as a "hoseman" until 1956, when he became Captain of #5 Engine Company in District #1. Chief Harrison's District begins at the Point; its boundaries include the Strip to 33rd Street, the Soho area, and the Bluff.

KABB Council Meeting . . .

In all, a full year of research, planning and discussion meetings preceded the Council's organizational meeting held during February, 1962. Representative committees of hilltop residents worked with Commission on Human Relations staff members in contacting and meeting with the various citizen organizations, agencies and institutions in the Allentown, Knoxville, Mt. Oliver, Beltzhoover and Bon Air area.

Council members feel that the KABB Community Council is serving a number of significant functions which benefit the hilltop neighborhoods it represents. It is providing a channel of communication through which individual residents and the various groups in the hilltop area may have an opportunity to make their wishes on neighborhood issues known to other groups and individuals in the area. The Council is also providing a means for the common discussion of community problems and for unified efforts directed toward the solving of these problems. The Council is affording an opportunity for the residents of the hilltop communities it represents to participate in community planning through contact with city-wide planning bodies. The Council also acts as a vehicle for promoting understanding by stimulating the community to look at and seek solutions to intergroup relations problems in the area as these arise.

Currently, the Council represents thirty-three South Hills agencies, institutions, civic and social groups. There are approximately 115 individual and group members on the mailing list. An average of 35 to 50 members have attended general membership meetings. Standing committee members have maintained a high level of attendance at committee meetings.

This past Spring, two project committees carried out programs agreed on by the general membership: (1) a traffic planning committee was successful in securing additional traffic control devices and is hoping to secure some changes in traffic patterns in the neighborhoods the Council represents; (2) a clean-up, paint-up committee is presently carrying out a community improvement program in cooperation with local Boy and Girl Scout groups.

The committee responsible for planning and carrying out the Clean-Up, Paint-Up program included the following KABB Council members and Boy and Girl Scout leaders: Mrs. Thomas Truax, Mrs. Iona Kraus, Mrs. Ann Linz, Mrs. Lucille Stockhausen, Lawrence Johnson, Minor Thomas, Milford Davis, Joseph Linz, Sam Campagna, Elwyn Weber, Charles Dobbs, Andrew Pottgeiser, Mrs. U. E. Dibble, E. T. Powell, Al Gorski, Mrs. Catherine Highgate and C. S. Whitaker.

Members of the Traffic Planning Committee are: Lee A. Harris, Sr., Budd Spangler, Mrs. Glenn Vensel and C. S. Whitaker.

The Permissive Area of State Anti-Discrimination Laws

We note with interest that the first volume of the Duquesne University Law Review (Spring 1963) carried an article on the subject of laws against discrimination. The article, written anonymously by a Duquesne University Law School student, deals with the thorny problem of how far state and local governments may legislate against discrimination before a conflict arises with federal law covering the same subject matter.

The article first analyzes the recent decision of Levitt and Sons, Inc., vs. Division Against Discrimination, a 1960 New Jersey Case involving the builder of Levittown, Pennsylvania. In the Levitt case a complaint was filed with the Division Against Discrimination alleging that the Levitt Company was guilty of racial discrimination in failing to sell houses to the complainant. The issue on appeal was "whether Congress' refusal to incorporate a policy of non-discrimination in national housing legislation indicated a specific policy, thereby precluding state action forbidding racial discrimination in federally assisted housing." The Supreme Court of New Jersey decided that the New Jersey law against discrimination did not conflict with federal law. The Court stated: "There is a considerable gap between Congress' refusing to adopt an express policy of non-discrimination in regard to FHA insured housing to be applicable under all circumstances and in all sections of the country, and a congressional policy prohibiting states from enacting laws prescribing such discrimination." Another recent decision analyzed in the article is Marlon D. Green vs. Continental Air Lines, Inc. In the Green case, unlike the Levitt case, the Supreme Court of Colorado held that the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commission had no power over the airlines doing business both in and outside of Colorado, because the federal government had pre-empted the field through the Civil Aeronautics Act and the Railway Labor Act. However, on further appeal the Supreme Court of the United States ruled that there was no conflict with the federal law and that the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commission has jurisdiction over an airlines engaged in inter-state commerce, doing business in Colorado.

The following sentence, in the conclusion of the article, cogently summarizes the policy basis for the actions of the New Jersey Supreme Court and the United States Supreme Court in sustaining the respective actions of the New Jersey Division Against Discrimination, and the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commission.

"The recent decisions stemming from Brown vs. the Board of Education, the 1961 ICC ruling banning discrimination in waiting rooms, the Presidential Executive Orders 19025 and 11063, and the widespread prevalence of state anti-discrimination statutes, are sufficient to indicate that the statutes in question actually aid in already existing national policy."

It appears that another legal attempt on the part of those who would seek to abrogate the laws against discrimination has failed. The argument that local and state anti-discrimination laws conflict with federal laws on the same subject matter, be it housing, transportation, etc., is without merit. As the article clearly points out, local and state anti-discrimination laws are in consort rather than conflict with federal policy and federal law.

DIRECT ACTION FOR NEGROES

IS IT UNNECESSARY?

While Martin Luther King, Jr. was in jail as a consequence of nonviolent demonstrations in Birmingham, Alabama, he received a letter from eight clergymen of the three major faiths which raised certain questions about nonviolent direct action. Following are portions of Dr. King's reply.

"In any nonviolent campaign there are four basic steps: 1) collection of the facts to determine whether injustices are alive; 2) negotiation; 3) self-purification; and 4) direct action. We have gone through all of these steps in Birmingham. . . . Negro leaders sought to negotiate with the city fathers. But the political leaders consistently refused to engage in good faith negotiation.

"Then came the opportunity last September to talk with some of the leaders of the economic community. In these negotiating sessions certain promises were made by the merchants—such as the promise to remove the humiliating racial signs from the stores. On the basis of these promises Reverend Shuttlesworth and the leaders of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights agreed to call a moratorium on any type of demonstrations. As the weeks and months unfolded we realized that we were the victims of a broken promise. The signs remained. As in so many experiences of the past, we were confronted with blasted hopes, and the dark shadow of a deep disappointment settled upon us. So we had no alternative except that of preparing for direct action, whereby we would present our very bodies as a means of laying our case before the conscience of the local and national community. We were not unmindful of the difficulties involved. So we decided to go through a process of self-purification. We started having workshops on nonviolence and repeatedly asked ourselves the questions, 'Are you able to accept blows without retaliating?' 'Are you able to endure the ordeals of jail?'

"We decided to set our direct action program around the Easter season, realizing that, with the exception of Christmas, this was the largest shopping period of the year. Knowing that a strong economic withdrawal program would be the by-product of direct action, we felt that this was the best time to bring pressure on the merchants for the needed changes. Then it occurred to us that the March election was ahead, and so we speedily decided to postpone action until after election day. When we discovered that Mr. [Eugene 'Bull'] Connor was in the run-off, we decided again to postpone action so that the demonstrations could not be used to cloud the issues. At this time we agreed to begin our nonviolent witness the day after the run-off.

"This reveals that we did not move irresponsibly into direct action. We too wanted to see Mr. Connor defeated; so we went through postponement after postponement to aid in this community need. After this we felt that direct action could be delayed no longer.

"You may well ask, 'Why direct action? Why sit-ins, marches, etc.? Isn't negotiation a better path?' You are exactly right in your call for negotiation.

Indeed, this is the purpose of direct action. Nonviolent direct action seeks to create such a crisis and establish such creative tension that a community that has constantly refused to negotiate is forced to confront the issue. It seeks so to dramatize the issue that it can no longer be ignored.

Creative tension

"I just referred to the creation of tension as a part of the work of the nonviolent resister. This may sound rather shocking. But I must confess that I am not afraid of the word tension. I have earnestly worked and preached against violent tension, but there is a type of constructive nonviolent tension that is necessary for growth. Just as Socrates felt that it was necessary to create a tension in the mind so that individuals could rise from the bondage of myths and half-truths to the unfettered realm of creative analysis and objective appraisal, we must see the need of having nonviolent gadflies to create the kind of tension in society that will help men rise from the dark depths of prejudice and racism. . . .

"Actually, we who engage in nonviolent action are not the creators of tension. We merely bring to the surface the hidden tension that is already alive. We bring it out in the open where it can be seen and dealt with. . . .

IS IT UNTIMELY?

"One of the basic points in your statement is that our acts are untimely. Some have asked, 'Why didn't you give the new administration time to act?' The only answer I can give to this inquiry is that the new administration must be prodded about as much as the outgoing one before it acts. . . .

"We know through painful experience that freedom is never voluntarily given by the oppressor; it must be demanded by the oppressed. Frankly, I have never yet engaged in a direct action movement that was 'well timed,' according to the timetable of those who have not suffered unduly from the disease of segregation. For years now I have heard the words 'Wait!' It rings in the ear of every Negro with a piercing familiarity. This 'Wait' has almost always meant 'Never.'. . . I guess it is easy for those who have never felt the stinging darts of segregation to say 'Wait.'

"But . . . when you see the vast majority of your 20,000,000 Negro brothers smothering in an air-tight cage of poverty in the midst of an affluent society; when you suddenly find your tongue twisted and your speech stammering as you seek to explain to your six-year-old daughter why she can't go to the public amusement park that has just been advertised on television, and see tears welling up in her little eyes when she is told that Funtown is closed to colored children, and see the depressing clouds of inferiority begin to form in her little mental sky, and see her begin to distort her little personality by unconsciously developing a bitterness toward white people; . . . when you are forever fighting a degenerating sense of 'nobodiness'—then you will understand why we find it difficult to wait. . . .

"All . . . [the objections] grow out of a tragic misconception of time. It is the strangely irrational notion that there is something in the very flow of time that will inevitably cure all ills. Actually time is neutral. It can be used either destructively or constructively. I am coming to feel that the people of ill will have used time much more effectively than the people of good will.

"We will have to repent in this generation not merely for the vitriolic words and actions of the bad people, but for the appalling silence of the good people. We must come to see that human progress never rolls in on wheels of inevitability. It comes through the tireless efforts and persistent work of men willing to be co-workers with God, and without this hard work time itself becomes an ally of the forces of social stagnation.

Creative time

"We must use time creatively, and forever realize that the time is always ripe to do right. . . .

IS IT TOO EXTREME?

"You spoke of our activity in Birmingham as extreme. At first I was rather disappointed that fellow clergymen would see my nonviolent efforts as those of the extremist. I started thinking about the fact that I stand in the middle of two opposing forces in the Negro community. One is a force of complacency made up of Negroes who, as a result of long years of oppression, have been so completely drained of self-respect and a sense of 'somebodiness' that they have adjusted to segregation, and, of a few Negroes in the middle class who, because of a degree of academic and economic security, and because at points they profit by segregation, have unconsciously become insensitive to the problems of the masses. The other force is one of bitterness, and hatred and comes perilously close to advocating violence. . . . It is expressed in the various black nationalist groups that are springing up over the nation, the largest and best known being Elijah Muhammad's Muslim movement. This movement is nourished by the contemporary frustration over the continued existence of racial discrimination. It is made up of people who have lost faith in America, who have absolutely repudiated Christianity, and who have concluded that the white man is an incurable 'devil.' I have tried to stand between these two forces saying that we need not follow the 'do-nothingism' of the complacent or the hatred and despair of the black nationalist. There is the more excellent way of love and nonviolent protest. I'm grateful to God that, through the Negro church, the dimension of nonviolence entered our struggle. If this philosophy had not emerged, I am convinced that by now many streets of the South would be flowing with floods of blood. . . .

"Recognizing this vital urge that has engulfed the Negro community, one should readily understand public demonstrations. The Negro has many pent up resentments and latent frustrations. He has to get them out. So let him march sometime; let him have his prayer pilgrimages to the city hall; understand why he must have sit-ins and freedom rides. If his repressed emotions do not come out in these nonviolent ways, they will come out in ominous expressions of violence. This is not a threat; it is a fact of history. So I have not said to my people 'get rid of your discontent.' But I have tried to say that this normal and healthy discontent can be channelized through the creative outlet of nonviolent direct action. Now this approach is being dismissed as extremist. I must admit that I was initially disappointed in being so categorized.

Creative extremism

"But as I continued to think about the matter I gradually gained a bit of satisfaction from being considered an extremist. Was not Jesus an extremist? . . . The question is not whether we will be extremist but what kind of extremist will we be. Will we be extremists for hate or will we be extremists for love? Will we be extremists for the preservation of injustice—or will we be extremists for the cause of justice? In that dramatic scene on Calvary's hill, three men were crucified. We must not forget that all three were crucified for the same crime—the crime of extremism. Two were extremists for immorality, and thusly fell below their environment. The other, Jesus Christ, was an extremist for love, truth, and goodness, and thereby rose above his environment. So, after all, maybe the South, the nation and the world are in dire need of creative extremists. . . .

IS IT UNLAWFUL?

"You express a great deal of anxiety over our willingness to break laws. This is certainly a legitimate concern. Since we so diligently urge people to obey the Supreme Court's decision of 1954 outlawing segregation in the public schools, it is rather strange and paradoxical to find us consciously breaking laws. One may well ask, 'How can you advocate breaking some laws and obeying others?' The answer is found in the fact that there are two types of laws: There are just laws and there are unjust laws. I would be the first to advocate obeying just laws. One has not only a legal but a moral responsibility to obey just laws. Conversely, one has a moral responsibility to disobey unjust laws. I would agree with Saint Augustine that 'An unjust law is no law at all.'. . .

"Any law that uplifts human personality is just. Any law that degrades human personality is unjust. All segregation statutes are unjust because segregation distorts the soul and damages the personality. It gives the segregator a false sense of superiority and the segregated a false sense of inferiority. . . .

"Let us turn to a more concrete example of just and unjust laws. An unjust law is a code that a majority inflicts on a minority that is not binding on itself. This is difference made legal. On the other hand a just law is a code that a majority compels a minority to follow that it is willing to follow itself. This is sameness made legal.

Just and unjust laws

"Let me give another explanation. An unjust law is a code inflicted upon a minority which that minority had no part in enacting or creating because they did not have the unhampered right to vote. Who can say the legislature of Alabama which set up the segregation laws was democratically elected? Throughout the state of Alabama all types of conniving methods are used to prevent Negroes from becoming registered voters and there are some counties without a single Negro registered to vote despite the fact that the Negro constitutes a majority of the population. Can any law set up in such a state be considered democratically structured? . . .

"I hope you can see the distinction I am trying to point out. In no sense do I advocate evading or defying the law as the rabid segregationist would do. This would lead to anarchy. One who breaks an unjust law must do it openly, lovingly (not hatefully as the white mothers did in New Orleans when they were seen on television screaming 'nigger, nigger, nigger') and with a willingness to accept the penalty. I submit that an individual who breaks a law that conscience tells him is unjust, and willingly accepts the penalty by staying in jail to arouse the conscience of the community over its injustice, is in reality expressing the very highest respect for law. . . .

"We can never forget that everything Hitler did in Germany was 'legal' and everything the Hungarian freedom fighters did in Hungary was 'illegal.' It was 'illegal' to aid and comfort a Jew in Hitler's Germany. But I am sure that, if I had lived in Germany during that time, I would have aided and comforted my Jewish brothers even though it was illegal. If I lived in a Communist country today where certain principles dear to the Christian faith are suppressed, I believe I would openly advocate disobeying these anti-religious laws. . . . I had hoped that the white moderate would understand that law and order exist for the purpose of establishing justice, and that when they fail to do this they become dangerously structured dams that block the flow of social progress. . . .

"I must close now. But before closing I am impelled to mention one other point in your statement that troubled me profoundly. You warmly commended the Birmingham police force for keeping 'order' and 'preventing violence.'. . . I'm sorry that I can't join you in your praise for the police department.

Nonviolence for what?

"[Still] it is true that they have been rather disciplined in their public handling of the demonstrators. In this sense they have been rather publicly 'nonviolent.' But for what purpose? To preserve the evil system of segregation. Over the last few years I have consistently preached that nonviolence demands that the means we use must be as pure as the ends we seek. So I have tried to make it clear that it is wrong to use immoral means to attain moral ends. But now I must affirm that it is just as wrong, or even more so, to use moral means to preserve immoral ends. . . .

"I have almost reached the regrettable conclusion that the Negroes' great stumbling block in the stride toward freedom is not the White Citizens' 'Counciler' or the Ku Klux Klanner, but the white moderate who is more devoted to 'order' than to justice; who prefers a negative peace which is the absence of tension to a positive peace which is the presence of justice; who constantly says 'I agree with you in the goal you seek, but I can't agree with your methods of direct action'; who paternalistically feels that he can set the timetable for another man's freedom; who lives by the myth of time and who constantly advises the Negro to wait until a 'more convenient season.' Shallow understanding from people of good will is more frustrating than absolute misunderstanding from people of ill will. . . .

"I wish you had commended the Negro sit-inners and demonstrators of Birmingham for their sublime courage, their willingness to suffer and their amazing discipline in the midst of the most inhuman provocation. One day the South will recognize its real heroes. They will be the James Merediths, courageously and with a majestic sense of purpose, facing jeering and hostile mobs and the agonizing loneliness that characterizes the life of the pioneer. They will be old oppressed, battered Negro women, symbolized in a seventy-two year old woman of Montgomery, Alabama, who rose up with a sense of dignity and with her people decided not to ride the segregated buses, and responded to one who inquired about her tiredness with ungrammatical profundity; 'my feet is tired, but my soul is rested.' They will be the young high school and college students, young ministers of the gospel and a host of their elders courageously and nonviolently sitting-in at lunch counters and willingly going to jail for conscience's sake. One day the South will know that when these disinherited children of God sat down at lunch counters they were in reality standing up for the best in the American dream and the most sacred values in our Judeo-Christian heritage.". . . (Letter from Birmingham City Jail, Apr. 16, 1963)

PRESENTATIONS MADE BY PARTICIPANTS

IN THE SIXTH ANNUAL SOUTHERN STUDENT HUMAN RELATIONS SEMINAR

INDIANA UNIVERSITY

AUGUST, 1963

Prepared by:

Southern Project
U. S. National Student Association
Room 701, 41 Exchange Place, S. E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

PREFACE

For the past six years, during the month of August, the U. S. National Student Association has sponsored a Southern Student Human Relations Seminar. The purpose of the Seminars has been to provide an opportunity for fifteen to twenty Southern student leaders to study intensively human relations in the South. The program and curriculum has attempted to give the participants a deeper understanding of the economic, political, educational and other factors that influence human relations in the South, with the hope that this understanding would help the students bring about change in their own communities.

At the Sixth Seminar, held at Indiana University, in August of 1963, as a part of this learning process, each student was asked to do research on a different element that might exist in a Southern community. At certain times during the Seminar, there were role-playing situations, where a problem or question was posed and where the students were asked to respond as they felt the element which they represented might respond.

In addition, each student was asked to present to the entire Seminar a report or paper on his assigned group. The students were free to give their presentations in whatever manner they wished, as long as they attempted to convey to the rest of of the participants, the background, ideas and thinking of the group that they had been assigned. This booklet is not an attempt to describe all of the various elements in a Southern community; it is a collection of the presentations that were written and turned in at the conclusion of the Seminar.

THE NEGRO MIDDLE CLASS

The concept of the "Negro middle class" is about as easy to define and compartmentalize under neat headings, such as "values" and "attitudes," as is the concept of the "white middle class;" general statements of similarities can no more show the complex nature of the individuals existing within the latter group than they can of the former. A striking example of this diversity can be seen in Dr. Burgess' study of a southern community which she calls Crescent City. In her study, many of her findings were in direct contradiction to those earlier studies done of other cities. She attributes the contradictions in part to the uniqueness of her particular community setting. Just as differences are to be found in a comparison of communities, so are differences to be found in the composition of individuals within the community structure itself. (Preceding notes from Burgess' Negro Leadership in a Southern City.) Thus, throughout the following paper, you will be able to find many statements which do not agree with your own experiences; however, in attempting to portray general characteristics of this group as a whole, bear in mind that I must sidestep a deeper consideration of "the community" and the unique individuals within it.

Let us turn then to this area of our society: those people whom we have grouped together and placed in that block marked "Negro middle class." Who are they and how did they obtain this status? How do they think? What do they value most? What attitudes do they project toward a given issue, in particular, civil rights? Why is this group frowned upon by some and called, as the Reverend Martin Luther King once referred to them, "the grotespuely distorted middle class?" (Martin L. King, "The Luminous Promise," The Progressive, Vol. 26, No. 12.) First consider a summary of the general characteristics of these people, which may help us to clarify rather than define the concept of a Negro middle class. Exclusion from the larger white community has restricted the size of the Negro middle and upper classes. "While the Negro community gives places for a fair number of Negro preachers, teachers, and neighborhood storekeepers, it does not offer much chance for civil engineers and architects. The latter have to work in the white economy which does not want Negroes in such positions." (Myrdal, An American Dilemma.) In 1940 the Negro middle class constituted approximately one-fifth of the northern Negro population and one-sixth of the southern Negro population. But, during the last decade, the relative size has increased largely because of expansion in clerical fields in the North. Higher education has been obtained mostly in the segregated schools of the South. For the most part, they hold jobs in the white collar occupations; however, within this classification there is a wide differentiation of employment, with the largest percentage of jobs to be found in clerical work and related fields, and the smallest percentage in the professional and technical fields. Yearly incomes range from $2,000 with not more than one percent of the Negro population earning as much as $4,000. (Statistics from Frazier's Black Bourgeoisie.) The family life of this class is relatively stable and emphasis is placed on the man's position as chief bread-earner and central authority of the family-unit, unlike the matriarchal structure of the lower-class (Burgess, Negro Leadership in a Southern City). As with the majority of the Negro population, Methodist and Baptist are most often the professed faiths, but there is a significant number of Episcopalians and Roman Catholics. These few surface facts are merely to orient us toward the concept of a "Negro middle class." For the remainder of this paper, I will make litte, if any distinction between this class and the Negro upper class, primarily because of the lack of any clear distinction in the resource materials used. I believe that the absence of such a distinction can be attributed in a large measure to the high degree of similarity and fluidity beween the two classes.

The beginning roots of the black bourgeoise can be found in the years before the Civil War. Earlier members of what E. Franklin Frazier termed the "old style" bourgeoisie attempted to gain wealth primarily through the ownership of land or real estates, which were the main avenues open to the free Negro. Others gained employment as skilled artisans in the South or as domestic and personal service in the North. Their hopes for obtaining wealth and getting ahead were founded on the spirit of thrift and saving. "However, it was not until after the Emancipation that the spirit of modern business enterprise took root among the Negro elite. This was due to their association with the Freedmen's Bank, which was established to encourage thrift among the newly emancipated slaves." Out of this first acquaintance with the business world was to arise what has been called the "new style" bourgeoisie, which is unlike the "old style" in many respects.

Emancipation destroyed to a great degree that status which the free Negroes had enjoyed. Hierarchy within the class structure was no longer based solely on mulatto heritage and acquired upper white class values, such as etiquette and morality, but depended more on a material standard of living, wealth, and education as a means to attaining status. This new middle class derived their standards and values from what they knew of the surrounding white community. Yet, with this strong desire to gain an elevated position, they could not deny the isolation and accompanying sense of inferiority conferred upon them by white America: an isolation shared with all of their Negro brothers. They have attempted to rise above this inferior status and become more acceptable to the white population in several ways.

Because Negro stereotypes connoting inferiority have generally been aimed at the lower class, many within the upper classes reject the Negro masses and anything which is distinctly labeled as "Negroid." "They have arranged a little isolated world for themselves and want to hear as little as possible about their being Negroes or the existence of a Negro problem. They make it a point not to read Negro papers or Negro books" (Myrdal, An American Dilemma). Some publications are read, but read generally for the society columns. According to Myrdal, "they keep their children apart from the 'common Negroes.' They try to share the conservative political opinions of the whites of a similar class status; they often over-do this considerably. They despise lower-class Negroes, and they balance the account by despising lower-class whites too." As a majority of the middle class have themselves arisen from the lower class, this isolation may in fact be the result, not so much of a rejection of Negro stereotypes, but of a strong contempt of those people from whom they have arisen: As one person phrased the feeling, "If I can do it, why can't they?"

Many of the middle class adopt what they believe to be the road to equality with their counterpart in the white society; hence, an obsession with material goods or conspicuous consumption is highly prevalent. Often, emphasis is placed on Negro business as the means to success, and education is viewed as a tool for wealth and status (Frazier, The Black Bourgeoisie).

This class has then, in effect, become isolated from both the white and the bulk of the Negro community, and the resulting race sensitivity is generally much stronger here than in the lower class. For, while some have attempted to blot the Negro image from their lives, they are constantly reminded of their supposed inferiority in their attempts to model themselves after and be more a part of the white community. Many take refuge in a world in which the role of "society" is a distortedly large part of their lives: a society with almost fanatical interests in sports, poker, Greek letter organizations, and lodges. The buying of expensive houses, cars, clothes, etc. is often one's only emblem for a high position in this "society." However, there are others, who, rather than escaping into the narrow world of exaggerated middle class values, sense a strong feeling of racial solidarity and work for Negro betterment. "They experience the joy and consolation of identification with a wider goal than that of self-elevation" (Myrdal, An American Dilemma). This group may be composed in large part by young people. As they have not experienced the poverty from which many of their parents have arisen, they do not feel hostility towards the lower class.

= Generally speaking then, it can be seen that Negro middle class values are very similar to those of the white middle class, which also strives for success, status, material wealth, and education as a means to obtaining status goals. Yet, because Negroes have not been allowed to enter the main-stream of American life, these middle class values are often highly exaggerated within the Negro community.

Having discussed who these people are, how they obtained their status, and what some of their values are, let us now turn to a consideration of their attitudes toward civil rights. The majority is in favor of desegregation, but this position can be broken down into three major types. A conservative would be apt to favor gradualism and compromise through bi-racial committees. As the term "conservative" generally implies, he would be against anything which would upset the status quo and, consequently, would oppose any form of direct action. The concept of desegregation through gradualism and compromise would also be upheld by liberals, but to a lesser degree. Recently, a new position has arisen within the Negro community, which we may term the "radical element." Within this element we find the students and leaders of the protest movements, the advocates of direct action. From the liberal and radical segments of the middle class have emerged the leaders of the Negro people.

It has been said that some civil rights organizations look with great disdain on this group as a whole. Although I have no references from civil rights groups to this effect--with the exception of the statement by the Reverend Martin Luther King--I believe at least four major reasons can be found for this disdain. First of all, as has previously been stated, many individuals within the Negro middle class do not acknowledge the masses and attempt to isolate themselves as much as possible. Hence, the newer civil rights groups would hold the Negro middle class in low esteem, because these groups are specifically concerned with the elevation of the masses and the creation within the individual of a pride in his people. Secondly, there are those who fear a sudden change in the status quo because they have a vested interest in segregation. Others do not actively participate because they fear the loss of their jobs, for example, a college professor in a state-run institution. The final reason can be found in the leadership structure. The majority of leaders, both those who compromise and those who are supporters of direct action, are themselves usually members of the middle or upper class. Thus, in this instance, there exists not a clash in which civil rights groups are posed against the middle class, but it is a battle in which the radical leader is in opposition to the conservative; the leader who believes in compromise is charged with bending toward the white man and, in so doing, renouncing the Negro.

To conclude, the Negro middle class is an exaggeration of the white middle class. It is not a strange phenomenon nor an ugly distortion of the white middle class, but merely an exaggeration. Exposure to a new way of life and opportunity to gain more materialistic goods causes many to value their existence in proportion to their wealth and to turn against that which is the symbol of poverty and inferiority. But this is to be expected until the Negro becomes accustomed to his new life, and until he realizes that materialistic wealth is only one facet of the American dream, only one goal towards which to reach. This realization will occur only when the Negro is allowed to fully enter the main-stream of American life rather than in the position of spectator and second-class citizen.

THE STATES' RIGHTS POSITION

It is the intent and purpose of this paper to provide an expository, emotional, and typical viewpoint of an imaginary southern individual, who tries to convey all the pertinent factors which constitute his reasoning for advocating what has come to be known as "The States' Rights Position." What is perhaps the most frequently quoted and earliest definition of this position occurred in a letter from Abraham Lincoln to Duff Green, Esq. on December 28, 1860:

> The maintenance inviolate of the rights of the states, and especially the right of each state to order and control its own domestic institutions, according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to the balance of powers on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depend.

The information presented in this paper is not necessarily factual, nor should this paper be understood as a reflection of my personal convictions on the matter.

Who would have guessed in 1880 that a Boston Irish Catholic would be President of the United States? But the Irish fought their own way up on merit and ambition and hard work. They made a place at the table. They won acceptance, and they paid their own way. However, no such comparative reality has been visible in the South. Instead of ambition, we have witnessed indolence; instead of skill, ineptitude; instead of talent, an inability to learn. It is all very well for social theorists to say of Southern Negroes that they are capable of this, that their potential is for that, and, if it were not for segregation and second-class citizenship and denial of opportunity, that they would have achieved thus and so. But the Southerner, to paraphrase Burke, is not so much interested in determining a metaphysical point--he is interested in maintaining tranquility. The Southerner may dwell more than others upon the past and brood more intently on the distant future, but in his daily life he has to be concerned with reality.

The first reality that he faces squarely is the one which is really most often shunned: the inequality of man. The typical Southerner, out of the observation and experience of his lifetime, would accept Burke's thesis that universal equality may exist, but only such equality as exists in Christianity--that is, moral equality, or, more precisely, equality in the ultimate judgment of God. He knows that "no other equality exists, or may be imagined to exist." The South holds small enthusiasm for egalitarian doctrines based upon the infinite perfectibility of man.

But, in May, 1957, the Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry denounced such heresy as the above in unequivocal terms: "The fact is, of course, that the Negro possesses the same capacities and potentialities as does the white."* However, few Southerners have made any serious attempt to read any books on anthropology or to acquaint themselves with the results of intelligence tests. Their judgments and attitudes are based largely upon personal observation, instinct, upbringing, and the cumulative experiences of a lifetime. An advocate for the South does not wish to be dogmatic: He does not insist that the South has all the right answers. He does not say,"...the fact is, of course." But the South does suggest that it raises some of the right questions. The following pages point out some of the facts and quasi-facts regarding the Negro.

* One is reminded of Mark Twain's comment that there is something fascinating about science: "One gets such wholesale returns of conjecture out of such a trifling investment of fact."

Here were a people who lived by the sea and never conceived the sail; they dwelled in the midst of fantastic mineral deposits and contrived no more than the crudest smelting of iron and copper. The Negro developed no written language--not even the poorest hieroglyphics--no poetry, no numerals, nor a calendar that has survived. Even so skilled a defender as Toynbee has to conclude that the Black Race is the only one of the primary races "which has not made a creative contribution to any one of our twenty-one civilizations."

An interesting factual observation is the following chart which shows the statistics on illegitimates as a percentage of total live births:

	1940	1945	1950	1955	1960
White	1.95	2.36	1.75	1.86	2.21
Negro	16.83	17.93	17.96	20.24	21.80

Substantially, the same picture may be seen in the records of Virginia. Between 1938 and 1958, the white illegitimacy rate in Virginia declined slightly, from 2.6 to 2.3. In this same period, which witnessed astonishing gains in Negro education, Negro housing, Negro income, and Negro job opportunities, the rate of Negro illegitimacy increased from 19.5 to 22.9 percent. In attempting to explain this rise in illegitimacy, President Thomas H. Henderson of Virginia Union University, a leading Negro educator, offered some thoughtful comments in a paper delivered before the Virginia Conference of Social Work in 1947: "The simple fact is that many Negro boys and girls do not want strongly enough to avoid producing illegitimate children." A notable comment along this same line appeared in the St. Louis Evening Whirl (a Negro newspaper) early in 1960 in a column telling of a Negro woman who complained, after giving birth to her ninth illegitimate child, that her allowance under Aid to Dependent Children had been cut from $185 to $110 a month; whereby, she said that she felt "discriminated against." Said the Whirl editorially:

> Mrs. Brown thinks that she is entitled to live a normal life with a boyfriend and not have to waste money running around hotels and rooming houses. They can't afford it. Mrs. Brown is young and normal and only 29. She cannot stop having a boyfriend and romance now. She believes that poor people are entitled to social pleasures and normal living.
> This newspaper agrees with this version of living. The rich have everything that they want. Why can't poor people have a little fun? A lot of our foolish laws need changing. We do not condemn Mrs. Brown. We rather praise her. She is living proof of a good woman--one who is promulgating her race.
> When our race increases in number to a much larger extent, we can demand more, get more, and show our power and authority at the polls.

In Philadelphia it was found that Negro teenagers, representing 30 percent of the population,were guilty of 75 percent of juvenile crime. Regarding criminal acts in general, the FBI's uniform crime reports showed the following statistics for 1960:

	Percent Negro
Murder	60
Robbery	55
Aggravated assault	43
Burglary	33
Forcible rape	53
Narcotic drug laws	46

As regards comparative Negro and white intelligence scores, the Alpha Intelligence Test was devided into eight sections which tested the examinee's ability in the following directions: arithmetic problems, practical judgment, synonyms and antonyms, disarranged sentences, completion of number series, analogies, and general information. The psychologists' committee realized, however, that because of its heavy reliance upon literacy and cultural factors, the Alpha test would tell Army examiners little about the intelligence and capacity of recruits whose schooling was limited and whose cultural background was poor. Hence, the Beta test was devised as a non-language test with which all recruits could compete equally. The average score of the white soldier on the Alpha test was 59; that of the Northern Negro, 39; and that of the Southern Negro, 12. The better educational equipment of the whites presumably might account for some of this astonishing difference, without considering any questions of innate ability at all. But this superior equipment did not figure on the Beta test: the whites averaged 43; the Northern Negro, 33; and the Southern Negro, 20.

In blunt speech, the answer to the question of why there is no equality is that the Negro race, as a race, has not earned equality. And, as I have attempted to argue earlier, it is a feeble and evasive response to accuse the white critic in making that flat statement, of emulating the child who shot his parents and then pleaded for mercy as an orphan. The failure of the Negro race to achieve equality cannot be blamed wholly upon white oppression. This is the excuse, the crutch, the piteous and finally pathetic defense of Negrophiles unable or unwilling to face reality. In other times and other places, sturdy, creative, and self-reliant minorities have carved out their own destiny; they have compelled acceptance on their own merit; they have demonstrated those qualities of leadership and resourcefullness and disciplined ambition that cannot be denied. But the Negro race, as a race, has done none of this. Hence, why are Negroes treated like second-class citizens? The answer is simple: because they are. As Cassius in Julius Ceasar remarked, "The fault lies not in our stars...but in ourselves, that we are underlings."

It is clearly provided by Article I, Section 2, Clause 1, of the Federal Constitution that:

> The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature.

The Seventeenth Amendment, Clause 1, to the Federal Constitution provides the following:

> The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

The qualifications of the electors in each state requisite for the election of the most numerous branch of the State legislature have been fixed by the constitutions and statutes of the various states. You should bear in mind that the franchise is not the right of citizenship. It is only a political privilege conferred by a State upon such of its members as it deems fit to exercise such a privilege within the constitutional limits. Voters and citizens are not the same; only those upon whom the state, under the reserved powers of the states, sees fit to confer the right of sufferage may assert any claim to such right.

The facts concerning the NAACP, by Eugene Cook, Attorney General of Georgia, are an excellent example of why one should maintain a states' rights position:

> The ugly truth about the NAACP and its origin, aims, and manipulators is so shocking as to stagger the imagination, but the truth is borne out by incontrovertible facts which can be established as matters of official record. These facts have been uncovered, checked, assembled and correlated through many weeks of intensive investigation and cooperative effort by my staff and the staffs of congressman James C. Davis of Georgia and Senator James A. Eastland of Mississippi.
> The files of the House Committe on Un-American Activities reveal records of affiliation with or participation in Communist, Communist-front, fellow travelling, or subversive organizations or activities on the part of the following officials of the NAACP: the president, the chairman of the board, honorary chairman, 11 of the 28 vice-presidents, the treasurer, 28 of the 47 directors, the chairman of the national legal committee, the executive secretary, the special counsel, the Southeastern regional secretary, the West Coast secretary, the director of public relations, and two field secretaries.

THE WHITE CITIZENS' COUNCIL

"God put the white people off by themselves. He put the yellow, red and black people off by themselves. God wanted the white people to live alone and he wanted the colored people to live alone. That is why He put them off by themselves.

"Do you know what part of the country you live in? You live in the South. You live in Mississippi. Mississippi is a state in the South. The South is a big part of our country.

"Negroes and white people do not go to the same places together. They live in different parts of town. They are kind to each other. This is called our Southern Way of Life. We do not mix our races, but we are kind to each other.

"Do you know that some people in our country want the Negroes to live with the white people? These people want us to be unhappy. They say we must go to school together. They say we must swim together and use the bathrooms together. We do not want to do these things.

"'Why do some people want us to live together?' you will ask. They want to make our country weak. If we are not happy, our strong and free country will grow weak. Did you know our country will grow weak if we mix our races? It will."

The preceding was taken from A Manual for Southerners and was intended to be used in grades 3 and 4. It sums up what I think to be the thinking of an organization which boasted a membership of 300,000 two years after its founding - the White Citizens' Council. In preparing this report, I tried to present a sympathetic view of the Citizens' Councils; however, I found this impossible to accomplish. Therefore, while I have tried to remain objective, this paper does reflect my personal bias.

In understanding the White Citizens' Council, it is helpful to note two points from Hodding Carter's The South Strikes Back.

(1) The majority of whites sincerely believe that basically the Negro is inferior to the Caucasian race.

(2) Unpunished violence of white against black is not a result primarily of the events and pressures of the past few years, but has been a part of the South's heritage since Reconstruction.

Thus, the Citizens' Council can take neither the credit nor the blame for much of the violence and pressure felt by the Negro since the Supreme Court decision of 1954. But the Citizens' Council has done much to arouse strong feelings on the race question.

The Council is best characterized as a symbol of the South's reaction to the threat of desegregation. As a pamphlet entitled "The Citizens' Council" states:

> The Citizens' Council is the modern version of the old-time town meeting called to meet any crisis by expressing the will of the people. The right to peaceably assemble to petition for redress of grievances is guaranteed in the first one of our Bill of Rights in the Constitution of the United States of America. The only reliable prophet for the future is the past, and history proves that the Supreme Power in the government of men has always been Public Sentiment. The Citizens' Council simply provides the machinery for mobilizing, concerting and expressing public opinion.

The Citizens' Council is against the NAACP, politicians and parties catering to the Negro bloc vote, a considerable part of the leadership of the Protestant and Roman Catholic churches, large segments of the press, and the United States Air Force, among other things.

Less than two months after the 1954 Supreme Court decision, the first White Citizens' Council was formed in Indianola, Mississippi. Its formation was announced during the regular session of the Legislature at Jackson and was greeted with cheers. The people of Mississippi were informed that "fourteen men met and counseled together on the terrible crisis precipitated by the United States Supreme Court in its Black Monday decision. For the first time in American history, racial segregation, the way of life regulating the daily activities of tens of millions of American citizens, black and white, in a well known pattern of familiar and satisfactory conduct, has been declared illegal. Despite the long-range dangers to our constitutional safeguards apparent to many men, North, South, East, and West, in legislation by judicial fiat, the immediate and pressing danger to men and women in Mississippi and the rest of the South is the potential flood of Negro invasion into our school, parks, swimming pools, restaurants, hotels, trains, buses, into our very neighborhoods and homes, and into public office. To thoughtful men, concerned for the safety and welfare of their families and children's children, the prospect opened up by this politically inspired decree appears utterly unthinkable." An Association of Citizens' Councils of Mississippi, claiming organization in 20 counties, was established in Winona five months later. Robert Patterson was elected executive secretary.

The Councils gained their initial support and their strongest leadership from the black-belt sections which have a plantation economy and heritage, and where Negroes generally outnumber the whites.

The first steps toward national organization were taken in April, 1956, when delegates from Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, Tennessee, and Virginia met to form the Citizens' Councils of America. Temporary headquarters were to be in Greenwood, Mississippi. The delegates decided that the organization was to function as a co-ordinating and planning agency for the several state associations. In outlining the scope of the National Organization, an editorial in the November, 1956, issue of The Citizens' Council stated:

> The Citizens' Councils of America is restricted from attempting to direct or control any Council or other organization, or any member thereof as to any proposed course of action.

This policy of little control over individuals was seen to have a dual character, as illustrated in the first annual report:

The Citizens' Councils think and plan as a group and they are able to act as individuals within their various churches, schools, and any other organizations to which they belong.

A look at the organization of the local Council might help us to see their activities. Each of the Councils consists of four committees:

(1) Political and Elections Committee. This committee screens all candidates in local and state elections for those who might be seeking the Negro vote. If necessary, it could organize a white private election within the group to combat the Negro bloc vote (as the old white primary). It would discourage Negro registration by every legal means.

(2) Information and Education Committee. The function of this committee is to gather information pertaining to segregation from all over the nation. It educates all citizens, black and white, in the advantages of segregation and the dangers of integration. It handles relations with the press, radio, and speakers.

(3) Membership and Finance Committee. This committee seeks "patriotic voters" for membership in the Citizens' Council.

(4) Legal Advisory Committee. This committee anticipates moves by agitators and devises legal means for handling any problems that might arise. It provides legal council for all members and recommends application of economic pressure to troublemakers.

Just who are these people in the Citizens' Councils? The Council trys to maintain its appeal to the middle and upper class strata of the white population. Take the Jackson, Mississippi, board of directors as an example: It includes 8 lawyers, 2 bank presidents, 3 manufacturers, a gas utility president, 2 paper company owners, 2 insurance agents and a funeral director. The very fact that the Council leadership in Mississippi is drawn primarily from the ranks of the white community's business, political, and social leaders makes the Council more secure in its position.

A firm retention of control in the hands of these more prosperous and conservative members has served to restrain, to some degree, those who favor a policy of more overt intimidation of the Negro and the non-conforming white. An example is "Ace" Carter, rabid leader of the North Alabama Citizens' Councils and a Klu Klux Klan leader as well, who was denounced instantly by the Mississippi Councils when his notoriety threatened the reputation of the Council.

The Councils have tried to use other than violent means to gain their ends. An example of the pressure used by the Council is shown by a quote from Fred Jones of Inverness, a former state legislator and a member of the State Executive Committee of the Citizens' Council: "We can accomplish our purposes largely with economic pressure in dealing with members of the Negro race who are not cooperating, and with members of the white race who fail to cooperate, we can apply social and political pressure."

However, many Council leaders deny this use of pressure by the Citizens' Councils. Thomas Waring, a Charleston, South Carolina, newspaper editor, wrote the following in the first issue of The Citizens' Council:

"Economic pressure," a method of combatting Negro pressure from the North, is not organized by the Councils. Individuals who belong to Councils may have persuaded Negroes to remove their names from school integration petitions by various means short of violence. These means could include firing employees, or refusing to renew leases for sharecroppers who have followed the NAACP line.

If these tactics have been used--and there seems little doubt that they have--they were adopted on individual initiative and not as group action.

The Citizens' Council today has a five-point action program:

1. Prevent race-mixing.
2. Avoid violence.
3. Maintain and resore legal segregation.
4. Defend states' rights.
5. Reverse the "Black Monday" decision.

As for violence, the citizens of Little Rock and Clinton found that the claims of non-violence were discarded when the chips were down. William Simmons, Council leader, said that "public sentiment is the supreme arbiter of violence." He also said that in the event of integration, or even of Civil Rights legislation, which might drive the Citizens' Council underground, "great violence will be inevitable."

The Citizens' Council has a womens' activities director, whose job is "to acquaint high school students with the necessity of keeping our white race white." This is implemented by essay contests held among high school students which offer $500 prizes. Titles include "Why I Believe in Social Separation of the Races of Mankind," "Subversion in Racial Unrest," and "Why the Preservation of States' Rights is Important to Every American."

An example of the extent of the Councils' activities is the 1958 estimate which showed that nearly 8 million pieces of literature had been distributed since 1954. It had also reached an estimated audience of over 150,000 people with its radio and television programs.

Where do the Citizens' Councils go from here? Basically, their objective is to put off total integration as long as possible. Ultimately, the fact that it is essentially a negative movement, one of defending the status quo, will destroy the Council as a major force in the South. As Hodding Carter states: "Defense of the status quo, as history has shown often enough, is an arduous task at best. When, in a democracy such as our, it involves the repression of a minority, it becomes an impossibility."

THE PSEUDO-SCIENTIST'S ARGUMENT FOR RACIAL SUPERIORITY

As the myth of racial superiority is being challenged by the more liberal and intelligent men of all nations, science has become the stage upon which the sensational battle between the ideology of racial superiority and racial inferiority is being fought. The battle is a ferocious one and, if fought scientifically, a decisive victory could be won by either side.

Ever since the dawn of slavery in America when the Negroes were thought to be sub-human and incapable of moral feelings, the pseudo-scientist has been trying to validate his conclusion that the Negro is biologically inferior to the white man and unfit to live in a white civilization as an equal member. Similarly, it is often said that the Negro race as a whole is mentally retarded, childlike, and incapable of looking after itself in a modern, economically specialized age, thus becoming the burden of the white man. Consequently, racial segregation and Negro exclusion from white education and skills is the morally right and logical policy. However, the essential argument is that the Negro handicaps are hereditary, and nothing can change them.

The pseudo-scientist, in fact, carries his argument further back than slavery. He has gone as far back as the origin of man, and he has brought forth "historical" evidence which cites that the Negro is more than 200,000 years behind the white race on the ladder of evolution.[1] Most of this evidence is based upon the writings of Carleton S. Coon in his book entitled The Story of Man.

In this book, Dr. Coon states that there has been a "transition in the evolution of mankind from the ape through a still unidentified Australopithecine ancestor to Homo erectus and then to Homo sapiens, or modern man. Homo erectus, as the name implies, stood and walked erect but lacked the brain capacity, and consequently the intelligence, of Homo sapiens."[2] Also, he states that "man's differentiation into races occurred while he was still in Homo erectus stage...and that the evidence from human fossils indicated that the step from erectus to sapiens was taken by Caucasoid man in Europe no less than 200,000 years before the same step was taken by Negro man in Africa."[3] However, it should be noted that Dr. Coon's evidence points up the fact that the Mongoloid man evolved 150,000 years before the Caucasoid man.

From this evidence, the pseudo-scientist expounds that the Negro is intellectually inferior to the white man by stating that the Negro's brain is smaller and that his ability to reason, to analyze and to judge soundly is less than his own Further still, the pseudo-scientist has made comparative studies of Negroes and whites and has compiled the results of his tests as follows:[4]

1. The I.Q.'s of American Negroes are from 15 to 20 points, on the average, below those of American whites.

2. Negroes overlap of white median I.Q.'s ranges from 10 to 25 per cent--equality would require 50 per cent.

3. About six times as many whites as Negroes fall in the 'gifted child' category.

1. Wesley George, The Biology of the Race Problem, p. 60.
2. ibid., p. 61.
3. ibid., p. 62.
4. ibid., p. 19-20.

4. About six times as many Negroes as whites fall below 70 I.Q. - i.e., in the feeble-minded group.

5. Negro-white differences in mean test score occur in all types of mental tests, but the Negro lag is greatest in tests of an abstract nature - e.g., problems involving reasoning, deduction comprehension. These are the functions called for in education above the lowest levels.

6. Differences between Negro and white children increased with chronological age, the gap in performance being largest at the high school and college levels.

7. Large and significant differences in favor of whites appear even when socioeconomic factors have been equated.

Nevertheless, because of the extreme difficulty of making precise quatitative determination of mental traits, the measurements offered by various types of intelligence tests present no completely satisfactory data in regards to mental traits.[5] Consequently, "it would be rash to infer from the observations that there are no differences whatever in the distribution of biologically determined intellect or personality; if exactly the same conditions could be attained for a sufficiently large number of individuals, biologically determined differences might be found, but it seems impossible to attain sameness of conditions. Therefore, the only safe conclusion to be drawn is that careful tests reveal a marked dependence of mental reactions upon conditions of life and that racial differences which have been established thus far are so much subject to outer circumstances that no proof can be given to innate racial differences."[6]

Apparently, not only does the pseudo-scientist fight in the intellectual area of our stage, but he also fights in the area of the stage that has been designated to the formation of civilization. The pseudo-scientist contended more than once that civilization has been the work of the white aristocatic elite, who has creative faculties, and not the work of the Negro, who has recreative and destructive faculties along with his imitative capacities, leaving him unfit for cultural work.[7]

Southerners earnestly submit that over a period of thousands of years the Negro race has failed to contribute significantly to the higher and nobler achievements of civilizations.[8] However, Mr. Long, in his History of Jamaica, gives the Negro some credit when he writes that the white race cannot pronounce the Negro unsusceptible of civilization, since even apes have been taught to eat, drink, repose and dress like men. But, of all the human species hitherto discovered, the Negro's natural baseness of mind seems to afford the least hope of his being so refined as to think as well as act like men (except by miraculous interposition of Divine Providence).

To the contrary, Ruth Benedict and Gene Weltfish state that "history proves that progress in civilization is not the monopoly of one race or subrace. When our white forebearers in Europe were rude stone-age primitives, the civilizations of the Babylonians and the Egyptians had already flourished and been eclipsed. There were great Negro states in Africa when Europe was a sparsely settled forest. Negroes made iron tools and wove fine cloth for their clothing when fair-skinned Europeans wore skins and knew nothing of iron."[9] "Up to now, every great center of civilization has had its day and has given place to others...The peoples change, but the old arts are, for the most part, not lost permanently. They pass into the common heritage of mankind."[10]

In another area, the advocator of white supremacy has argued that the Negro has never developed a culture of his own and that his entrance into the white culture will only cause it to deteriorate.

With the preceding statement in mind, it is widely thought that a group's future is as truly the product of its culture as its culture is of its past, for its culture both epitomizes its past experiences and also--as a consequence--provides each new generation with a starting point around which it will plan its way of life ; on which the individual will draw to some extent, and from which he will apply in his own way and according to his own means in the specific situation confronting him. Further still, "the brain does not secrete cultural or intellectual power in the same way that the liver secretes bile. One is not born with the ability to think brilliantly; such ability can be brought about only by exposure of the brain and nervous system to education in the proper conditions."[11] Therefore, "all that we know is that there exists considerable cultural differences between peoples and that these cultural differences are readily explained upon purely historical grounds, not upon any biological ones."[12] "In short, it is culture which makes 'Brains;' not brains culture."[13]

In reference to the inferiority of the Negro because of physical differences, it has been proven biologically that the "physical differences which exist between the varities of mankind are so insignificant that when properly evaluated they can only be described in terms of a particular expression of an assortment of genes which are common to mankind as a whole. At most, human varieties probably differ from one another only in the distribution of a comparatively small number of genes ...All the evidence indicates that the differences between the so-called 'races' of man merely represent a random combination of variations derived from a source, which by inbreeding in isolated groups, have become scattered and more or less stabilized and hereditary in a large number of the members of such groups. Furthermore, the evidence suggests that such selection of variations has been primarily restricted to physical characters."[14]

For the pseudo-scientist who bases the inferiority of the Negro on his pigmented skin there is a biological reason the explain this condition. In essence, the Negro is much better adapted to meet the demands of the conditions of intense sunlight to which his ancestors were born than is the white man, who is better adapted to meet the rigors of the cooler climates of his adopted homelands. Is one therefore superior or inferior to the other? Is the white man superior to the Negro because he lost the greater part of his pigment when his organism did not require its presence under the conditions in which he lived? Alternatively, is the Negro superior (or inferior) because he is the descendant of ancestors who were able to survive by virtue of the selective value of their darkly pigmented skins? Clearly, there can be no question of either inferiority or superiority; both the Negro and the white man have survived because they and their ancestors were possessed with adaptive characters which, under the respective conditions of their differing environments, enabled them to survive.[15]

Consequently, as far as the Negro's kinky hair, thick lips, lack of general body hair, broad nose and so forth being marks of biological inferiority, it can readily be shown that such statements stand in complete contradiction to the facts. "In these very characters, the Negro is from the evolutionary standpoint more advanced than the white, that is, if we take as our criterion of advancement the fact of being furthest removed from such conditions as are exhibited by the existing anthropoid apes, such as the gorilla and the chimpanzee."[16]

The greatest of all arguments presented by the pseudo-scientist is the one relative to the degeneration of the white race by miscegenation. Race degeneration implies the fear that the descendants of the physically and mentally handicapped will increase in number, along with our rise in civilization, and that, eventually, they will take over civilization and the level of the whole race will be lowered. It is also maintained that decreased efficiency, lost fertility, and internal disorganization will result from crossing the races, because the Negro does not have certain elements in his blood that the white man has.

Carleton Putnam has stated that miscegenation spells stagnation and mediocrity for both races. He also contended that "the very essence of this ideology to build the inferior up by pulling the superior down, has invariably the same result. The inferior, in gaining what has not been earned, has lost the spur, and the superior, in losing what was well deserved, has lost the crown."[17] However, Montagu, on the other hand, has stated that "just as the fertilizing effects of the contact and mixing of cultures lead to the growth and development of the older forms of culture and the creation of new ones within it, so, too, does the interbreeding of different ethnic groups lead to the growth and development of the physical stock of mankind."[18] In other words, since there are no biological obstacles to crossing between the most diverse human races, crossing is one of nature's principal devices for the uninterrupted production of ever new and more vigorous types of life.[19]

"When crossing does occur, it is in disregard to social conventions, race pride and race prejudice. Naturally, therefore, it occurs between antisocial and outcast specimens of the respective races, or else between conquerors and slaves. The social status of children is thus bound to be low, their educational opportunities poor, their moral background bad."[20] However, "in the American Negro, we are developing a distinctively new ethnic type. This type, there is every reason to believe, is a perfectly good one by measure of biological goodness or fitness, that is to say, by the measure of the organism's ability to meet successfully every demand of its environment--an ability testified to us by the fact that, in the course of a century and a half, the Negro population has increased by thirteen times its original number."[21] Hence, I can only conclude that as long as the pseudo-scientist is able to warp the minds of innocent bystanders or to convince the Negro that he is inferior, his fight will continue. Further still, in order to maintain his

BLACK NATIONALISM

Overt feelings of Negro nationalism in America date back to the days of colonialism. In 1817, the Negro Convention Movement adopted a program under which all free Negroes might emigrate to western Canada. This movement was established in direct opposition to the American Colonization Society, which proposed Negro migration to Africa. At this time, however, the "return to one's own kind" theme held little appeal for American Negroes. The popular African picture was of the trail of chieftains competing in the sale of their own people and, in a purely economic sense, always getting the short end of any bargains with the white slave merchants.

In 1854, an Emigration Convention proposed and investigated the possibilities of emigration to West Africa, to Haiti, or to Central America. Some 2000 Negroes actually did sail to Haiti, but this movement eventually failed and most of the participants returned. The representative to Central America died in California, and the proponent of the African faction, Dr. Martain Delaney, was commissioned into the Union Army in 1861.

The Civil War and the Emancipation Proclamation stole the fire from the Movement, and the leaders placed their hopes in their newly won citizenship. With the death of the movement for geographical separation from the United States, ethnic separation survived and was perpetuated by the Negro church. The church provided a strong citadel for Negro untiy and ethnic identity. Through its membership in the larger Christian community, it was in the best position to advance the Negro cause. Even today, a fairly large number of the Negro leaders are clergymen. The church has fostered schools and fraternal organizations, the latter being largely responsible for the Negro's continued identification of himself with his African heritage. In addition to the lodges, there have been frequent breakaways from the Christian tradition and its close association with white supremacy. These fragmentary sects tend to be anti-Christian and favorably disposed toward Negro nationalism. This area is also a hot-bed of charlatans, swindlers, and opportunists, a situation which has caused the white world to regard these movements with a degree of distrust and aloof amusement. From this background has sprung powerful movements, notably the Moorish-American Science Temple.

In 1913, Timothy Drew, a semi-educated Negro from North Carolina, founded the first Moorish-American Science Temple in Newark, New Jersey. Having accumulated information on Islamic doctrine, Noble Drew Ali, as he came to call himself, decided that, only by giving the black man a national pride and a source of security and identification, could he raise his people from their condition of social prostration. It was in the great industrial centers of the North--Pittsburg, Chicago, and Detroit--during a period of vast Negro migration from the South, that Noble Drew Ali found his most receptive audiences. Partially because his followers were illiterate common laborers and partially because racial separation seemed to be the only dignified solution to the Negro's problem during those days of extreme racial violence, in his teachings he divided the peoples of the world into Europeans (who were Christians) and Asiatics (who were Moslems). He and his followers began buying property and businesses, which were held in common. It was the forays into the business world which brought about his downfall; Drew was arrested and died shortly after his release from prison.

About this same time, a Jamaican Negro named Marcus Garvey had started another nationalist movement. He had studied in London, was widely read, and had travelled in Latin America. He was concerned over the colonial situation in Africa and its effect on the entire black world. First in Jamaica and later in the United States, in 1916, he established chapters of his organization: The Universal Negro Improvement Association and African Communities League. Its goal was towards a unilateral black unity and "the redemption of Africa for Africans abroad and at home." Garvey was an eloquent speaker and writer calling for the black man to realize his destiny, to seize his opportunity, and make his place in the sun. The U.N.I.A. began the Negro Political Union, The Universal African Legion, the African Orthodox Church, the Black Star Steamship Company, and several other auxiliary organizations.

Legislative effors of the U.N.I.A., along with those of the Peace Movement of Ethiopia, seved only to claim the more conservative Negro leaders, among them was W.E.B. DuBois. When Garvey was imprisoned in 1925 on charges of mail fraud in connection with the Black Star Company, his followers these "Uncle Toms" of playing the Judas role. After his release, Garvey was deported and eventually arrived back in London, where he died in 1940. At its height in 1925, the movement was very large, perhaps in the millions; today,it is disunified and inconsequential, unable to mature without its capable, dynamic leader.

Noble Drew Ali had died in 1929, but, in 1930, a mysterious peddler appeared in Detroit stating that he was Drew reincarnated and had come directly from Mecca. His name was W. L. Ford, and, although he has never been positively identified, it is believed that he really was from Mecca and was educated at Southern Cal for a diplomatic career. His immediate acceptance by the Negroes illustrates not his own ability, but, rather, the fact that as long as the racial caste system prevails, there will always be a large number of lower class Negroes who are readily sympathetic to any leader offering an avenue of relief from their abject social insecurity.

Ford began holding meetings in homes throughout the poor Negro section of Detroit, where he told his listeners about the customs and the people of the Eastern lands, that the Moslem people were their own brothers, and that they, too, should follow the customs prescribed by Islam. At first his teachings were merely exotic stories, but, as his audiences grew larger and more enthusiastic, he began to attack Christianity and white supremacy. To these poor, oppressed, and bewildered people, his doctrines of separation and his denouncements of the blue-eyed devils were outlets for their frustration with the whole situation. Eventually, a temple was begun and membership was formalized. Ford continued to maintain his role as a Meccan emmissary from Allah to redeem the Black Nation. In 1933, after raising the Detroit membership to several thousand, Ford disappeared without a trace. One of Ford's closest disciples was Elijah Muhammed, previously Robert Poole of Sandersville, Georgia. When Ford died, the movement split into two factions, one of which believed that Ford was only a prophet,and the other maintaining that he was actually Allah, in Messianic form. This latter group was driven out of Detroit by the moderate faction and, with their leader, Elijah Muhammed, established their own temple in Chicago and gave birth to the Black Muslims of today. Muhammed's title is the Messenger of Allah; it is he who has made the Muslims the most powerful and successful group of its kind.

From the first temples in Detroit and Chicago, the Movement expanded into almost every state with a considerable Negro urban population. There are over 50 temples and missions from New York to Miami to Los Angeles. Muslims do not publish the size of their membership, but it is estimated at over 100,000. The number of postulants and sympathizers could be several times that number, as suggested by the tremendous crowds gathered at Muslim rallies in Harlem. A minimum of twenty-five members is prerequisite to starting a new temple. The elite of the Muslim men are the Fruits of Islam, a corps of young men especially chosen for positions of leadership. The female equivalents to the Fruits of Islam are the Muslim Girls Training and General Civilization Class, and from their numbers the Temple Officers are chosen by the Messenger, Muhammed, who also appoints the ministers. In turn, the ministers are directly responsible to Muhammed, often to such an extent that his sometimes incompetent leadership is frequently a blight on a few of the younger and more capable leaders. His demagogy tends to narrow the potential membership down a great deal. The dogma of Muslimism and its inconsistencies with orthodox Islam alienates intellectuals, who might otherwise be strongly attracted to the activities of the Muslims. Furthermore, of the 100,000 Muslims, only about 10 have degrees. Muhammed was an opportunist, but he has not changed sufficiently with the times and has become in many ways a liability to his own cause. Yet, he is the Messenger, the Mediam, and only his death or a definite schism will change the situation.

The greatest period of growth for the Black Muslims has been over the last ten years at a rate proportional to the intensity of the racial fires. In all the large industrial centers, Muslimism finds fertile soil; here are the immigrants from the South who have found the promise of northern opportunity to be a mockery. They live in the ghettos, they are bewildered and they are oppressed; for in this dirty existence, there is not even that tiny vestige of peace and dignity that was in the South, only the poverty remains. The daughters get pregnant; the sons fall into the criminal ways of city poor; the family disintegrates. The easiest way is to numb the pain with liquor, with dope, and with sex--anything to forget the futility and to put out of mind the white hate of the hot city's days and nights.

To these people, the Temple is a haven where the air is pure; here there is decency and safety for wives and sisters; and here there is equal opportunity for any man and the pride of genuine accomplishment. For a Muslim, the "black skin stigma" is not removed; it is inverted, and it becomes the badge of excellence and a sign of the master race. Black nationalism, however, does have positive features which provide (1) relief from the oppressions of poverty and ghetto life, (2) a deliberate course of action to achieve self-interests, (3) community life with one's own kind in accord with a central ideal. This side of Muslimism is seldom perceived by the outsider, black or white. The tragic flaw is in the perpetration of these intentions which are uncompromising.

Interpreted solely by Muhammed, the Koran says that the black race was directly created by Allah 66 trillion years ago. About 7000 years ago, a maverick black named Yarub began breeding light-skinned people until he had created a race of white devils. According to the teachings of Allah, the whites were to rule for 6000 years, and, at the end of this time, they would be destroyed by Allah in a great black-white war. This battle is called Armageddon, after the place where the biblical kings assembled before the destruction of Babylon. Only the children of Islam will survive from this battle.

Obviously, this gibberish does not really make sense except in the minds of the very simple. But, through the crime of segregation and the denial of civil rights, the white man has sown the modern seeds of his own Armageddon. Every instance of racial injustice is seized upon as another example of white immorality and incompetence. Thirty-five years ago, Adolph Hitler preached the same sermon of hate, and his accusations were not nearly as valid as Muhammed's indictment of the white Christian society today. It is with this manner of righteous hostility that Muhammed assembles his troops.

From the sewers of the ghettos come the drunks, addicts, pimps, and prosti-tutes to join with their impoverished brothers in the common drive toward self-betterment, pride, and eventual black supremacy. In Detroit and Chicago there are Muslim schools, the Universities of Islam, teaching classes through the twelfth grade. In addition to the traditional school curriculum, these schools teach Arabic and the articles of the Muslim faith. The Muslims trade with their own people, and they effectively preach the "buy black campaign." They contribute generously to their many funds. There is now a plan for a twenty million Islamic center to be built in Chicago, which will include a school, a hospital, a temple and other facilities. With continued rapid growth, the realization of their dream is not impossible.

From the outset, the Muslims have suffered heavily at the hands of the press, both Negro and white. Besides the official Muslim newspaper, Muhammed Speaks, only a few Negro papers have supported the Muslim cause. The Muslims are hungry for favorable publicity, and, though they openly despise the "Uncle Toms," they play up favorable comments coming from any corner. They simply regard their non-Muslim brothers as innocent infidels, who have not yet discovered the narrow path to salvation. Their newspaper even publishes the batting averages of Negro major league stars, and Sonny Liston became the darling of Muslim boxing fans when he refused to donate $500 to the NAACP.

Perhaps it is a good idea to emphasize here that Muslimism is nothing like the many religious sects (Father Divine, Sweet Daddy Grace, etc.), which simple provide the anesthetic escape into a dream world. The Black Muslims are extremely militant. Politics is the only major field on which they have not done battle with white supremacy. They have never endorsed any candidate; in fact, many of them do not vote. Nevertheless, the tremendous crowds of sympathizers, who gather in Harlem when Malcolm X speaks, suggests the possibility of a powerful Muslim-led bloc vote.

The growth of Muslim strength in Harlem illuminates an interesting development in the Muslim hierarchy. Muhammed is getting old and his health is bad. He has named as his successor, by divine inspiration, of course, his son, Wallace Muhammed. But the name on everyone's lipe is Malcolm X. In view of his tremendous popularity in New York, it seems a waste to move him to the much smaller temple in Washington.

The survival of the Muslim movement is pendent at two points: (1)that the movement show marked economic and social advance in the future; (2) that the white Christian culture continues to be a hell for the black man. Improvement in Negro employment and education would mean that the next generation of Muslims would return to the fold educated and attuned to the appeal of white society, instead of being illiterate and uncritical of their own background. When the hate and injustice that nourished the Black Muslims is gone, the fruit of oppression must necessarily wither and die a natural death.

THE MINISTER AND THE RACIAL CRISIS

I am the minister of a large "white" church in the southern United States. I am here today to tell you what I think my role as a minister is in the racial crisis that we are facing.

However, before I begin to tell you about my role, I think that I should tell you a little about what I think my role as a minister involves regardless of the situation. It is my responsibility to preach God's Word, as I understand it, at all times. The members of my congregation do not always like what I say; sometimes they think that my subject is irrelevant to the gospel or, while it may be relevant, it isn't really my place to talk about it. Sometimes their objections to what I say are strong and difficult to handle. Even so, it is more important for me to deal with the subjects than for me to sacrifice them in order to keep peace within the church. If I believed that it was enough for the church to be a social club, I would only preach on those things that my congregation wanted to hear; but I do not believe this would fulfill my function as a minister. My first responsibility is to God. If I can preach His Word and keep peace within my church then I will; however, if His Word causes my congregation to be disturbed then I will go ahead and disturb them with the Word. I must preach that which is relevant to my congregation. I need not spend time preaching on the horrible practice of child sacrifice in some far-away land when my people to not practice child sacrifice. They don't need to hear about the sins of other people; they need to be told about their own sins.

Because I feel that the way the Negro is being treated is contrary to God's will, I must show my congregation what I believe is our responsibility in the situation. I cannot profess to believe in the brotherhood of man and sit by silently watching the Negro be treated as less than human. I cannot say that I believe the same God created all men and then will turn a Negro away when he comes to worship that same God. When several Negroes were turned away from a church in Little Rock, an out of state newspaper commented, "Perhaps these Negroes mistook this church for the House of God."[1] As a minister, it is my duty to see that my church is the House of God, not a social club where members live behind a sign that says "Whites Only." Laws can't cause these signs to be removed, and no one can force the church to be christian; this is something that has to come from within the church.

It isn't easy to stand before a group of people and to tell them that their way of life is wrong. It's especially difficult when these people have been brought up in the segregated way of life. It's hard for them to see what is wrong with segregation when they have always lived in the South and where segregation is all they have known. All their lives, this group of people were told that they are superior to the Negro. I know that it is hard for them to understand, because I, too, was raised in the South; I, too, was indoctrinated with all the usual prejudices. I am not completely free of prejudices today, but I know that they are wrong and that I must show my people that their prejudices are also wrong. I must show them that they are to love the men whom they are mistreating and that they must treat them as human beings who have feelings and souls. I must tell my people this and make them see that if the color of a person's skin does not matter to God, it certainly should not matter to them.

But, as I said, fulfilling this responsibility is not an easy task. I know what I should say and what I should do, but simply knowing is not enough; I must act--that's where the hard part comes in.

1. Ernest Campbell and Thomas F. Pettigrew, Christians in Racial Crisis, p. 23.

It's hard for me to act when I know that I may lose the financial support of my congregation. If you asked any member of my church what he thought about blackmail, he would probably emphatically tell you that it was wrong and dirty. More than likely, he would be very insulted that you asked him; after all, he's very active in the church, maybe even a deacon or an elder. What else could you expect him to think about blackmail? Yet, he may be one of the congregation who told me that if I didn't leave the race problem alone that he would withdraw his support from the church.

Most ministers have to think twice before they do something that they know might cause some of their members to withdraw their support. I don't mean this as a contradiction to what I said earlier about keeping the peace being more important than preaching God's Word. I do believe in my earlier statement, but this is not the only factor that enters into the picture. You see, my church, like most other churches of its size, supports missionaries, our denomination's colleges and orphanges, and many other worthwhile projects. The church has promised a certain amount of money to each of these causes, and if we are not able to give this amount then they will not be able to do all that they had planned. When I do something that I know will hinder our church's fulfilling its responsibility to these causes, I must be certain that my cause is justifiable.

It is hard to act when I think about the things my family may have to endure if I speak out: there may be persecution, or I may lose my job and, possibly, not be able to get another one for a long time. If I couldn't get another church, how would I support my family? Can I run the risk of losing all this when I do have a family? Churches don't want trouble makers for ministers.

It is a great temptation for me to remain silent for the reasons that I have mentioned. It is also easy to rationalize and to keep guiet for Mr. So-and-So's sake. He is very old and has been a member of this church all of his life; it is doubtful whether he will ever change from being a staunch segregationalist. If I say anything, I will just upset him, and I hate to turn him against the very church that he helped to found. This rationalizing is quite a temptation.

It is so easy to be influenced by a number of things. Even the size of my church can influence me. According to a study on some of the ministers in Little Rock, the minister of a large church is less likely to take a public stand on integration that the minister of a small church. The former has more to lose. The minister who is fifty years old or over is also less likely to take a stand for integration than the minister who is under thirty. A minister is also unlikely to take a stand if he has served his congregation for a number of years or if his congregation is personally affected by integration, for instance, if a school in their neighborhood is being desegregated. He is also less likely to stand up for integration if his church is engaged in a membership drive or a fund raising project.[2] All the things that influenced the ministers in Little Rock also affect me.

Before I present a sermon on integration, I have to remember that, when I preach, the members of the congregation are not free to question me. Maybe they won't understand what I'm trying to say. If they do understand and it upsets them, I might not have the chance later to show them why I feel the way that I do and to help them to really understand. Of course, I can always have informal sessions later to discuss the sermon, but maybe the ones who are really upset won't come. Therefore, if I do preach on integration, I must be as clear as possible in all that I say.

If, in spite of all the pressure to remain silent, I do decide that this matter must be considered from the pulpit then I must decide how I will approach it. The easiest way out is to preach a sermon on the brotherhood of man and hope that the members of the congregation get the point. They should. After all, they know what is going on in the world. But will they get the point? If I don't think that a sermon on the brotherhood of man is enough, I can always add a reminder that we are having a racial crisis and that we should remain christian in all our actions. Somehow, I don't think that this is enough, either. The racial problem is a real on, and I must treat it as such; I must make my position clear and not hide behind a partial dealing with the subject.

When I have initially approached the racial problem from the pulpit, I must decide whether one sermon is enough or if I should keep hammering. If I continue, I am very likely to drive some members from the church, but, if I become silent after only one sermon, I may fail to influence the man who is undecided. I feel that I must preach on the race problem from time to time as the need arises. However, I do not feel that I should preach on this and nothing else, for there are other matters in the church that also need attention.

I feel that I must compromise in what I say at almost all times. If I said everything that I wanted to say everytime that I wanted to say it, I would soon be without a church. I must give my congregation only as much as they can take at one time and gradually build on it. I must not make statements that will not accomplish anything, if by making them I jeopardize the church. I must gently push my people in the right direction. If I don't push hard enough, they may stop and refuse to grow; but, if I push too hard, they may fall.

As a minister, it is my responsibility to make the church be the church, not a social club which excludes some people from it, from jobs, and from life because of their race.

A SOUTHERN BUSINESSMAN'S VIEW OF INTEGRATION

"The politicians have failed; now it is the businessman who holds the last hope of the South." Thus spoke the voice of doom for the Old South, the land of agraria and segregation. Being formed at this first meeting of the Mayor's Biracial Committee are new concepts characteristic of the new, industrial South.

The speaker continued, voicing the typical attitude of many of the city's business leaders with respect to integrating the city's business facilities, "We've been watching these freedom rides and boycotts in other cities, and we're finally getting the picture. Even Robert E. Lee finally had to surrender, didn't he?"

Well, I guess it all makes sense, but it's all uncomfortably new to me. Here I am, a product of the agrarian South, having procured a college education and having now attained the distinction of "business leader" of an industrial Southern community. Don't get me wrong--the Old South is still very much with me; I still have my inhibition, my prejudices, my color-consciousness; and I especially feel certain reservations when I envision my parents and consider the staunch segregationist policies to which they still cling. But I, being educated, have a great respect for facts. For this reason, my practical-minded colleagues and I have adopted a policy of resignation to deal with the racial question.

Listen to the speaker relate the woes of Mississippi and Little Rock: "In the past fifteen years about sixty plants have been put into Mississippi--that's roughly four a year. But in the last few years, the rate has been more like one or two a year. To many specialists, the racial tension clearly is responsible for keeping the plants away."

Quoting the October 3, 1962, issue of the Atlanta Constitution, "Mississippi's bitterly violent defiance of law and order has failed in all respects save one. It has succeeded only in committing economic suicide...Mississippi will no doubt continue to offer cheap labor, huge tax concessions and other giveaways... But for most of the nation's industries, no amount of monetary inducement could offset the risk of moving into a state whose chief executive not only says but also shows that he cannot or will not preserve the peace."

From the October 7, 1962, issue of the Miami Herald: "There are many ways Mississippi has been hurt by the explosion of violence, but the most severe is probably economic. Barnett has done a good job of attracting industry to Mississippi...But Arkansas and Little Rock experienced a new-industry drought for years after federal troops protected Negro students there. 'Only recently has industry started going back into Little Rock and the racial trouble has been blamed,' a Herald source said. 'And what happened at Little Rock was child's play compared with this.' Without industry Mississippi cannot pull itself out of the poverty and low educational standards that so often accompany agrarian economiew. Now the outlook for industry is even blacker."

Statistics on Little Rock revealed in the Knoxville News Sentinel, October 6, 1962, and Newsweek, October 22, 1962, read as follows: "Take Little Rock, Arkansas, for example. In the two years before the riots at Little Rock's Central High School, 17 new plants moved into the city; they employed 1200 persons. But in the four years since the troubles, only 13 new plants have sprung up in the city; they employ less than 1000."

"When Little Rock's school-integration crisis erupted in September, 1957, the city and state were thriving. In the previous two years, industrial investment in the state totaled $248 million; Little Rock alone gained ten new plants, worth $3.4 million, and added 1072 jobs to the city's payroll. In the two years after Federal troops marched into Little Rock, the state's investment fell to $190.6 million; for three years, not a single company employing more than fifteen people moved into the Little Rock area. Last year, with memories of the turbulence fading, one new plant was built for $1.6 million; this year another firm plans a $780,000 plant."

The speaker draws the parallel with Mississippi findings: "But immediately after the recent riots at the University of Mississippi, one state industrial salesman heard from eight Northern industrialists who had been considering moving in, and four of them said that they were bowing out...And a national manufacturer of hard goods told its Mississippi plant in bitter jest: 'From now on, put "Made in North Carolina" on our products.'"

Clearly, the facts reveal the high costs of racial conflict. A sampling of businessmen's experience across the South is heard from the Birmingham speaker, a top official of one of the city's largest banks: "We've been hurt and hurt badly. In the last few days, I bet that I've spent more than $50 in telephone calls trying to convice a big Ohio company that it should locate a pilot plant in Alabama. But I'm afraid we've lost it to New England and lost it strictly because of the unrest down here. The pilot plant in its first stage was scheduled to cost about $3 million, and, if it had worked out, the company was thinking in terms of a further investment of $40- to $50 million. Well, we asked for it, and now we're getting it."

From Virginia, the situation is as follows: In 1951-53, the first three years of the decade, before massive resistance and school closing had been thought of, Virginia increased the average number employed in manufacturing by 31,400; in 1957-59, the last three years of the decade, during which massive resistance was legally formulated and tried, Virginia increased the average by a net of 5,100, or roughly one sixth as well as it had done in the earlier three years. This list of 11 such plants, employing up to 1,650 today, shows none obtained for 1958 and 1959, one for 1956, and all of the remainder in the first half of the decade. In fact, the concern of the Virginia business community that it might face a mortal blow if massive resistance wasn't abandoned is perhaps the best evidence of all of the serious impact the school situation was having on the state's economy.

From a question posed in Little Rock, "Has the Little Rock school situation affected your business?" the following results were obtained:

adverse effect	-	44 or 51.8%
no effect	-	35 or 41.2%
favorable effect	-	6 or 7.0%

One of the pollees remarked: "It has very definitely hurt the real estate business--just about killed it, as a matter of fact. That's particularly in house sales. First, we're not getting any new people into Little Rock. Secondly, a lot of them are moving out--particularly engineers, and people like that with industrial plants here. The minute it starts affecting their children, they leave. Thirdly, the people who are not leaving are upset about the situation and are hesitant to spend their money. We have plenty of cases where people are sending their kids out of town to school--paying expenses and tuition--and can't buy because they are on too tight a budget."

From a consumer survey in Little Rock, it was discovered that the average Little Rock family had 7% less buying power in 1958 than in 1956, while the average U.S. city family, in contrast, had 2% more buying power in the same period.

Whatever the picture in Little Rock may imply, the effects of schools closing for a year in New Orleans would be felt to the tune of something like $2.4 million. Also imperiled is $6.3 million in new school construction and equipment purchases scheduled. Furthermore, each and every month during a school shutdown, New Orleans firms who normally service the school system will lose some $256,000 in sales.

For Atlantans, an economist has found: "Conservatively estimating, school closing here would cost DeKalb County some 30 medium-size units over a three year period. We would then tally these losses:

--9,000 fewer people would move to DeKalb
--3,300 fewer homes would be built
--$18 million less gross income would come into the county
--$8 million less would be deposited into banks
--3,310 fewer automobiles would be registered
--6,200 job opportunities would be lost
--120 potential new retail stores would not open
--$11 million potential increase in retail sales would not be enjoyed

Economic boycott, school closings, mass violence--the terms are beginning to sink in. Our community has not had to cope with any of these pressures up until now; however, we were called here today to propose a solution to meet the threat of economic boycott. We realize that we are accepting, however reluctantly, an enlarged role in Southern race relations. Though most Southern businessmen clearly would prefer to maintain segregation and the status quo, many are coming to the conclusion that there must be some give in response to increased Negro demand for change. A charge is being given us. The large scale entrance of the Southern businessman on the desegregation scene may represent, in the long run, one of the most significant developments in Dixie race relations since the Negro began his organized efforts to attain expanded civil rights more than a decade ago. For in many communities, the businessman could readily wield the balance of power between the segregation extremists, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, the "teachers and preachers," who up to now have been the backbone of the white moderates.

"We are not integrationists at all--we are moderate realists," resounds the speaker's voice. "We cannot wait for violence. Birmingham business leaders have been condemned by a local attorney for setting the community back five to twenty years economically because of their head-in-the-sand attitude. In 1960, businessmen invested $51.8 million on new plants and expansion; in 1961--the year white mobs beat 'freedom riders' in Birmingham--such outlays fell to $23.5 million; last year they dropped to $11.4 million."

The speaker continues, "The slow and cautious approach is not advisable; although, hesitancy is understandable, since any alliance with the Negro rights movement invites economic and social reprisal from white extremists. Ku Klux Klans, White Citizens' Councils, and even state governments may necessitate a go-lightly policy. Such deliberate slowness should only occur in exceptional cases; although, I do feel that secrecy should prevail throughout the talks. The pressure on white businessmen working for racial amity lends them to try to maintain secrecy and tends to lessen the power the business comunity would normally enjoy. Aside from the danger of reprisals, businessmen have other reasons for preferring to work as quietly as possible. When two races sit down together with no publicity, the chances of success are much greater; extremists on both sides are not alerted to future desegregation actions and, thusly, are less able to forment trouble."

The speaker is seated. A Negro member rises to state his case: "Letting sleeping dogs lie was a comfortable and non-controversial policy for business while community customs remained static or changed slowly. Industry's problem now is that community customs are changing fastly. I wish to impress to any racially-discriminating industry that the problem of change is primarily internal, regardless of the nature of that change. I realize that it is very difficult to exact a charge of racial discrimination and apply it to any industrial organization, for, as opposed to racial segregation in the community, this segregation has not been an absolute yes/no matter. Talents and willingness to work are intimately involved here in position and place. Few of the unions that represent the bulk of organized industrial employees practice racial segregation officially. A conscious assessment of existing conditions is in order on the part of management. This effort makes sense, because, from a legal standpoint, the vast majority of managers want no part of a struggle in the courts. Yes, Negroes will be arriving on the scene in ever-increasing numbers in positions of importance. The Negro is now ready technically. Industry necessarily discriminates on the basis of ability. Formerly, this alone would have left most Negroes outside the gates or in the lowest paid jobs. Until the separate-but-equal strategy developed as a defense against school integration, few Negroes could get a decent education, and even fewer were prepared for jobs in industry. But World War II, with its demand for massive hiring regardless of any qualifications, has changed all that. Twenty years later the white managers are used to seeing well-dressed Negroes on the social and business scene. He accepts the changes being made, being aware that companies other than his are changing. I only hope that our industries can outflank prejudice in the manner that the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company in Winston-Salem, North Carolina, did. Negroes there now manage, supervise, and lunch beside the whites. How did this pattern, which would be unusual even in a Northern city, come about here in the South? First, the company was committed to a policy of equal opportunity. Next, Winston-Salem is noted for good race relations; schools and other public places desegregated without incident. Finally, the Whitaker Park plant in which this occurred is new; thus, the place of the Negro had no prior structure. In all good confidence, I think that our industry can follow the same precedent."

The Negro member is replaced on the floor by the local newspaper editor, a man noted for championing the liberal side of the truth. "For generations," he begins, "the businessman in the South has been obliged to set his buying, his marketing, and his hiring policies according to racial rules, written or unwritten. Today he finds himself an involuntary and sometimes confused principle in the forced change of a way of life. The changing times expressly affects retailers, who are under boycott and sit-in pressures, and government contractors, who come under President Kennedy's executive order not to discriminate. These two businesses account for much of the greatest volume of dollars at stake in the integration struggle. Both the pressures and the resistances to change are increasingly great, but, as I heard one retailer remark, 'I don't like Federal government pressure, but in this case it's necessary to speed things up. When people can hide behind the government, not taking the blame themselves, they will do things.'

"Merchants have been logically the hardest hit in the struggle. Stores were damned either way: if they gave in to Negroes, they risked violece from white extremists and loss of patronage from other white customers; if they stood pat, they antagonized Negroes and perhaps brought on Negro boycotts, a measure that drives consumers to suburban shopping centers and amounts to a loss in Negro business that may amount to a 6% loss in total volume in the larger department stores. Our reaction to the Negro demands should be geared to the community feeling, which I, personally, gauge as favorable. Whatever the reaction, this is a social revolution, and we can't have it painlessly.

"Negro demands for a change in employment practices are reasonable and well-founded. Here it is true that Negro factory workers complain that their jobs are the hot, dirty, noisy ones that white men don't want, or else they are restricted to all-Negro plants or segregated production lines. They want freedom to obtain every kind of job and assurance of a fair chance at promotion. Here it is also true that it is easier to get white-collar employees to accept Negro colleagues than to persuade the men in the shop. Characteristic of our community is the generalization that employment opportunities for Negroes tend to be better among Southern based companies than among Southern branches of national companies. A local company may know better what it can do within the limits of community opinion; a Northern company may lean over backward to avoid arousing latent local hostility.

"I have thus described the tempo of our community; but, now listen to our inherent limitations, which impede us from a rapid solution to all our desegregation problems. After decades of inadequate schooling, thwarted ambitions, and scarcity of job opportunities off the farm, Negro leaders concede that there are not nearly enough graduates of Negro colleges and technical schools to fill the jobs that the President's order theoretically makes available to them. And many of the skilled Negroes that the South does produce want to go to other parts of the country. Clearly we must put an end to job discrimination, regardless of any temporary expense. The economic losses resulting from discrimination are twofold: (1) inefficiencies in the use of the labor force resulting from failure to utilize fully the existing skills of our population; and (2) the failure to develop potential skills fully. Projecting thses losses on a national plane, we may question ourselves as to how much the Gross National Product, or GNP, would increase if the non-white were able to utilize his present potential (as measured by years of education) as fully as is the white, and if the non-white were able to develop his capacities as fully as is the white. The answers are astounding. Major considerations involved, the gain in GNP might well be as much as 2.5%, or about $13 billion at today's levels of GNP (not including the gains made from raising the educational level of the non-white). If the non-whites had the same educational levels as whites and if the economy fully utilized their education, GNP today might be perhaps 3.2% higher (inclusive of the previous 2.5%), amounting to about $17 billion at today's level of GNP. Among the qualitative gains in national welfare resulting from the elimination of racial discrimination is the fact that wage and salary incomes of whites in the lower paid occupations (with higher proportions of non-whites) would tend to rise while the opposite would be true in the higher income occupations. Thus, the low income white population would also benefit and a more equal income among whites would result. Finally, the community responsibilities of tax-paying and of military service could be more equally shared among all citizens of the nation.

"How? By what method? Answers will not be found in old frameworks, nor expressed in old terminology. For the South is no longer an economic entity in itself: for better or worse, the thousand strands of its varied economic interests have been woven inextricably into the warp and woof of the nation's economy. The South must be prepared to adopt not only the external, physical, and institutional arrangements appropriate to this new and irrevocable position, but also the attitudes, customs, practices, and obligations implicit therein. This position requires a provision of adequate, quality services for all citizens, an equitable distribution of the tax burden among various classes, public officials of great honesty and propriety of character, political equality of all citizens (the equal vote), and a state of social tranquillity.

"Now, particularly for you businessmen, your job should include an attempt to raise the South from the muck of poverty, an area whose richest section had a per capita income of 90% that of the poorest are outside the South in 1958. You are operating under two handicaps: (1) your workers do not have enough to offer in the national labor market because they are poorly prepared by experience and education for modern industry, and (2) Southern workers, both whites and Negroes, are often unable to offer a Southern employer the skills that they have. Seek industry for these people, but remember that more textile mills and sawmills will never elevate the living standards of the South and the rest of the nation. Three drawbacks which you can overcome include the falsehood that white workers can become better off by enforcing restrictions which make Negroes worse off, discrimination by blind employer prejudice, and the reluctance or refusal of white workers to accept Negroes as fellow workers on some jobs, which is essentially the heart of economic discrimination, and getting them to work side by side at the same type of job with no frowns involved.

"Though this evil of economic discrimination has become complicated, frustrating easy solutions, I challenge you to hold true to the following advice:

1. Whenever Federal, state, or local funds are spent to attract new firms to the South, new jobs must be filled on the basis of individual merits, and a division into white and Negro jobs must not be accepted.

2. Existing Federal executive orders which forbid job discrimination by employers who accept government contracts ought to be effectively enforced.

3. More publicity should be given to the many instances where Negro workers have quietly and successfully moved into jobs previously closed to them.

4. The divisions of workers in certain labor unions into segregated white and Negro locals should be ended.

5. Men of good will must continue, in the face of community indifference or hostility, to speak and act against fear, ignorance, and hostility.

Thank you."

The meeting is adjourned. Upon stepping outside into the city, the familiar sights are now viewed in a new light. Another business decision is in order, but this one has an established precedent. The unknown loss incurred in the transition period after integrating facilities will have to be absorbed in lieu of the known large economic loss as a result of sit-ins and boycotts. It's getting to be so that it's not so much of a gamble anymore. I guess that I'll stay with the pack when we decide when and how to liberalize our employment policies. The extent of my knowledge of Southern economic history I have here on my note pad from the meeting today; but facts are facts, and the businessman must bend before the weight of greatest economic pressure. Therefore, I am resigning before the truth.

PORTRAYAL OF AN ANTI-SEMITE

I am an anti-Semite, who also discriminates against Catholics and Negroes, and I am often found in such hate organizations as the Ku Klux Klan, the White Citizens' Council, and the American Nazi Party. I am a white Protestant supremist. The extreme bigot, which I represent, appears most frequently when his society is undergoing political and economical conflicts and changes. Both conditions are found in our society today, which accounts for the presence of these bigots in our country.

In Anti-Semite and Jew, Jean-Paul Sartre describes the anti-Semite, but his words can be used to describe any person who is dependent upon bigotry for his strength:

> He is a man who is afraid. Not of the Jews to be sure, but of himself, of his own consciousness, of his liberty, of his instincts, of his responsibilities, of solitariness, of change, of society, and of the world--of everything except the Jews. He is a coward who does not want to admit his cawardice to himself; a murderer who represses and censures his tendency to murder without being able to hold it back, yet who dares to kill only in effigy or when protected by the anonymity of the mob; a malcontent who dares not revolt from fear of the consequences of his rebellion. In espousing anti-Semitism, he does not simply adopt an opinion, he chooses himself as a person. He chooses the permanence and impenetrability of stone, the total irresponsibility of the warrior who obeys his leaders - and he has no leader. He chooses to acquire nothing, to deserve nothing; he assumes that everything is given him as is his birthright - and he is not noble. He chooses finally a Good that is fixed once and for all, beyond question, out of reach, he dares not examine it for fear of being led to challenge it and having to seek it in another form. The Jew only serves him as a pretext...The existence of the Jew merely permits the anti-Semite to stifle his anxieties at their inception by persuading himself that his place in the world has been marked out in advance, that it awaits him, and that tradition gives him the right to occupy it. Anti-Semitism, in short, is fear of the human condition. The anti-Semite is a man who wishes to be pitiless stone, a furious torrent, a devastating thunderbolt - anything except a man.

The rest of my paper shall consist of some of the rationalizations of a person's bigotry against Jews, Catholics, and Negroes.

I love this country; I'm not ashamed of my being a patriot or of admitting my feelings. I am for anything that will keep the United States as great a country as she has always been - this is why I'm against Jews, Catholics, and Negros.

This country was founded by people from England, Anglo-Saxon Protestants. They made it great. Every advance and every achievement in this country has been done by them. If this country is to remain great, the white Protestants must remain in power, because they are superior in every way to any other ethnic, religious, or racial group.

The Jews are racially impure and weak. Only those people directly descended from the Germanic tribes, such as the Anglo-Saxons, are pure and strong enough to continue in power. The Jews are a mongrel race, because they have intermarried with the Anglo-Saxons in an attempt to bring us down to their level so that they can take over the world.

The Jews are also religious heretics. They not only murdered Christ, but they still continue to deny the truth that He was the Messiah! Even worse, they consider themselves to be God's Chosen People! They place themselves over us! This is impossible and blasphemous! Our God would not choose those degenerate communists who deny the existence of His Son as His Special People!

The Catholics are incapable of being loyal to anyone aor anything except the Pope and the Catholic Church. If the Pope told them to go murder all the Protestants, including their friends and relatives, they would. No Catholic can, or should be trusted with any job involving patriotism and loyalty to a country.

Most Catholics are from the Latin countries, and everyone knows that Latins are so emotional that they cannot think as well as the Anglo-Saxons - this is the reason that they have the Pope do their thinking for them.

The Negroes are inferior in every way to any white man, expecially to the Anglo-Saxons. They are little better than savages, even after having been exposed to our great civilization for over three hundred years. Why, even their color shows their inferiority. It is a proven scientific fact that Negroes are not as intelligent as the white man; a brilliant Negro is about as smart as the average white man.

The Anglo-Saxon Protestants should be the only people allowed to vote or to have complete freedom. They are the smartest people, the only ones capable of handling the responsibilities of a democracy. They are the only people who can be trusted not to betray our nation to some foreign power.

THE KU LKUX KLAN

The first Ku Klux Klan was an outgrowth of the tense feelings in the South during the Reconstruction Period after the Civil War. The next Klan was formed during World War I and attained its greatest strength in the nineteen-wtenties. The third Klan resulted from disbandment of the second in 1944 and, in the Post-World War II period, operated as a loose combination of locally autonomous groups rather than as a unified body.

The first Klan started in 1866 in Pulaski, Tennessee, as a social club of young men. Using a weird ritual and a strange uniform, members accidentally discovered that their mysterious antics and hooded robes had a sobering effect on lawless, but often superstitious former slaves. Soon the club expanded into a federation of regulators whose purpose was to curb the activities of the recently emancipted Negroes. Influenced by the success of the Klan, other similar societies, such as the Knights of the White Camellia, the White League, the Invisible Circle, and the Pale Faces were founded in 1867-68 and spread rapidly throughout the former Confederacy. In common usuage, the name Ku Klux Klan applies not only to the specific secret order founded in Pulaski, Tennessee, but to these other societies as well, since their goal was to afford protection for whites, oppose the Reconstruction measures (1868-75) of the U.S. Congress, and effect the overthrow of local Reconstruction governments.

The period of greatest activity by the secret societies was from 1868 to 1870. During this time, nearly all southern whites (except the "scalawags") took part in some way in the KKK movement. Ultimately, some of the societies fell under the control of violent men who transformed them into outlaws, making them dangerous even to former members and exciting the North to vigorous condemnation. In 1870-71, Congress enacted a series of Force Laws, which were designed to break up the secret orders. Although several arrests were made and most of the violence was checked, the KKK movement continued until it largely accomplished its chief objectives of reducing the Negro vote, restoring white control over the local government, and expelling the Carpetbaggers and Scalawags.

The first national meeting in April, 1867, was held in Room 10 at the Maxwell House, Nashville's big new hotel. Confederate generals, colonels, and substantial men of church and state fromm all over the South, along with the group's leader, Nathan Forrest (the strong man of the Fort Pillow Massacre) established their plan to reduce Negroes to political impotence through the boldest and the most ruthless political operation in American history: by stealth and murder, by economic intimidation and political assassination, by whipping and maiming, cutting and shooting, by the knife, by the rope, by the braining of the baby in its mother's arms, the slaying of the husband at the wife's feet, the raping of the wife before the husband's eyes--by fear! Soon the South was honey combed with secret organizations, the Knights of the White Camellia, the Red Shirts, and the White League.

The secret organizations ran underground, and, above ground, there was a different strategy. In every state, Democrats attempted to control the votes of each state. There was real humor in the situation: ex-slaveholders and racists sitting on platforms with Negroes, reminding them that the southern white men had always been their friends and that the North was responsible for slavery.

The second organization, known as the Invisible Empire, Knights of the KKK, was founded by William J. Simmons, a preacher and promoter of fraternal orders, on Stone Mountain near Atlanta, Georgia, in 1915. Heralded by its founder as a high class mystical, social, and patriotic society devoted to the protection of white womanhood and the maintenance of white supremacy.

At first the order grew slowly. In 1920, Edward Y. Clarke, an advertising man, instituted a promotional campaign which proved so successful that by October 21st membership had risen from a mere handful to 100,000. Yet, a salesman alone did not account for the Klan's success; the Order had a natural appeal to a nation suffering from the tensions of World War I and served as a repository for the post-War hatreds and fears of many. The Klan was national in scope, but it was strongest in Tennessee, Alabama, North Carolina, Florida, Georgia, and the middle-West with an estimated membership which ranged from 2,500,000 to 4,000,000 by 1926, and its influence over the politics of several states permitted it to control some U.S. senators, congressmen, and state officials.

Beginning in 1926, the power of the Klan began to fade. Disintegration was mainly the result of the declining post-war hysteria, rising prosperity, factional strife within the order, and corruption involving high Klan officials. In particular, the numerous acts of violence performed in the name of the Invisible Empire had aroused much adverse public sentiment, and, by 1930, the Klan had shrunk to 30,000 and its power had disappeared.

With the onset of the Depression, the organization found it difficult to recoup its losses. During the 1930's, it attempted to capitalize on the New Deal socialism and the labor turmoil of the C.I.O. The admission in 1937 by Supreme Court Justice Hugo L. Black that he was a former Klansman and then the Klan's association with the German-American Bund in 1939-40 served to keep the organization's name before the public. By 1940, a few floggings and cross-burnings in widely scattered sections of the country were started.

The first Klan had severely penalized anyone conspiring to impede the effects of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, gave Congress complete control of congressional elections, and authorized the President to suspend the Writ of Habeas Corpus and established military law in localities where it seemed necessary. As enforcement was in the hands of federal courts, there were many indictments, and, in one case, Grant declared nine counties of South Carolina in rebellion and placed them under martial law in October, 1871. Grant, who was now completely under the control of radical groups, made a real effort to enforce these acts, and the Ku Klux Klan eventually disbanded. The final results, however, were nil. By 1876, white supremacy had been virtually restored in all the states except South Carolina and Louisiana, where federal troops maintained the carpetbag governments.

As the years went on, the restoration of white rule was aided in a number of ways. The Freedmen's Bureau went out of operation in 1872, removing important protection to the Negro. In the same year, Congress passed the Amnesty Act, which restored political privileges to all but a few hundred confederate veterans, bringing back into the southern political life a more conservative and responsible type of southern white. Now, as opportunity arose, the Supreme Court, which had always been skeptical of congressional reconstruction, threw out as unconstitutional various parts of the Enforcement Acts. This culminated in 1883 in the decision of the United States in a case involving a group of white men who had taken some Negroes from law officers and had ill-treated them. The action seemed certainly a violation of the Ku Klux Klan Act, but the court questioned the constitutionality of the Act on the grounds that the Fourteenth Amendment, in the words "No state shall make or enforce," had laid restrictions upon the states and not the individual. As this was an act of individuals, and not of a state, Congress had no power. The same stand was taken shortly thereafter when the court declared the Civil Rights Act of 1875 unconstitutional. This act had attempted to insure the Negro equal rights in public conveyances, hotels, and theaters, but the court pointed out that violations of this act had not been committed by the states.

Eventually the southern whites found numerous ways, legal and illegal, of nullifying not only congressional legislation but also the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments. A poll tax and/or other taxes automatically eliminated a good proportion of the poverty stricken Negroes. Where that was not sufficient, a law like that passed in Mississippi accomplished the same purpose; i.e., it provided that every voter must be able to read any part of the Constitution or to give an interpretation of it when it was read to him. This type of law was designed to debar the black illiterates, but it still allowed the white illiterates to vote. An even more forthright method of excluding Negroes was a Louisiana law of 1898, which included the well-known grandfather clause: Under this act, any citizen, regardless of porperty or educational qualifications, who had voted before January 1, 1867, might still vote, along with his descendents. This law was later declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. In some states, gerrymanderying was used; for example, in Mississippi, where one election district composed largely of Negroes was laid out three hundred-twenty miles wide, intimidation could always be used where the preceding devices were inadequate.

These were the things that happened in the past, but some of them are still taking place today. For the year 1960 marked a sharp increase in Ku Klux Klan membership; the total Klan membership is estimated at 35,000 to 50,000.

There are two major competing Klan groups in the the South--the U.S. Klans and the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, which was formed in Februrary probably as a response to the sit-in movement and spreading school desegregation. The sit-in movement was launched at Greensboro, North Carolina, on February 2, 1960, and a few weeks later, on the weekend of February 27-28, representatives of splinter Klan groups from seven southern states met at the Henry Grady Hotel in Atlanta and formed a National Klan Committee "to coordinate their activities." While there is no proof of a causal relationship, the general evidence seems to support the assumption that sit-ins, as well as the continuing spread of school desegregation, spurred that Klan action.

The National Knights have since shown that it means business. At the original meeting in Atlanta, a proposal was made that the new Klan confederation show its strength by burning crosses throughout the South on the last weekend in March. Newspapers in the South reported that on Saturday, March 26, more than 1,000 crosses were burned in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, and several other states. There was every indication that these cross burnings were a coordinated effort.

At the big U.S. Klan's meeting in a downtown Atlanta hotel on November 30, Davidson declared that the U.S. Klan would do anything possible to preserve segregation and, "If it takes a blackshot to keep the black race down, Klansmen will use it." News dispatches also quoted an Atlanta attorney, identified as the Klan legal advisor, as calling on Klansmen to burn the school if necessary to prevent integration. Reverend E. E. George, Baptist evangelist and chaplain to the U.S. Klan, was quoted in the press as saying, "If it takes saving the American way at the cost of our lives, then let's make that sacrifice." An Atlanta reporter wrote that the Klan speakers professed love for all races while shouting of "Jew boys" and "niggers," and that they talked of respect for law, order, and constituted authority, while shouting of using buckshot, burning schools, and sacrificing lives in the Klan's cause.

It does not take any special powers of observation to state flatly that the American South is in a period of acute racial tension and that such tension will increase. The progress of school desegregation has spread, however slowly, and the Deep South is now the area of crisis. If New Orleans is the crucial scene today, Atlanta may be the tension spot tomorrow, and another southern community may follow the day after. The continuing sit-in movement is another potent factor pointing towards new tension situations. Finally, to also add to the tension, there is the weapon of physical force, intimidation and violence, which has been employed throughout the South by the Klans and other extremists for the last six years. Hundreds of bombings, beatings, crossburnings and other threats have taken place since the Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954.

It ought to be noted that the present Klans have not gained any appreciable measure of public acceptance or respectability in the South, and that they are not likely to achieve the mass followings that they boasted of in the 1920's and '30's; they are still the targets of denunciation from responsible quarters and from reputable newspapers. But, it may well be that in the 1960's, public acceptance and respectability will not be an essential ingredient for Klan growth, Klan activity, or Klan violence.

THE JOHN BIRCH SOCIETY

It has been repeatedly said, "History repeats itself." Nowhere is this saying more true than in the annals of American history, which are filled with recurring themes of "right fundamentalism," or what is more popularly referred to as "radical right" movements. In the mid-1800's, it was the "Know Nothing" movement; in the early part of this century, it was the Ku Klux Klan movement; in the thirties, it was Coughlinism; and, in the fifties, it was McCarthyism. These movements are identified with conservatism and usually originate amidst conditions which promote frustration and dispair. There are a number of other characteristics which rightist groups also exhibit. First of all, these groups "tend to see complex problems simply and to define problems in terms of either-or choices."[1] Then, they are strict adherents to the conspiratorial theory of history, and thus they "tend to attribute every frustration to betrayal by traitors."[2] Furthermore, the rightists have a deeply-rooted distrust of those who lead the dominant social groups.[3] Moreover, they are skeptical of the democratic institutions and process, which amounts to "a distrust...of the people."[4] They reject those programs for handling social, economic, and international problems that the rest of society agrees upon. Finally, "to break the net of conspiracy, they advocate 'Direct Action...often through secret organizations, push-button pressure campaigns, and front groups."[5]

This discussion shall be concerned with a brief analysis of the John Birch Society, which is having a tremendous impact on contemporary America. We shall look at its purposes, leaders, organization, methodology, supporters and friends, and the criticisms that have been launched against it. We shall finally try to ascertain whether the Birch Society answers to the discription of the typical right-fundamentalist group given in the preceding paragraph.

> Be he truck driver or salesman, he is convinced that something is wrong with the big shots who run everything...He knows for sure that he is earnestly fighting Communism, so why should anyone but Communists be scared of him? At his chapter meetings, he throbs with good old foot-stomping patriotism when the phonograph bellows out "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." He gets a lift from the pledge of Allegiance and comes out strong on the "under God." He feels a healthy tweak of discipline when he stands up to applaud his leaders.
> He is a student in the most thorough indoctrination school this side of the Communist party.[6]

Who is he? He is a Bircher!

In December of 1958, retired candymaker Robert Welch decided to do something about his suspicions of Communist infiltration in the United States. He called together a group of eleven wealthy individuals, whose Indianapolis Conference gave birth to the John Birch Society, in honor of a young American who was killed by the Chinese Communists in 1945. Since its origin, the Birch Society has grown by tremendous leaps to become one of the best organized and potentially powerful groups in the United States.[7] By 1961, the Birch Society had chapters in at least 27 states and the District of Columbia.[8] Today, the Birchers may well have over 500 chapters and a membership of nearly 60,000.[9]

Founder Robert Welch is a resident of Belmont, Massachusetts, and, until his retirement in 1957, was vice-president of the Welch Candy Company. Welch, who is married and the father of two sons, has devoted himself full-time to fighting Communism since retiring. He travels constantly throughout the country, making speeches wherever a group will sponsor him and an audience will listen.[10] He also edits and publishes American Opinion, the monthy publication for the Society.

It is Welch's contention that "Communism is the deadly enemy of America... and many of the most important figures in American public life have abetted the Communist conspiracy for nearly three decades..."[11] Specifically, the Communists have infiltrated almost every branch of the national government; Chief Justice Earl Warren ought to be impeached, since he is one of the leading Communists in the country; and 7,000 of the country's Protestant clergymen are Communists or "Comsymps," Welch's coined term for Communist sympathizer.

The avowed purpose of the John Birch Society is to "promote less government, more responsibility, and a better world."[12] Therefore, the Society has committed itself to fight, throw back, and, finally, stop Communism in this country. This goal is to be achieved by acting in a manner similar to that of the Communists. Accordingly, the Society thrives on secrecy and authoritarianism. It does not hesitate to use unscrupulous methods if they advance the cause. In defending the use of questionable tactics, Welch has states:

> It is one of our many sorrows that, in fighting the evil forces which threaten our civilization, for us to be too civilized is unquestionably to be defeated. The Communists...want us to be too gentle, too respectable...(but) this is not a cream-puff war...and we do mean business every step of the way.[13]

The Welch doctrine has proved appealing to a varied segment of the population. Birchism's greatest strength is in the West and South. In the suburbs of Los Angeles, for example, "the JBS has become the new force to be reckoned with. Any candidate for GOP nomination must make peace on Birch terms or take on battle."[14] By and large, the Birch Society appeals primarily to well-to-do Republicans, and somewhat more to Catholics than to Protestants. This factor suggests that Birchism appeals most to those to whom economic conservatism and fear of Communism are crucial issues. According to the California Poll, Birch supporters are less willing to grant civil liberties to Communists, pacifists, and atheists than the opponents of the Birch Society; furthermore, they are less likely to insist that policemen have search warrants before entering a house and more likely to deny the right of public meetings than those opposed to the Society. It is to be noted that the Society has little appeal to the economically deprived, as it advocates economic conservatism.[15] California Attorney General Stanley Moss has described the Birch supporters as "wealthy businessmen, retired military officers, and little old ladies in tennis shoes."[16]

The group is neither anti-Negro nor anti-Semitic. However, the Birchers are strongly opposed to "forced integration," which they construe as a Communist plot.[17] In spite of this, the Birchers boast of four chapters with Negroes: two segregated chapters in the South and two integrated ones in the North.[18] On the question of anti-Semitism, Robert Welch is definitely opposed to it, but his opposition is not characteristic of all of the Society members. For example, Welch has the right to drop anyone from membership at his discretion. Of the two instances in which he has exercised this right, one involved a man who had taken over a certain local and was trying to convert it into a pit of anti-Semitism.[19]

The Birch Society is highly secretive; Welch even refuses to reveal its total membership and its actual income. Provisions of the chapter make Welch the absolute leader of the Society:

> There is no accounting of dues or contributions; there is no representative process or democratic system for selecting programs or defining positions; and Welch has the power (which he has used) to expel any member or chapter for reasons sufficient to him, without right of hearing or appeal on the expulsion.[20]

In the founding document of the Society, The Blue Book of the John Birch Society, Welch states:

> The John Birch Society is to be a monolithic body. A republican form of government or organization...lends itself too readily to infiltration, distortion, and disruption. The John Birch Society will operate under completely authoritative control at all levels...[21]

In addition to Welch, there are 28 full-time employees at Society headquarters in Belmont, Massachusetts. Around the country, there are nearly 100 full- or part-time volunteer coordinators or workers, who are apparently responsible for organization in specific parts of a state. The volunteer coordinators are, in turn, supervised by approximately 35 full-time salaried employees serving as "area coordinators." The area coordinators are responsible directly to Welch. Finally, there are the chapter leaders in their respective home towns, who assume responsibility for the daily operations of the Society.

The primary governing agency of the Society is the National Council, consisting of 26 Birchers appointed by Welch. The Council presently includes Lt. Gen. Charles Stone, USAF (Ret.); M. T. Phelps, former Chief Justice of the Arizona Supreme Court; Col. Laurence Bunker, retired former personal aide to Gen. MacArthur; Cola G. Parker, former head of the National Association of Manufacturers; Spruille Braden, former Ambassador to Brazil; and T. Coleman Andrews, Eisenhower's Internal Revenue Chief.[22] From this Council, four are chosen to serve with Welch on the Executive Committee. Further, a Committee of Endorsers, composed of individuals from the various states, may be considered as a part of the leadership of the Society. One should constantly bear in mind that the John Birch Society is organized from the top down and that the only real leader is Welch.

The organization of the Society resembles a pattern of concentric circles. The "inner circle" includes the National Council and the paid area and major coordinators and headquarters staff. The Committee of Endorsers and the full- and part-time volunteer coordinators compose the "second circle." The "outer circle" consists of the chapter leaders and the ordinary members of the Society in the local chapters.[23]

Membership dues are $24 annually for men and $12 for women. "Life membership" in the Home Chapter (Belmont) can be bought for a $1000 fee and carries with it the perogative of automatic membership in any local chapter. In addition, voluntary contributions from the members are solicited. There are no detailed financial reports available, but the following has been speculated:

> Welch can count on at least $30,000 to $50,000 a year from life members, not including any supplementary contributions they might make.
> The payroll and expenses for the nation-wide staff of approximately 63 men and women--plus his extensive printing and mailing operations--tend to support the impression that the John Birch Society is probably a $1,000,000 a year operation, or more.[24]

Several observers have commented that the Birch Society is unique in that it is the best organized right-wing extremist group in American history. Furthermore, the Society is adequately financed by dues on a continuing basis; hence, unlike many right-wing organizations, it is not entirely dependent upon the financial support of one, or a few wealthy individuals.

The operating guide of the Society is Welch's Blue Book of the John Birch Society. In addition, some of Welch's other writings are identified with the Society, e.g., The Life of John Birch, May God Forgive Us, and A Letter to the South on Segregation. The monthy Bulletin contains the agenda of activities. Welch personally edits American Opinion, a monthy publication, for the Society. Another one of Welch's writings, The Politician, which he insists is a "private letter," has been denied as being one of the Society's official works.

In The Politician, Welch levels the charges against several outstanding personalities which have made him such a notorious crusader. One authority has maintained that the book is to the Society "what Leninist dogma is to the Communist-front groups in Western nations--it is the ultimate truth held by the founder and his hard core, but it is too advanced and too powerful to present, as yet, to the 'masses' being led."[25]

The Politician supposedly names the Communists and "Comsymps" in this country. Perhaps the most startling accusation in the well-filled book is the one stating that "...Dwight Eisenhower is a dedicated, conscious agent of the Communist conspiracy."[26] Welch also stated that "the chances are very strong that Milton Eisenhower is actually Dwight Eisenhower's superior and bodd within the Communist Party."[27]

Welch further charges that Chief Justice Earl Warren "has taken the lead in converting this country to democracy," which, for Welch, is a "perennial fraud."[28] Hence, Welch has launched a massive campaign to impeach Warren, and, in 1961, the Birchers offered a $2300 prize for the best college essays on why Warren should be impeached. Welch also constantly circulates petitions demanding Warren's resignation.[29]

The Birchers have also included in their list of Communist conspirators ex-Secretary of State John F. Dulles, Nelson Rockefeller, Dag Hammarskjold, Arthur F. Burns (the head of the Council of Economic Advisors under Eisenhower), Franklin Roosevelt, and Harry Truman. Communist influences are supposedly very powerful in the educational system, the religious organizations, and the labor organizations. Welch further declares that "treason is widespread and rampant in our high army circles."[30]

The Society opposes a number of organizations and programs on the grounds that they are leaning toward Communism. Among these are Social Security, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Federal Reserve System, the National Labor Relations Act, reciprocal trade agreements, foreign aid, membership in the United Nations, the Americans for Democratic Action, the Supreme Court, the National Council of Churches, compulsory integration, government bonds, urban renewal projects, medicare, and the graduated income tax. By and large, the Birchers are fundamentally and temperamentally a group of "aginners."

A close look at contemporary America shows that it is being infiltrated by the Birchers and their doctrine. In 1961, Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker was relieved of his command when it was discovered that he "had established an 'anti-Communist' program that included the wholesale distribution of Birch Society literature."[31] In the same year, it was found that a Birch-sponsored filmstrip was being shown in at least a dozen military installations.[32]

The Birch Society is also beginning to feel its weight in political circles. It has claimed two Republican Congressmen as members: John Rousselot and Edgar Hiestand of California, both of whom lost re-election last year. It is now in control of the Young Republicans of California; and the Society made a determined, although unsuccessful, bid for control of the California Republican Assembly.[33] Senator Stephen Young reported the incident in which a school board member, whose only "crime" was that he permitted a meeting in him home at which the speaker tried to build sentiment for the abolition of the House Committe on Un-American Activities, lost his position as a result of the pressure exerted by the Birch Society's local chapter.[34]

These are but a few of the many instances in which the Birchers have used questionable tactics to achieve their goals. A prominent critic of the Society has written:

> Their tactics are the big lie and the wanton smear...Unable to impeach Chief Justice Warren, they are willing to settle, temporarily, for the head of a schoolteacher in Maine or a clergyman in Texas...(They) sell their followers the diagnosis that internal Communism is the disease which causes all ills; and then prescribe local vigilante action as the cure.[35]

Senator Young of Ohio goes on to describe the John Birch Society as "the most dangerous organization in America", because it "has introduced a new intelligence to the lunitic fringe by developing a formal structure more sophisticated than any other right-wing group."[36] President Kennedy has stated that "Birch officials... have not exercised judgment...based on the kind of challenges we face."[37] Life magazine observes:

> The basic dilemma of modern Whiggery is how to combat a monolithic Soviet enemy with an eighteenth century style minimum of government and budget. The Birch escape from this dilemma is to internalize a menace which is in fact predominately external; i.e., to find as many Communists at home as abroad.[38]

Attorney General Robert Kennedy has dismissed the Birch Society as "in the area of being humorous."[39]

Does, then, the John Birch Society exhibit those general features that characterize those historical "radical right" movements? Referring to the criteria set in the introduction of this paper, it is clear that the Birchers are inclined to simplify the complex problems of this country. The simple national problem is Communist infiltration. This infiltration is made possible by conspiracies on the part of those who lead the dominant social groups, such as Eisenhower, Warren, and Dulles. Furthermore, these traitors would transform our glorious republic into a democracy, which is only "a deceptive phrase, a perennial fraud, and a weapon of demagoguery." Such socio-economic measures as the Tennessee Valley Authority, Social Security, government bonds, et cetra are but manifestations of Communist infiltration and control and should rightly be rejected by every loyal, red-blooded American who desires his republic to remain a republic. Conclusively, the ideology of the Birchers indubitably conforms to the general traits of the right-wing movements in this country.

The future of the Birch Society is a matter of speculation. On the one hand, the successful organization and financial security of the Birchers would seem indicative of greater days ahead for the Society. There is the very real possibility that many Americans--Northerners, as well as Southerners--will be attracted to the Society as the federal government assumes more authority in granting to the Negro his civil liberties. However, the authoritarian character and control of the group by Welch, coupled with the extreme positions taken by Welch on issues which Americans generally approve, may have the effect of dealing a death blow to the Birch Society and its ideology. Only the future holds the answer.

A LIBERAL NEWSPAPER EDITOR

"The South is changing. How shall it live through the change?" This question was asked by a perceptive southern editor before the crucial 1954 Supreme Court School decision. Reporting and interpreting the change and playing a large role in determining how the South will live through that change is the job of the press and its editors. An analysis of press effectiveness in creating new attitudes, strengthening old ones, compounding chaos or guiding the way to reason requires a subjective approach; this is what I intend to utilize in my role as a liberal newspaper editor.

In my role, I do not intend to make any dogmatic statements in regard to liberalism; instead, I will define everything as relative. People have always evaluated liberalism as they feel it, and this is also my aim. Traditional liberalism is relative to various regions: What is liberal in the South is not necessarily liberal in the East, West, or North; what is liberal for Florida may not be liberal for Louisiana. My role deals also with giving you as true a conception as possible of a national newspaper in contrast to a southern newspaper and the basic ideals of a newspaper editor.

Liberalism is a cult, but it is the cult of the "real." In the South, it is the cult of Americanism, of courage and truth. It is destructive, yet it is preservative. The newspaper editor who finds himself in a liberal position on the racial question eats heartily at the table of basic human rights. He holds the belief that the Negro is a man; furthermore, he subscribes to the opinion that, since the Negro is an American, he should enjoy the privileges and immunities guaranteed by the American way, not necessarily by the Constitution, and, being further committed to the belief of freedom of expression, such an editor pledges allegiance to the tradition of liberalism - that is, to the freedom of man, to basic human dignity, and to a search for truth. His shepherd is his conscience, and, if he walks through the shadows of death, he fears no evil, for the kingdom is freedom, the power is truth, and the glory is the free expression of this truth.

The newspaper editor is in dire need of a vehicle, for without one he cannot be heard. This vehicle is a liberal newspaper--a paper that stands for objectivity, a paper that searches for truth. But, the concept of a newspaper is sometimes distorted to most because of the people who create it. However, the beginnings, development, and expansion of this vehicle of communication occured during brief periods of great liberal activity. The newspaper was conceived as a mode of free expression; it was to air all views and facts regardless of their meaning. This concept is carried to an utopian form when the newspaper is totally unfilled with biased news. But this ideal must be limited to fit the purpose of the paper, since what may be news to some is not news to others. Papers designed for a specific audience do not necessarily have to meet the same standards as do papers which are designed for the general public.

As a general rule, the liberal newspaper prints news as it occurs, saving editorials for those sections specifically designated for them. This doctrine breaks down when one human factor enters: what one person may consider important may be totally out of balance with the general scheme. This factor enters the picture as a form of editorializing on a newspaper. The liberal tries to minimize this in his mind by reporting the news as it occurs, without attempting to evaluate the significance, because human events have a tendency to editorialize themselves.

After the news is reported, the staff takes over and, without distortion, attempts to analyze and to comment on those events that it deems important. All of this work is done with the liberal principles in mind. So, what is the difference in this view and the conservative view? The answer lies in the position of the two: The liberal evaluates things or events as to whether they are good or bad by liberal principles; whereas the conservative tends to maintain that goodness lies in the maintenace of the status quo and to regard anything detrimental to the status quo as being bad. Without necessarily seeking an end to the status quo, the liberal evaluates anything that is detrimental to man as an evil that should be corrected.

By and large, all newspapers hope that their views will recieve at least grudging acceptance in their communities. Any other reaction would indicate that the editor has failed to persuade his readers or to provoke them to serious thought. Certainly, there is more anguish and confusion in the world than there should be, and, if we were better at our jobs, some of these troubles might be alleviated. We can only hope that there is less trouble than there would be if we were not around at all.

The concept of a southern newspaper is somewhat different. While it is true that a large majority of white-owned southern newspapers have opposed the 1954 decision, it is also true that a significan minority have supported the decision. However, when related issues are brought up, often the division is not nearly as one sided; for example, in the early days of the White Citizens' Council, a large number of newspapers opposed this organization with almost the same vigor as they had previously opposed the Ku Klux Klan. Interracial violence has been deplored almost universally by southern newspapers.

It should be noted, also, that all southern newspapers have given their readers a fuller coverage of the desegregation story than newspapers in other sections of the country. While much of this coverage has lacked objectivity and while there has been a general timidity among many editors to cover the speeches and activities of desegregationists, no one who has travelled widely throughout the South since 1954 can doubt that the southern newspaper reader is being exposed to more news about desegregation than his counterpart in the North.

Because there is such a wide range in the handling of racial news by various southern newspapers, a survey was taken of six southern newspapers, which shows just how the papers reported, edited, headlined, and displayed the news dealing with racial incidents: (1) It is obvious to even the casual reader that a great amount of space is being given to racial news. (2) Racial conflict still gets greater coverage than racial cooperation, for both the newspaper and its readers still consider conflict more newsworthy and more readable than lack of conflict. (3) Chief source of the news is the wire service, with some slight effort to add local interviews or tie-ins when pertinent. Mews may be made more or less sensational by the way that wire service stories are cut or by the way headlines are placed above the story. (4) Southern newspapers are not taking advantage of their opportunity to secure color and human interest stories, in addition to the principle stories of an event from the wire service. (5) Southern newspapers are still unaware of the effect some of their racial stories may have on readers in other countries. (6) A story of racial news may be pushed out of place by an important local story, such as the session of a state legislature or the running of a Kentucky Derby. (7) The southern newspapers are conforming more closely to the accepted standards of good journalism than the atmosphere of the times or the changes of their critics would indicate. (8) Attentive reading of a Negro newspaper in the South would give southern readers a very different conception of Negro attitudes and emotions. (9) By-line stories by a newspaper's Washington correspondent or of a local reporter sent to cover a nearby racial news event are more likely to show bias than the principal story from the wire services. In short, the southern newspapers are doing a better job of giving their readers the facts about racial events than in revealing their meaning and interpreting the view-points of the people involved.

The interpretation of facts and perspectives is the responsibility of the editorial staff. In the liberal newspaper, this responsibility should be handled in the sphere of the liberal tradition, which is objective and which leads us to wonder about the position of the editor of a liberal southern newspaper. He can be called liberal only when his thought is guided by the liberal ideals. These ideals demand the correct statement of fact and an analysis of a situation within the confinement of those facts. The commentary must then be guided by the liberal traditions. In the South, the liberal must pursue a course that leads directly to total liberation of American citizens who happen to be Negroes. His newspaper must first fit the concept of A Newspaper; it must not be an excuse, but a paper; it must not editorialize on the newspaper; it must not report as fact an opinion held by the paper, but it must report the news as it occurs. When such standards are upheld, the liberal newspaper editor can then use his paper to further the liberal cause, which, in this case, is the full equality of the Negro. In doing so, his paper becomes a cause--a cause for the truth. The liberal newspaper editor realizes this and, in effect, pursues a never ending quest for this truth, no matter where it exists or whatever is weakened by this truth.

Thus, in Gainesville, Georgia, Sylvan Meyer, the Georgia-born editor of the Daily Times, has won awards for his forthright editorials on various aspects of the desegregation question. "I have long felt," he said not long ago, "that a newspaper editor needs a set of standards to which he can refer on racial issues. You ought to be able, for example, to reduce your position in every case to some fundamental belief on which most people agree." Among Meyer's self-imposed standards are freedom of speech, equality under the law, freedom of choice, local self-determination, andopen communications between the races. He has gone even further to make his newspaper conform with his own standards for fairness: he has dropped the conventional southern designation of Negroes in news stories "except where it is an integral part of the story." Unlike most southern newspapers, the Times does not segregate white and Negro obituaries. The results are a healthy, lively newspaper in a city whose commissioners have appointed two Negroes to the local board of education since the 1954 decision.

In other cities, other newspapers and other editors have taken similar stands. In Little Rock, Arkansas, Harry S. Ashmore, executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette, has kept up a steady drumbeat for compliance with "the law of the land." In Greenville, Mississippi, where Hodding Carter's Delta Democrat-Times has conducted a running battle with the Citizens' Council and has described the Supreme Court's decree and inevitable one, editorial positions have been taken against abolishing the public school system and favoring the improvement of all schools in the state. A square-cut, powerful Georgian by the name of Ralph McGill has long been respected as one of the most forthright and liberal editors. His editorials in the Atlanta Constitution, his commitment to the improvement of race relations, his belief that his place is in the South is evidence of his integrity.

It has been said that a liberal newspaper editor never stops his quest for truth; he does not editorialize on the news except in places clearly designed for editorials; he lets the news edit itself, and, when he does editorialize, it is within the concepts of liberalism. In short, the liberal newspaper editor wages a relentless battle against tyranny over man's mind and body.

THE NEGRO PROTEST-INTELLECTUAL

Mr. President, Miss Chairman, and Kiwanians, it is indeed a privilege to be asked to speak to you and to share with you some of my feelings on this occasion of "Brotherhood Week." I thank you for this opportunity, for I cannot help thinking that it is a rare occasion when a Negro meets with you. But why is this so? Here you are, the civic leaders of Potropolis, a city of 100,000 with a Negro population comprising 30 per cent of your citizenry. Is it that there are no Negroes who meet your high and noble qualifications for membership? or is it that you have had no Negro civic leaders? Well, whatever the reason, it is now Brotherhood Week. What does it mean to you? Are you doing anything particularly brotherly this week, or are you just having someone speak about it? I am not accusing you, for I certainly do not know your club's program. Frankly, I think that Brotherhood Week is a farce. Maybe there is a little more talk about who our brother is, but, as far as getting to know him and what we can do for him, there is not much being done. As trite as it might sound, Brotherhood Week ought to be every week; therefore, why have one, if we're not going to do anything about it?

Since I'm not a citizen of your community, I can imagine the question in your minds, "Where are you from?" Well, it really does not matter, because I'm an outsider to you, someone who has ideas different from those of the natives. Of course, if the outsider is born, reared, or even a temporary resident from north of the Mason-Dixon Line, the suspicions are confirmed. But, for the sake of your questioning minds, I was born, reared, and educated in Alabama. I know "the situation;" I have borne the brunt of the "Negro problem" far more acutely than any of you. But I still don't understand the stupid, lazy, good-for-nothing niggers that you have to cope with right here. If only the Negroes around here were like me--somewhat educated, wearing a suit, talking to you--you might change your minds. However, in your terms, my family is exactly like the Negroes that you right here in Potropolis.

Mr White introduced me as a "protest intellectual," and, by the end of my talk, he will probably want to retract the statement and to call me a "bitter protester." Hence, at the beginning, I will help him save face by saying that I am not an intellectual, a protester, yes, but an intellectual, no. In the first place, I'm not any more intelligent than a lot of my friends, and, in the second place, an intellectual connotes a person who is completely rational and in control of his emotions while enduring the injustices of every day life. How any Negro can be this way, I cannot understand. How any Negro can walk in a demonstration calmly observing the nonviolent principles of turning the other three cheeks, while violent hecklers spit, slap, kick or whatever they might want to do, I cannot understand. Yet these saints always have an open ear and an understanding mind ready to hear what these hecklers might say in any attempt at reconciliation. Well, I'm sick of turning my other three cheeks--I've been forced to do that all of my life, and I just can't endure it any more.

Now, gentlemen, don't misunderstand and think that I'm not a sympathizer with these people; if they can protest in this self-inflicting way, more power to them! But, Martin Luther King, Jr., might call me impotent in my protest. He might say that I am too sensitive and so overcome by the situation that I can't achieve the way that he does. I can only feel and know the situation, participate and observe, and relate to you and to others my feelings. If only I could do more and do so in other ways--but, I cannot!

Yet, on the other hand, I cannot agree with the Black Nationalists' method either. For instance, the Black Muslims seem to think that they can reject our entire past existence in this country. To a certain degree, all of us Negroes want the same thing that the Black Muslims do. We all want to shake off the present day shackles which originated in the past and which keep us from being true Americans; it is this part of the history books which we want to erase because it binds us today. These shackles affect our personality--how could it help but to do that? You expect us not to be marred by those things which you inflicted upon our ancestors; but that is not even true. You might say that you want us to pull ourselves up by our bootstraps and to be equal to you, which might be wonderful assuming that we want to, but you don't want that either. You really want us to remain scarred so that we can be as low and as inferior to you as possible and for as long as possible. You try to delude yourselves and to say that this isn't so; but, I know it is. Too long have we Negroes been kicked in the teeth and far worse whenever we try to climb your ladder of opportunity; this is the past of all Negroes, whether they are Black Muslims or Uncle Toms, want erased, because it still prevails and influences us today. Neither blacks nor whites can live apart from each other as they would like to think.

However, what the poor Black Muslims don't realize is that we cannot eradicate our past nor can we eliminate that part of the past of which we Negroes are proud--our history of protest. We began our protest the minute that we heard that slave traders wanted to make us captives; in fact, the descendants of some of the first protesters are still in Africa, while some of the other protesters are on the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean, those who were on that first ship bound towards this wonderful country of wealth, opportunity, and freedom. Protesting has continued to this day, and it will continue for many years to come. What you white folks can't realize is that this is the story of every single Negro in the United States since 1619. It's not just the cry of a new breed of people, the New Negro of 1963; it's the demand of every Negro American. The only difference today is that you are finally beginning to hear us. Before, if we protested verbally or physically, you slapped us in the mouth, kicked us down, or killed us--heaven knows a lot of us wouldn't take that risk. But, finally, you have to concede to the fact that we are saying something, which some of you still won't grant. Finally, we're able to stand up and make a noise, and that vibration is finally penetrating into your minds. You don't know what we're actually saying, but at least you know that we're speaking and now you have to listen. You could turn us off before, like a radio, but now you have lost that privilege, and some of you are shaking in your boots, having minute tastes of what we Negroes have feared for 350 years. But you'll never know that fear the way we have felt it, because we have known fear for no just reason. If you ever do know this fear as acutely as we Negroes have, then there will be justification. However, I seriously doubt that you will ever have to know this fear as poignantly as we have, because we Negroes have become too whitehearted and soft-hearted. We have had to accept you throughout our history every minute of our lives; we have had no choice.

Love is completely out of the question. We can't love you because you won't let us; in fact, I have very serious doubts whether you even know what it means to love--brotherly love, anyway--if some little external factor or physical difference can halt your love for a person. Love certainly penetrates the outside surfaces, but you have the audacity to say that you love some Negroes, that you have a good friend who is a Negro. Well, what sort of relation is this friend to you? Is she dear ole Bessie, your cook, or is it John, who cleans your office. Sure, you love them and they love you. Well, you're only fooling yourself. It may seem that they love you because they have no other choice, that is, if they want to keep their jobs. We Negroes know a heck of a lot more about you than you do about us. We can see you as you really are, since you won't even see yourselves. By chance, if you do see your real selves through some action on our part, you're angry with us. As for your seeing us as we really are, first of all, you will not let us really expose our personalities, and, second of all, you don't give us credit for having a complex personality whose depths can be plumbed. For instance, we Negroes never let ourselves believe in the American dream of success or of your ideals of equality and freedom. We knew that they weren't true when we were denied these myths, or when we saw certain ones of you withholding these ideals from other white people. You see, we Negroes do not have such a tremendous gap between our ideals and our realistic practices as you whites do, which is why we have a much more realistic outlook on life than you do.

But, getting back to the love you show for your so-called "Negro friends," I know that you can tell me of many incidents wherein you showed your love, even beyond the call of duty. Sure, you bailed dear old John out of jail when he was arrested for being drunk, and maybe you even helped Bessie with her doctor bills. No, you certainly did not have to do this, but you did, you wonderful, moral, upstanding people. Well, I don't call it love. I call it paternalism or expiation for guilt. Guilt? You feel guilt? Maybe it is subconscious, but I think it is existent. Even though you don't realize it, you feel guilt for helping to perpetuate this cruel system of segregation and deprivation. By helping those who are most obviously oppressed, it dispels any feelings of remorse which might creep into your conscious minds. You are an aid and accomplice to this system by allowing it to continue. No, you aren't half as guilty as your ancestors who owned slaves--though I am not quite sure that I'll agree. I don't care how liberal you are, unless you're doing what you personally can to the utmost of your abilities, you are allowing this system to perpetuate itself.

Yes, I have heard that we are all victims of southern prejudice. Only too well do I know what it means to be the victim of this prejudice! But you poor white people, prejudice has been handed down from generation to generation, and you just can't seem to do anything about it. You're the victim! Perhaps you blatantly admit the fact or maybe you are proud of it, but I will tell you that your day of reckoning is coming when you are going to be forced out of this attitude. Why don't you do something about it? Why don't you look inside of yourselves, see why you are prejudiced and what you can do about it? I'll guarantee you that if you do, you'll grow! Maybe some of you don't even realize that you are prejudiced. You're only deluding yourself; you think morally and rationally one way, but, somehow, emotionally you act another way. Maybe you're only somewhat prejudiced and you're trying to overcome this. Nothing is as sickening to me as the person who has to prove that he is a "good egg" about the racial situation--coming to sit beside me on the bus on a hot day when practically all of the other seats are vacant, sitting and nervously babbling and very carefully watching what he says so that he will not slip and offend me because of my race. He cannot eliminate the barrier within himself, and he cannot admit that the barrier is still within. He is so afraid that I will think that he is discriminating against me because of my race, rather than because of my personality or the fact that we do not even know each other. So, to further prove himself, he tells me about his Negro friends, and he cannot understand why I don't know every single Negro in the community.

So you're prejudiced; admit it and get on with doing something about it. Sure, you will be aware of guilt, but look at yourself as you really are and find out why you have been prejudiced. You are the victim of our system, and, once you realize your prejudice, you can begin to work on it. Get to really know some Negroes and discover what their feelings are. Just because things have always been a certain way does not mean that they will remain on a status quo basis.

It has always been a mystery to me how you can love your God, whom I assume to be the same as my God, and not love your fellow man. How can you keep Negroes out of your churches and not be concerned with his deprivation of opportunity, if the same God created all men? Does He not ask you to love your fellow man? Does He not ask you to at least allow your fellow man to worship with you? Of course, I am assuming the Negro to be your fellow man or your brother. Do you have a monopoly on Him? Maybe God is a good fellow, but He just doesn't understand the nature of these people who may or may not want to worship with you. In fact, how can you be sure these people really want to worship, especially if they come in small groups? Why they might just want to prove a point--that they can get in. Or, perhaps these people aren't the middle class lovelies that all the members are. Or, maybe you don't really mind, it is just that dear old Mr. Van Landingham won't continue to pledge $8,000 a year if we let some Negroes worship with us. But maybe I'm assuming too much. I assume that you rationalize the fact that Negroes are not admitted to your churches.

I have often heard it explained that Christians cannot correlate Christianity with the Negro situation. This reason is the exception, for things have always been this way. If a minister is prejudiced and he doesn't do anyting about it, what can you expect from the congregation? Somehow God just doesn't seem to ask brotherly love for the Negroes. Now it might be another matter if it's an African Negro; you want to help them to gain independence, you send contributions to help them better their living conditions, and, if an African comes to speak at the church, your wife is dying to have him stay in your home, though she has to be told that he's an African before she can distinguish him from other Negroes.

I guess that by now you think that you know my feelings. But, I have not shared them with you; I have tried to let you see yourselves as a Negro see you. Well, I'll tell you how all Negroes feel: All Negroes at one time or another hate white people. Now, you think that is unjustified. How can we help it when you deny us participation in American life as it is for you? The nasty and cruel things that you say and do to us when we are defenseless, so that we begin to hate ourselves if we hear or feel it long enough. You continue to lynch us, not in the crude way you did prior to 1959, but in more sophisticated ways. You might do it legally (which is to say that the law is on your side), in the courtroom, or at the polls. Economically you lynch us because we are supposedly not qualified for the jobs of civil service, etc.; you keep our men in menial or feminine low-paying jobs. You will not grant us the rights guaranteed by our Constitution. Then, there are some rights you deny us which are not civil rights--they are not even human rights--they are not more than animal rights. There is not an animal in this country which cannot eat, sleep, and go to the bathroom wilfully. How do I tell my children that there are certain limits which they cannot go beyond whereas other children can? How do I explain my nervousness to the children when they innocently buck those limits. I want them to be protected from the horrors I knew, yet my parents were the same way. They did not want me hurt, but I, being young and naive, could not understand. No, I could not understand until I had my own children. How do I tell my children why so many of their friends' parents are separated or not living with them? These are the reasons we hate you white people; because we can see no other reason for all these injustices and cruelties, we hate you. And I dare ask, are we unjustified? But you know, I pity you more--you who are the anesthetizedly prejudiced, you who are incapable of doing anything about the way things are and have been and will be in the future. I wonder how you tell your child when you walk out of church that what the preacher said was fine and good, but in reality we do otherwise. Your children must be confused; and, when they mature, they continue to be confused but they begin to delude themselves about their confusion. No, I cannot hate you whites, at least most of you, any longer.

If I continued to hate you, I would be hindered from many relations I might be able to have with you, opportunities to get to know myself and yourselves better. I would no longer be able to observe the situation very realistically, since I could not participate in it. How I pity you in your ignorance of yourselves and in your not being able to accept love.

I guess by now the psychologists in the group might be thinking that I am projecting my own guilt to you white people. Maybe subconsciously, for I do feel some guilt in view of the demonstrators' actions and in view of the strength of the Black Muslims' convictions. Maybe outwardly I am not contributing as much as they are to the situation, but I can only do what I feel that I can.

What I have been saying is what all Negroes feel, to a greater or lesser degree. We are all Americans and love this country. What I said about the inescapability of our past is also true of our own experiences and personalities; we cannot flee those parts of ourselves which we most avidly rebel. The eminent James Baldwin realized this very acutely after he fled to Paris to try to escape the race situation; he finally realized that he could not escape that part of himself and returned to America. That part of ourselves against which we rebel the most is the part of our personality which is the most incorporated in us, and we cannot flee from this because we cannot get away from ourselves. We have to accept these things as best we can and then begin to do something about them.

There is one last misconception that I think you whites have. You seem to think you are holding all sorts of little goodies which we Negroes want, maybe it is to marry your daughter or to embrace the mythical ideals you hold true. But, we don't want these wonderful gifts you seem to think that only you can give. In the first place, we have a more realistic outlook of what these things really are; secondly, we are going to gain certain things whether you want to give them or not. The only thing you white people have that we Negroes really want is power--the power which has kept us from participating in the American way of life. Sooner or later, you are going to lose this power, which seems to be based on some wonderful quality you possess--perhaps nothing more than your fair skin. Yes, some day we Negroes will have this power in so much as it affects us personally and individually. Sure, you can help draw out that time so that your so-called security is preserved and as long as we Negroes do not pose a threat to you. But, month by month, you see that we are slowly gaining this power of self-determination. You are forced into this recognition.

But why must this be done by force? Can it not be done by brotherly concern on the part of each of us? I doubt it seriously, but, if it could, how happy we all would be. If we could try to know each other, then maybe we could be concerned and, possibly, even love our fellow men. But to love those who are different requires a trust, which neither of us has for the other. It also involves a risk and possibly a threat which neither of us wants to take. But, for that risk, we will grow. We are all in this predicament together, some more than others; we are all involved and we cannot escape that fact.

Well, here it is Brotherhood Week. What are we going to do about it--talk a little while? What are we going to do this week and the days to come? Do you want to put away brotherhood until next year, like our Christmas decorations? Well, I know one thing, we both need each other to make America what we would like for it to be; all I can say is, "Know your brother, and your love will set you free."

For Immediate Release

NEW YORK, Sept. 12 -- Two attorneys of the American Jewish Congress have flown to Plaquemine, La. to help map legal strategy for the Congress of Racial Equality in its demonstrations against segregation in the Mississippi River delta town.

Marvin Karpatkin, Chairman of the Commission on Law and Social Action of the American Jewish Congress New York Metropolitan Council, and Leo Pfeffer, general counsel of the Jewish Congress, will meet with CORE attorneys in Plaquemine tomorrow (Friday) to plan the next legal moves in the case.

The two lawyers responded to an appeal by Carl Rachlin, general counsel of CORE, for help in CORE's current litigation in the Federal District Court in Louisiana. Judge E. Gordon West is expected to issue a permanent injunction before Sept. 20 prohibiting anti-segregation meetings, street demonstrations and similar activities by CORE in Plaquemine. A temporary restraining order, issued by Judge West Sept. 1, is still in effect.

Pro-Segregation Forces Invoking Anti-Ku Klux Klan Law

The case is considered particularly significant because it is believed to mark the first time that pro-segregation forces in the South have invoked a Federal civil rights statute to block anti-segregation demonstrations.

In seeking the permanent injunction halting CORE demonstrations, Plaquemine and Iberville Parish authorities cited Title 42, Section 1985 of the U.S. Code, which covers "conspiracy to interfere with civil rights." This statute, which dates from 1871, was originally aimed at preventing Ku Klux Klan raids and other anti-Negro actions during the Reconstruction days following the Civil War.

Oral argument on the premanent injunction took place Sept. 9 and 10. Judge West reserved decision and promised to issue a ruling on or before Sept. 20.

MORE

At the hearing, police and civil authorities in Plaquemine argued that the effect of the CORE demonstrations was to deny the resident of Iberville Parish the equal protection of the laws as guaranteed under the Fourteenth Amendment. Their motion seeking a permanent injunction also said the demonstrations had resulted in "denying their civil rights" as protected under the 1871 statute.

The statute declares unlawful the action of two or more persons who "conspire or go in disguise on the highway or on the premises of another, for the purpose of depriving...any person or class of persons of the equal protection of the laws."

Signing the application for the restraining order were C.A. Griffin, Jr., Sheriff of Iberville Parish, Dennis Songy, Chief of Police of Plaquemine; Charles P. Schnebelen, Mayor of Plaquemine; and Edward T. Supple, President of the Iberville Parish Police Jury.

Appeal to U.S. Supreme Court in Prospect

Mr. Karpatkin and Mr. Pfeffer will work closely with four Negro lawyers who have ben representing CORE in the case. They are Robert F. Collins, Nils R. Douglas and Lolis K. Elie of the firm of Collins, Douglas and Elie in New Orleans and Murphy Bell of Baton Rouge.

When the expected injunction against CORE is issued by Judge West an appeal to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, which sits in New Orleans, will be taken. Should this appeal be denied, the attorneys have indicated they will then ask the U.S. Supreme Court to set aside the injunction against CORE.

Last month the American Jewish Congress formed a panel of volunteer attorneys to provide free legal counsel for persons brought before the courts on charges arising out of anti-discrimination actions

Demonstrations Began Aug. 19

The anti-desegregation demonstrations in Plaquemine have been le by James Farmer, national director of CORE. On Sept. 3 Mr. Farmer wa convicted on charges of disturbing the peace and obstructing streets and sidewalks. Each conviction carries a sentence of $100 fine and 30 days in jail. He has been released on $300 bond, pending appeal.

Two days earlier -- on Sept. 1 -- State troopers on horseback and Sheriff's deputies dispersed a crowd of 1,000 Negro demonstrators with tear gas and fire hoses. Six Negro ministers were arrested. Police lobbed tear gas bombs into the sanctuary of the Plymouth Rock Baptist Church.

Mr. Farmer charged that police brutality in Plaquemine was "an outrage to the sense of decency." He said he had seen horses allowed to trample and kick children.

The first court order barring CORE demonstrations in Plaquemine was obtained by local officials on Aug. 22. That order was stayed or Aug. 29 by a decision of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, which scheduled the the Sept. 9 hearing. On Sept. 1, however, a new temporary restraining order was issued by Judge West. The order was served on the Negro leaders moments after the start of a major demonstration that evening. After an orderly 20-minute march, the CORE demonstrators were dispersed by troopers on horseback and deputies on foot firing tear gas.

Some 400 persons have been arrested in Plaquemine since civil rights demonstrations began there on the night of Aug. 19, when policemen used tear gas to break up bands of Negroes marching on City Hall. The CORE demonstrations are in support of Negro demands for a biracial council and for inclusion of two Negro communities in Plaquemine proper.

REPORT ON BIRMINGHAM

SEPT. 20, 1963

Return to Research

DEAR FELLOW-HELPER,

Many months have passed since I wrote you about the progress of the Committee. The reason is that the work load has become so heavy, particularly since The Demonstrations last Spring, that it is impossible to keep up with all of the rights violations.

The savage, brutal, murderous, and ungodly bombing of Sixteenth Street Baptist Church on Sunday morning Sept. 14, has revealed to the whole world the evil of racism. Those few terrifying moments of the blast said what we have been trying to say to the nation for years, that there exists in Alabama the most unconscionable disregard for man and God on the part of some. If white supremacy consists in the wanton and brutal destruction of worshippers of God in the very house of worship, then I must confess that the church bombers are the most supreme murderers and cowards the world has ever seen. Only the diseased mind can aspire to reach such depths.

On the morning of the bombing I stood across the street from the church behind carbine bearing policemen and watched as the covered bodies were placed into waiting ambulances. Policemen drove a small crowd off the street. I got on a nearby porch. Women seeing the covered bodies being brought from the church cried and screamed without restraint. I could not bring my mind to believe what my eyes saw. It still seems like a tale from some distant land where people know nothing about freedom and democracy.

On Sept. 19, 1963 I sent a telegram to President Kennedy cataloging some of the horrible incidents which have afflicted and continue to afflict our city and our citizens. I share that list with you.

1. March, 1963 - a Negro home destroyed by a bomb.
2. May 11, 1963 - the A. G. Gaston Motel bombed.
3. May 11, 1963 - the home of Rev. A. D. King bombed.
4. August 14, 1963 - a tear gas bomb dropped in Loveman's Department Store following desegregation of eating facilities.
5. August 20, 1963 - the bombing of attorney Arthur Shores' home.
6. Sept. 4, 1963 - the second bombing of Arthur Shores' home, injuring his wife.
7. Sept. 7, 1963 - the fire-bombing of the home of Dr. A. G. Gaston.
8. Sept. 15, 1963 - the bombing of Sixteenth Street Baptist Church, taking the lives of four girls and injuring several.
9. June 27, 1963 - the fatal shooting of Blain Gordon Jr. (16), a mentally ill youth, by Birmingham policemen.
10. August, 1963 - the fatal shooting of David Scott by a Birmingham policeman.
11. Sept. 4, 1963 - the fatal shooting of John Coley (20) by Birmingham police following the second bombing of attorney Shores' home.
12. Sept. 15, 1963 - the fatal shooting of Johnnie Robinson (16) by Birmingham police following the bombing of Sixteenth Street Baptist Church.
13. Sept. 7, 1963 - the shooting of Charles Gray by Birmingham police.
14. Sept. 5, 1963 - the shooting of a mentally ill youth Sylvester Alexander by Birmingham police.
15. Sept. 4, 1963 - the shooting of Lyman Thomas, who was near John Coley when he was killed by Birmingham police.
16. Sept. 15, 1963 - the shooting of Billy Charles by Birmingham police following the bombing of Sixteenth Street Baptist Church.
17. Sept. 15, 1963 - the beating of Ben Bolden on Sunday night by Birmingham police.
18. Sept. 15, 1963 - the injuring of George Benjamin Sr. on Sunday night by Birmingham police.
19. Sept. 15, 1963 - the shooting in the head of Charles Lane by State Troopers.
20. Sept. 15, 1963 - the firing of 12 shots into the home of Francis Garrett by Birmingham police attempting to make people get off the street and into houses.

Your continued interest and support is again solicited.

Sincerely yours,

Rev. C. Herbert Oliver

No. 31 Summer 1963

Plenary Session is Biggest, One of Best

By all odds the best attended and most representative and by general consensus one of the most stimulating and productive Plenary Sessions in the history of the NCRAC was held last June 27–30 at the Shelburne Hotel in Atlantic City.

Some 250 delegates from all the six national member organizations and most of the member community councils resisted the blandishments of sand, surf, and salubrious sea breezes for four days of intensive deliberations on currently pressing community relations problems.

The program—which was arranged by an Agenda Committee under the chairmanship of Herbert A. Leland, past chairman of the San Francisco Jewish Community Relations Council and an NCRAC vice chairman—included addresses by outstanding authorities, panel discussions, workshops, reports, and—above all—exchanges of experiences and views among the delegates, which is the unique contribution of the NCRAC process to the common cause of better Jewish community relations.

As soon as possible, a complete summary of the proceedings will be prepared from the verbatim transcript of the Session. Meanwhile, this issue of IN THE COMMON CAUSE presents some of the highlights.

The American Dilemma One Hundred Years After Emancipation

Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was the invited speaker at a major session. A hushed and attentive audience of delegates and observers heard him review the harsh discriminations and oppressions under which American Negroes have lived and assert the justice and rightness of their demands for equality without further delay.

Mr. Wilkins termed the civil rights program proposed by the National Administration the most far-reaching ever advanced by a President. But he added that even that program was inadequate to the needs of the present and warned that Negro frustration and impatience might burst the restraints under which they have been largely kept by responsible leadership if the President's program failed of enactment.

Negro citizens, said Mr. Wilkins, "are united as never before. Their organizations of every type in every section of the country are squarely and firmly for unrelenting action to secure the whole package of freedom. They will continue to demonstrate locally and nationally, until their goals are achieved. Anyone who interprets a difference of opinion here and there as a major split in Negro ranks is making a grave error."

"I hope," Mr. Wilkins concluded, "that the Negro is going to act wisely, to use some statesmanship in this struggle....I hope he is going to assume his obligations as a citizen. I hope that, on the long road ahead, Negroes will – as the Jewish group has done – make contributions to the arts, to science, to the professions, to social movements... The Negro now looks to understanding. And, if he does not get it, I predict that his faith in the structure of justice will be very much shaken.

"We can't have him losing faith in democracy. We can't have him offering overt or subtle assistance to the enemies of freedom. It is my concern to see that he gets the justice he seeks, so that his faith will result in the protection not only of him but of all of us."

Chairman of the session at which Mr. Wilkins spoke was Aaron Goldman, NCRAC Vice Chairman and Past President of the Jewish Community Council of Greater Washington.

PRES. KENNEDY SENDS MESSAGE

A message from President John F. Kennedy, who was in Europe at the time, was transmitted through the White House by telegraph to Chairman Lewis H. Weinstein at the Shelburne Hotel. The President sent his "warmest personal good wishes" to Mr. Weinstein and observed that the "national and local member organizations of the NCRAC have been working to insure a better life for all Americans.

"Your motto, 'in the common cause' was never more timely than it is now, and I commend your devotion to this objective," the President said.

Five Communities Join, Roster Now Sixty-Nine

The list of Jewish community relations councils affiliated with the NCRAC rose to sixty-nine with the admission of five new member councils by action of the Plenary Session as its first order of business. The new members are:

- Jewish Community Council of Birmingham, Ala.
- Jewish Community Council of Dayton, Ohio
- Jewish Federation of Palm Beach County, Fla.
- Jewish Community Council of the Plainfields, N.J.
- Community Relations Committee of the Jewish Welfare Federation of Portland, Ore.

Workshops Discuss Role of CRCs in Dealing with Dilemma of Racial Equality

Following the NAACP leader's address, the delegates gathered in three concurrent workshop groups, according to the size of the Jewish population in their respective communities, to consider the role of Jewish community relations agencies in helping to resolve the dilemma in civil rights.

The large cities workshop had as chairman Jordan C. Band, chairman of the NCRAC Committee on Work with Labor, Veterans and Other Special Groups and chairman of the Community Relations Committee of the Cleveland Jewish Community Federation; and, as discussant, Robert K. Greenfield, president of the Jewish Community Relations Council of Greater Philadelphia.

The intermediate cities workshop was under the chairmanship of Ralph Lockwood, of the Bridgeport Jewish Community Council's Community Relations Committee; discussant in that workshop was Alexander W. Erlen, community coordinator of the Conference of Jewish Organizations of Louisville, Ky.

The small cities workshop had Dan May, past president of the Nashville Jewish Community Council, as chairman; and Peter Marcuse, past chairman of the Community Relations Committee of the Waterbury (Conn.) Federation, as discussant.

Conclusions and recommendations of the workshops were synthesized in a report submitted to the Plenary Session the following day by Stanley J. Winkelman, past president of the Jewish Community Council of Metropolitan Detroit. Mortimer Brenner, of the Brooklyn Jewish Community Council who is NCRAC co-chairman of the Joint Advisory Committee of the Synagogue Council of America and NCRAC, was chairman of this report session. Copies of the report may be had upon request.

The report said that "Jews have been deeply moved by the passionate determination of Negroes to secure justice and dignity and equality of treatment; and the dramatization of the wrongs and denials imposed on Negroes, evoking echoes of Jewish experience of oppression and discrimination, has aroused and deepened Jewish sympathies."

Jewish communal leadership in many places has developed a sense of urgency about the problem, Mr. Winkelman reported, adding that this sense of urgency seems related directly to the volume and intensity of Negro demonstrations and other direct actions. A wide gap, he stressed, exists between the Jewish leadership's recognition of the urgent need for Jewish involvement and the relative apathy and remoteness of Jews generally.

"There was widespread agreement in all three workshops," he reported, "that a very high priority should be given by CRCs to closing this gap through an intensive program of internal Jewish education, involving all the agencies and institutions of the Jewish community, on the broadest possible front."

Jewish community relations councils cannot remain aloof from demonstrations and other direct actions in behalf of Negro rights, but must identify with them, Mr. Winkelman reported the workshops had agreed. While retaining their independence of judgment as to what strategies and tactics are advisable, Jewish community relations agencies should "so act as to make clear their involvement in the struggle for equal rights . . . through participation in properly organized activities . . . Individual Jews should be encouraged to participate more generally than the organized community, per se."

It was also agreed in the workshops, Mr. Winkelman reported, that all Jewish agencies and institutions should scrupulously practice equality in all their operations; and that Jewish community relations agencies have an obligation to assist and counsel such agencies and institutions and also individual Jewish merchants, builders, realtors and others in pursuing policies of racial equality.

Resolutions Range Over Many Issues

The Plenary Session adopted resolutions setting out the consensus of the member organizations on most of the current issues before the field. The resolutions were drawn up by the Resolutions Committee, Louis Feinmark of New Haven, chairman, over a period of weeks prior to the Plenary Session, refined in the course of intensive late hour meetings of the committee during the Session, and further revised in some cases by action on the Plenum floor. Full texts are available on request. Briefly summarized, they:

- Appealed to "the conscience of the world to the end of bringing about the elimination of the injustices and inequities suffered by Soviet Jewry."
- Called for intensified efforts, including "direct involvement of our constituencies" in the Negro's struggle for equal rights.
- Urged Congress to enact President Kennedy's civil rights program "without delay and without weakening amendments"; and called on the President to issue an executive order to assure non-discrimination in all federal programs and services and those subsidized by the federal government.
- Called for a firm Middle East policy by our government that "will bring an end to boycotts, blockades and belligerence," and for "firm security guarantees that will deter and prevent any form of aggression," as well as "steps to ensure that U.S. economic aid is not diverted and misused by Arab governments to acquire offensive weapons and to undertake aggressive adventures."
- Called for prompt enactment of the pending Hart bill (S.747) on immigration, which would introduce "an equitable, non-discriminatory formula for the admission of those seeking to enter the United States as immigrants," replacing the present national origins quota in the McCarran-Walter law.
- Opposed governmental aid to religiously controlled schools—Protestant, Catholic or Jewish—"whether in the form of long-term, low interest loans or outright subsidies, and whether at the elementary, secondary, or higher educational level."
- Expressed opposition to three proposed constitutional amendments currently being acted on by State legislatures, which would (1) nullify the U.S. Supreme Court's recent rulings requiring electoral districts to be equitably apportioned, (2) by-pass Congress in the procedure for amending the Constitution, and (3) set up a "Court of the Union," consisting of chief justices of the states, which could overrule the Supreme Court.
- Hailed the U.S. Supreme Court ruling on bible reading and prayer recitation in public schools as "a victory for religion and for religious freedom," and as "best for American education and American democracy."
- Called upon "all who share our concern for the preservation of religious freedom to join in opposing the spread of compulsory Sunday legislation."

• Urged prompt ratification by the U.S. Senate of the U.N. Genocide Convention.

• Called for home rule for the District of Columbia.

A special resolution on "the cooperative process" asserted that "for the fullest realization of the fruits of cooperation in the common cause, the participation of all Jewish community relations agencies is necessary," and expressed hope for "the successful outcome of discussions now being pursued between our own committee and that of the B'nai B'rith–ADL, with a view toward an agreement that will lead to a resumption of cooperative relationship." The same resolution also expressed the "hope that similar discussions soon may be initiated with the American Jewish Committee."

Speakers Differ on Banning Hatemongers from Campuses

Contrasting views as to whether hatemongers such as George Lincoln Rockwell should be permitted to address student gatherings on college and university campuses were expressed by Morton L. London, National Commander of the Jewish War Veterans of the U.S.A., and Sidney Lorber, President of the Minnesota Jewish Community Relations Council.

The two spoke at the first formal session of the Plenum. Louis J. Cohen, Chairman of the NCRAC Committee on Civil Liberties, Defamation and Violence, was chairman.

Commander London contended that "avowed fascists, communists and hatemongers have no constitutional or other right to speak on any college campus" and no violation of academic freedom was involved in barring such speakers.

Colleges and universities have "important status in our society," he asserted, and by granting permission to subversive speakers or giving them such a public platform, such institutions actually reduce their academic status. He called for colleges and universities to adopt the practice established by the University of California in screening speakers to be presented before student organizations.

"If a college's administration does not possess the good judgment to be selective in whom they invite to their academic forums, then the community has not only the right but the obligation to protest this abuse of academic freedom. To maintain its self-respect as much as for its preservation, the Jewish community should protest strenuously when the college opens its doors to avowed fascists or hatemongers," he said.

Mr. Lorber, on the other hand, maintained "that a university student group has a right to invite controversial speakers within limitations set up by the university to insure that the whole truth is presented and not just a distorted segment."

He said such speakers should not be banned, censored, picketed, or boycotted. Rather, he said, they should be countered "by exposing those same students to the truth so graphically and so forcefully that the students will be revolted by the Rockwells and the Davises and their cohorts.

"This does not imply a polite debate; this suggests the right to answer at the same time and as soon as the other speaker concludes by telling and showing graphically to the same audience what the Nazis and the communists have done and are doing."

Jewish agencies "instead of banning these jackals, should expose them for what they are–twisted, warped, sadistic, murderers," he said.

Mr. Lorber concluded: "In the long run, the risk to Jews which would arise from tampering with our bill of rights is greater than the threat we are trying to defeat and which we can defeat by exposing our college students to the full truth."

U.S. Supreme Court Ruling on Bible Reading and Prayer – Analysis and Implications.

An eminent constitutional lawyer analyzed for the delegates the ruling of the U.S. Supreme Court on Bible reading and prayer recitation in public schools; and an outstanding Jewish community relations practitioner discussed some of the implications of that and related rulings and the challenge they pose for the Jewish community.

The speakers were Dr. Paul A. Freund, Carl M. Loeb Professor at Harvard University, and Sidney Z. Vincent, associate director of the Cleveland Jewish Community Federation.

They addressed a session at which the chairman was Irving Kane, Past Chairman of NCRAC and Past President of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds.

Dr. Freund pointed out that the issues decided by the court had been matters of constitutional litigation over many years. "When the courts have acted." he said, "we may still disagree, but we should withhold our abuse."

He found no merit in the contention that the ruling interferes with the free exercise of religion by the majority. "The choice before the Court," he observed, "was whether to draw the line among prayers, upholding some and rejecting others, or to draw the line between all devotional exercises on the one hand and objective studies of a literary or historical kind on the other. Considering the functions of a civil court, it is hardly surprising that the line was drawn in the latter way."

The ruling, he continued, in no way implied any threat to numerous religious expressions in civic life, such as prayers opening sessions of Congress, the taking of oaths of office, chaplaincies in the armed forces, G.I. benefits.

As for the contention that the Court has deprived the public school of an indispensable aid to moral education, Dr. Freund countered this with the observation that it "ignores the essential role of home and place of worship in the full education of the child" and he called "dubious" the assumption, implicit in the contention, that there is "some irreplaceable value in an opening prayer or Bible-reading." As more effective educational alternatives, he suggested the building of moral values into the curriculum and a suffusion of teaching by what he termed "reverence for what we know, humility in the presence of the unknown, awe in the face of the unknowable."

Mr. Vincent, in his appraisal of the impact of the Supreme Court rulings, remarked upon the relative restraint with which they had been received, as compared to the reception accorded the Regents' Prayer ruling of a year ago. "I believe," he said, "we and our agencies can in all modesty take a good deal of credit for setting the stage for public acceptance of the decision."

Turning to programmatic implications of the decision, Mr. Vincent said, "This is the year of implementation."

Court decisions are not self-executing, he stressed. Therefore, conferences with school boards and other school authorities should be initiated at once, he advised. "Delay," he warned, "can result in frozen attitudes." He urged selective attention to objectionable practices, with a distinction made between what he regarded as "devotional" activities, which should be opposed, and such things as "the distribution of red candy canes or even an occasional Christmas tree, or so-called meditation periods or even milk and cracker grace, or the repetition of 'under God' in a pledge to the flag," which he did not consider devotional.

Recommending continued interpretation of the position of the Jewish agencies on church-state separation to the Jewish community, Mr. Vincent called also for a "far more secure anchorage for our position in a specific Jewish rationale."

"Although we are against religion in the classroom," he continued, "we are in the deepest sense commited to God – as we understand Him being there....

"If you are serious about the alleged Godliness of the schools, I should say to our Catholic or some of our Protestant brethren," he went on, "examine with us what takes place in the teaching of justice and social commitment. Don't settle for so thin and meaningless a formula as a rote addressing of God. Let us be passionately concerned with religious substance, not with stereotyped form."

This approach, Mr. Vincent said, had proven effective at least in some cases; he urged it as a component of the dialogue, which he said should be extended and intensified.

No doubt, he continued, the Catholic pressure for tax support of parochial schools would continue; and he thought that, while the Jewish group must on principle continue to oppose such support, "we should be as involved in the Catholic problem of education as Catholics must continue to be in the problem of public education." He suggested summer and other programs outside the regular school term that would involve parochial and public school pupils in common learning experiences. He cited several such programs being conducted experimentally in Cleveland.

AMBASSADOR HARMAN ADDRESSES ONEG SHABBAT

At an Oneg Shabbat, Hon. Avraham Harman, Israel Ambassador to the United States spoke informally about Israel's achievements, her economic problems and the ways in which they are being surmounted, and the delicate and constantly shifting relationships between her and the Arab states. The talk was not recorded, nor was any record kept of the ensuing questions and answers or discussion.

The Ambassador was presented to the delegates by George Maislen, president of the United Synagogue of America, who was chairman for the occasion.

Chairman Stresses Need for Cooperation in the Common Cause

In his report to the Plenary Session, Chairman Weinstein stressed the indispensability of mutual acceptance among people and groups as a basis for effective living in the complex modern world. He drew upon recent statements by world leaders for support for this thesis, and concluded with a plea for mutual cooperation in the common cause of better Jewish community relations among all the American Jewish organizations working in that field.

Quoting from the encyclical, "Pacem in Terris," of the late Pope John XXIII and from a recent foreign policy speech by President Kennedy, Mr. Weinstein said that both contained a profound thought in common.

That thought, he said, is "that, in the contemporary world, peace can be preserved only through increased and intensified interaction and communication among nations and peoples – that isolation is hostile to peace – that, no matter how inimical the opposing forces may be, however intransigent or irreconcilable they may seem – there must never be any cessation of conversations, negotiations, exchanges of views – for the alternative is the sacrifice of that which all seek – the common peace."

This concept was reflected, Mr. Weinstein said, in the pluralistic American society, in which different religious groups cooperate in causes that they share and maintain a continual dialogue about their differences, with full recognition and acceptance of the right of each to hold and to advocate its views.

"On the world scene," he observed, "the common cause that provides the basis for the ongoing exchange is world peace; on the national scene it is national unity and national greatness. The same concept is relevant to Jewish life, where the common cause is survival – not physical survival in the present situation, but creative survival as a dynamic, viable community within the family of communities that constitute the free society."

He expressed the hope that "e in Jewish life will find the wisdom to maintain – or, rather, to restore – our cooperative relationship in the absence of the immediate threat to our security that gave rise to it in the beginning; that we will now address ourselves with the same joint earnestness to the building of positive programs for creative survival as we did in an earlier era to the building of joint defenses and counteractions against the menacing enemy."

Dr. Samson R. Weiss, executive vice president of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, who was chairman of the session at which Mr. Weinstein spoke, paid eloquent tribute to the value of the NCRAC as a coordinating and joint planning instrumentality and to Mr. Weinstein as a wise and resourceful leader.

Jesuit Speaker Says Ecumenical Council By-Passed Statement Denouncing Anti-Semitism Because Arabs Would Consider It Political.

Rev. Gustave Weigel, S. J., professor of ecclesiology at Woodstock College, near Baltimore, and corresponding editor of the Jesuit magazine, America, spoke to the Plenum about the history of the Catholic community in America, tracing its growth and development and exploring some of its positions on such issues as church-state separation.

Father Weigel's illuminating presentation was overshadowed, however, by his answer to a question in the period following his prepared address. Asked whether he thought the Ecumenical Council that is to resume in the Vatican on September 29 would adopt a statement denouncing anti-Semitism, Dr. Weigel replied that such a statement had been prepared for presentation to the last Ecumenical Council summoned by the late Pope John XXIII, but had not been submitted. It had been withheld from consideration by the Council, he said, because of fear that any such statement would be regarded by the Arabs – among whom, he stressed, are many Catholics – as a political act partial to Israel. He gave it as his personal prediction that the forthcoming Council likewise would forego taking any action on such a statement, out of the same considerations.

NCRAC Chairman Weinstein called this "disquieting" information, saying that the failure of the Council to take a stand against anti-Semitism for the reasons cited by Father Weigel was not consonant with the high moral principles of ecumenicity.

Rabbi Edward E. Klein of the Stephen Wise Free Synagogue in New York, a member of the Commission on Social Action of Reform Judaism, Union of American Hebrew Congregations, was chairman of the session at which Father Weigel spoke.

Federal Aid to Education and Separation of Church and State - Can Both Be Effectively Pursued?

The American Jewish community is concerned for the adequate education of the young people of our nation and committed to the separation of church and state. Federal financial assistance to local school systems and to higher educational institutions appears a necessity if such adequate education is to be available to all our youth. Yet legislation to provide such assistance has been repeatedly defeated, most recently because of insistence by Catholics that parochial schools must share in any federal aid programs. The Jewish community is thus faced with a dilemma: must it choose whether to compromise its position on church-state separation in order to facilitate federal aid for public education or to maintain its opposition to federal aid to parochial schools even though this may mean dooming our public schools to financial anemia and inadequacy? Or is there some middle ground?

Leo Pfeffer, director of the Commission on Law and Social Action of the American Jewish Congress, addressed himself to this dilemma at a session chaired by Milton I. Goldstein, past chairman of the St. Louis Jewish Community Relations Council.

Mr. Pfeffer's detailed analysis of the issues led him to the following conclusion:

"Compromise on federal aid to parochial schools will not buy peace. Any assumption that acceding to some but not all of the demands of the Catholic Church will mark the end of the struggle is unrealistic. If the Church is correct in principle in claiming partnership in the American public educational system, then it is entitled to a partner's equal share, and if the claim is not valid, then there is no justification for even partial aid.

"Once we accept the principle that parochial schools have a right to share in tax-raised funds for education, we must be prepared to accept the ultimate disintegration of the American public school system. What will develop is a multi-school system in which the non-sectarian public school is but one of many competing participants. It is for this reason that I am convinced that serious as is the need for federal funds for public schools, nevertheless if a choice has to be made between no federal funds for public schools and participation by parochial schools in federal funds, I would urge that the former alternative be chosen and that we forego federal funds for our public schools."

However, Mr. Pfeffer favored allowing a tax deduction for tuition paid to parochial schools. "Once we accept, as apparently most Americans do, the proposition that contributions to churches may constitutionally be deducted in determining one's income tax liability, it seems to me that a strong case can be made for including as a contribution to a church sums paid for tuition in a parochial school," he said.

WORKSHOPS PROJECT JOINT PROGRAM FOR 1963–64

Four concurrent workshops reviewed salient developments of the past year in various areas of Jewish community relations concern and considered their implications for the programs of the cooperating agencies for the year ahead.

Conclusions were summarized and refered to members of the NCRAC staff who are charged with drafting a proposed Joint Program Plan for Jewish Community Relations for 1963–64, to be submitted to the NCRAC Executive Committee for adoption at an early Fall meeting. This is an annual project.

The contribution of the Plenary Session to the project is a major one, since the Plenum is the most widely representative of NCRAC deliberative bodies, including as it does delegates of all community member agencies and national organizations and thus affording an unmatched range of experience and observation.

The four workshops addressed themselves, respectively, to questions of (1) individual freedom and Jewish security and status, (2) equality of rights and opportunities, (3) church-state separation and interreligious relations, and (4) community relations aspects of developments in the Middle East.

Workshop chairmen ware Harold K. Goldstein, chairman of the Jewish Community Relations Committee of Cincinnati; Philip E. Hoffman, chairman of the Community Relations Committee of the Jewish Community Council of Essex County, N.J.; Eugene Feinblatt, president of the Baltimore Jewish Council; and Sidney M. Shevitz, president of the Jewish Community Council of Metropolitan Detroit.

A summary report of the conclusions and recommendations of the workshops was presented at the concluding business session of the Plenum by Julian Freeman of the Indianapolis Jewish Community Relations Council, an NCRAC Vice Chairman.

Workshops Discuss Techniques and Approaches

Polling the Jewish Community for Attitudes and Opinions

Several hundred Jewish residents of Oakland, California and environs were polled by mail for their views on civil rights, civil liberties and church-state issues in a project conducted by the Jewish Community Relations Council for Alameda and Contra Costa Counties. Poll results subsequently were disclosed and interpreted at meetings of affiliated organizations, where discussions ensued.

Jack Panitz, executive director of the CRC that conducted the poll, reported on it at a workshop session at which Myron Linder, of the Community Relations Council of Patterson, N.J., was moderator.

Mr. Panitz evaluated the technique as having favorable outcomes, including (1) some insights into community thinking, (2) an opportunity for interpretation of the CRC, (3) opportunities for reaching members of the Jewish community not generally reached through other educational approaches, (4) discovery of potential leadership individuals.

Recorder for the workshop was Ephraim Spivek, executive director of the Norfolk Jewish Community Council.

The Interreligious Dialogue in the Neighborhood Setting

Sidney C. Orlofsky, vice president of The Jewish Community Relations Council of Greater Philadelphia, described for another workshop group the operation of a program of interreligious dialogue meetings in Philadelphia neighborhoods. (cont. p. 6, col. 2)

*Until succeeded by his successor as National Commander

Growing out of a city-wide interfaith dialogue program that involved the JCRC, the Board of Rabbis, the United Church of Christ Synod and the Greater Philadelphia Council of Churches, the neighborhood dialogues are small (average 18 participants) group sessions, comprising laity and clergy. The JCRC conducted preparatory workshops for Jewish participants.

Discussion following Mr. Orlofsky's presentation was moderated by Rabbi Richard Israel, chairman of the New Haven Jewish Community Council, who was workshop chairman. Donald Weisman, executive director of the Schenectady Jewish Community Council, was recorder.

Introdu[illegible]y Families Into Previou[illegible]te Neighborhoods

Some s[illegible]periences of fair housing bodies in Boston suburbs were described for a fourth workshop by Robert E. Segal, executive director of the Jewish Community Council of Metropolitan Boston.

Experience – and the lessons to be drawn from it – varied from place to place and circumstance to circumstance, according to Mr. Segal's report. He presented several case histories, tending to support the general conclusion that it is better not to try to prepare the neighborhood in advance, since this too often merely fans prejudices, but to consummate the sale and then work to see that the incoming family is accepted.

Sylvan Libson, chairman of the Jewish Community Relations Council of Greater Pittsburgh, was chairman of this workshop. Milton A. Feinberg, executive director of the Jewish Federation of Trenton, N.J., was recorder.

Gauging and Countering Discrimination Against Jews

Emanuel Muravchik, National Director of the Jewish Labor Committee, told a third workshop that discriminations against Jews persist and that Jewish community relations agencies should strive constantly for improvement of their skills of investigation and counteraction to deal with them.

In the course of discussion moderated by the workshop chairman, Ben L. Chernov, past president of the Milwaukee Jewish Council, the workshop agreed that there should be a coordinated nationwide study of employment practices of large firms, that information available through fair employment bodies, both public and private, should be more widely utilized, and that "depth" interviews with Jewish employees are perhaps the most fruitful source of reliable information about employment policies of the companies they work for.

Recorder for this workshop was I. Edward Adler, executive director of the Jewish Community Welfare Council of Erie, Pa.

Henry L. Cohen, president of the Federation of Jewish Agencies of Atlantic County, welcomed the NCRAC delegates to Atlantic City. At the business session, a resolution of appreciation was unanimously adopted. It stated: The welcome accorded us by Atlantic City is reciprocated by affection and regard toward the leadership of the Federation of Jewish Agencies of Atlantic County, especially its President, Henry L. Cohen, and its Executive Director, Irving Spivack.

PENN COMMUNITY SERVICES

St. Helena Island — Frogmore, S. C.

Summer 1963

COURTNEY SICELOFF AND TOM BARNWELL VISIT PUERTO RICO AND JAMAICA

One of the continuing needs of our Pilot Project is a frequent re-appraisal of objectives and methods. As a new experiment in community development, with a unique approach in the U.S., the Pilot Project will effect future work throughout the South. In setting a precedent, it is extremely important that our field work reflect the aims which fostered it.

In mid-May, Courtney Siceloff and Tom Barnwell, the Pilot Project Field Director, toured community development projects in Puerto Rico and Jamaica. Conferring with program directors and visiting villages, Tom and Courtney were especially concerned with the problems of making a philosophy work in the field. Since our own Pilot Project is very similar to the Puerto Rican program, we felt that a discussion of mutual problems would be beneficial. The projects which Tom and Courtney toured have been continually refined over a fifteen year period, and they were pleased to see how effectively a high purpose can be manifest in a working program.

Dr. Fred Wale, director of the Puerto Rican program, explained what he felt to be the relation between purpose and actual field work:

"Community development is an educational process. It is this first, last and all the time. All else is secondary to it and must take its place as a reflection, not as the end result. Community development is not better roads, better beehives, pure water or sanitary privies. It is something of the spirit, not something material. It must reach into the deep culture patterns of the people, examining them and testing them as principles of faith. It is these things, because without them it relatively matters little whether the road is paved or not, whether you go to the woods or to the sanitary privy, whether economically you and your community are blessed. It is these things, because with them all physical solutions follow in their proper order."

When we are discouraged by economic and political problems, when there are so many obstacles to easy and rapid change, there is a temptation to bury our heads and drive nails. That kind of progress, at least, can be tallied on an adding machine and will give us something to point at. But over the years, the lasting changes will be in the minds of people. It is necessary that we remember our "principles of faith" include, above all, the dreams as well as needs of human beings. A field program which does not manifest those aims will have no lasting effect. As Dr. Wale implies, progress will not be measured by the number of nails driven. It will be measured in the hearts of people.

PILOT PROJECT REPORT

The Beaufort County Pilot Project has now completed the second of its three-year initial stage. Since its inception in 1961, the Pilot Project has involved an increasing number of people in community activities. Some of the projects presently underway can give an idea of how the field work is moving.

In the Coffins Point community on St. Helena, a civic improvement committee has begun construction of a praise house. The project involves not only the men and high school students who work on the building, but the ladies as well, who bring them lunches and provide moral support. In spite of a perennial financing problem, the project has not faltered; frugal use of inexpensive materials and ingenuity have kept the cost at a minimum. As money is raised, materials are purchased and the work proceeds.

The Eddings Point community, working on a similar building, has organized old fashioned cake sales to raise funds for their community center. The new group has brought together neighbors in common work and has revealed new community leaders.

Other communities in the county are continuing with older projects. Bluffton residents have held civic meetings on health and sanitation problems. Burton leaders have constructed school bus stop shelters to protect school children from our drizzly winters. In all of these and others, a feeling of movement and a newfound satisfaction of purpose have become the crucial focus. Developing that spirit to a level of widespread concern can change community improvement from a "project" into a way of living.

In order to help promulgate a larger sense of purpose, the Pilot Project recently published the first of a series of local newsletters. Called "Community News", the paper is sent to Beaufort County residents who are, or could become, involved in the Pilot Project. It contains not only news of community projects, but information about non-descriminatory employment and workshops as well. The first issue also included a summary of F.H.A. housing loans (see following item). It is hoped that the paper will help unify communities in seeking solutions to common problems.

Thomas Barnwell, Jr., the Pilot Project Field Director, is presently attending the summer session at Tuskegee. He and his family will return to Penn in August.

HOUSING PROBLEM BROACHED
AT FHA/PENN MEETING

On May 9, several representatives from the Farmers Home Administration met with Courtney Siceloff and Thomas Barnwell, Jr. to discuss FHA assistance in rural housing problems. The meeting was attended by local, state and federal FHA staff members, as well as other individuals familiar with rural housing problems.

Among the difficulties of improving rural housing conditions, the greatest is financial. The problem is made more complex by inadequate and fluctuating income, a common condition in southern rural areas. In Beaufort County, few Negro farms are large or profitable enough to allow the owner to build a sizable bank account and cushion the blow of a bad year. Consequently, a farm owner's circumstance may literally change with the weather. Farm workers and sharecroppers, of course, are even less fortunate, because the same losses usually take a greater percentage of their income.

By and large, rural housing conditions in Beaufort County need improvement. One third of the total rural homes have either an outdoor privy or no facility whatsoever. Fifteen percent of the homes do not have flues for heating, while one third are without piped water. In addition, many are overcrowded and in a poor state of repair. These conditions are conducive to poor sanitation and unhealthy conditions. The disease rate is uncommonly high. In Bluffton, for example, at least three deaths have been attributed to the prevalence of worms.

One of the more successful business ventures in housing has been the sale of "shell" homes. "Shell" homes are a variety of building consisting of little more than a shell — walls, floor, windows and ceiling. They are advertised at what appears to be a relatively low cost; but when a family commits itself to an installment plan — almost a necessity — it frequently discovers the interest and other charges to be many times the normal commercial rates. Moreover, the building usually has no provisions for plumbing or heating, and may even lack inside doors.

These problems were an important issue raised at a conference on rural programs, held at Penn last February, and it was decided that a meeting with FHA administrators should be held. We felt that since FHA affords a partial solution to the housing problem, we should emphasize its advantages to the residents of Beaufort County. The purpose of the meeting was to gather information which could be disseminated through the Pilot Project. "Community News",the local newsletter, contained a summary of the information.

Among the advantages of FHA loans are: lower interest rates (4% on unpaid amount) better terms (up to 33 years), a loan (or a grant) based upon a careful evaluation of need and ability to repay, as well as the opportunity to choose an inexpensive and functional house. Loans can also be made for home improvements, such as the installation of plumbing.

PENN BOARD OF TRUSTEES MEETS

Penn's Board of Trustees held its annual meeting here on April 6. In addition to conducting regular business, the Board elected the following new trustees: Mr. Herbert DeCosta, a contractor in Charleston; Mrs. Ann Petry, a writer from Old Sayebrook, Connecticut; Mr. William Shurcliff, a physicist at the Cambridge Electron Accelerator, Harvard; and Mrs. Arnett Waters, a civil rights leader in Savannah, Georgia.

The Board also voted to sell a tract of woodland belonging to Penn. The 242 acre plot is situated near the south end of St. Helena, and the income derived from the sale will be used to help pay for much-needed capital improvements.

DATE SET FOR FINAL
VOTER EDUCATION WORKSHOP

The last of a series of three voter education workshops has now been set for Sept. 7 and 8. The workshops will be held at Penn, and the featured speaker will be Senator Leroy Johnson, Georgia's new Negro legislator. The over-all purpose of the series is to explain how the vote can be used more effectively. The first two workshops covered government and party organizations, and included an analysis of Negro registration and voting. The final workshop will focus on the major problems of Negro voters in the county, as well as their potential voting strength. The series will provide a basis for more concerted and effective participation in future elections.

CONFERENCES

Three regular conferences returned in April, May and June. They were the South Carolina Student Council on Human Relations, the S. C. Funeral Directors, and the S. C. Midwives Institute. A Junior High Summer Camp, for youngsters of the Fairfield-McClelland Presbytery, spent a week here in early July.

An AFL-CIO Tri-State Labor School, for union representatives from N.C., S.C., and Virginia, was held here July 14 - 20. An annual summer school for delegates of a variety of unions, this was the group's first visit to Penn.

A Lutheran workcamp, consisting of young people from throughout the East, will be here for a week in mid-August. Two other of our "regulars" — the Palmetto Education Assn. and the Bahai Summer School — will also be here in August.

Following our own Voter Education Workshop in September, the National Sharecroppers Fund will hold a training conference. The purpose will be to train farmers in the techniques of cooperatives, credit unions and in providing knowledge about government services.

RACIAL DESEGREGATION IN GREATER ATLANTA

From public records, news files, personal experiences and files of the Greater Atlanta Council on Human Relations, the following summary of major steps toward racial desegregation in Greater Atlanta has been compiled. We welcome corrections or additions:

1948: --Negro police hired, but without authority to arrest whites.

1955: --U. S. Federal court ordered city golf courses desegregated.

1958: --Suit filed against Atlanta Board of Education (decision in 1959, effective 1960).

1959: --U. S. Federal Court ordered busses desegregated.
--U. S. Federal Court ordered Georgia State College of Business Administration desegregated.
--Atlanta Public Library admitted Negroes to general use of main library, after discussions between Library Board and citizens.

1960: --U. S. Federal Court ordered Dobbs House, restaurant facility at Airport, desegregated.
--Several Negro bus drivers hired by Atlanta Transit System.
--Biltmore Hotel admitted Negro lawyers to dinner of Bar Association at which Secretary of State, Dean Rusk, was speaker, after citizens notified Secretary Rusk of hotel's segregated policy; other hotels began serving private integrated groups.

1961: --First sit-ins, against stores in downtown Atlanta.
--Atlanta Aldermanic Board repealed ordinance requiring segregation in taxis.
--Sit-ins and boycotts of downtown stores; arrests for sit-ins. Agreement in March to desegregate lunch counters and all facilities in major stores, effective September.
--City of Atlanta public schools desegregated (9 Negro students in 4 high schools, 12th and 11th grades, through pupil placement plan approved by court).
--Georgia Tech admitted first Negro students (3).
--Interstate Commerce Commission ordered desegregation of bus and train terminals.
--YWCA desegregated cafeteria, first downtown eating place.
--New Atlanta Airport opened, all facilities desegregated.
--Most college audiences desegregated.
--City tennis courts closes when Negroes attempted to use them.
--Following 1961 performance in Atlanta, Metropolitan Opera announced it would not play before segregated audience, also Actor's Equity.

1961: --Stouffeur's Restaurants opened desegregated.
--Academy Theater and other private drama groups admitted Negroes to audience.
--Atlanta's Symphony Orchestra audience desegregated.

1962: --U. S. District Court invalidated city ordinances requiring segregation in city parks and public places, and at public assemblies, in theaters, public halls, and other places of public assembly where admission is for charge or free; ordered city pools desegregated in 1963.
--Downtown and arts movie theaters operated desegregated after Metropolitan Opera performance before desegregated audienc and after meetings with students and citizens groups.
--Peachtree Manor Hotel accepted first Negro guests (ball players) after discussions with citizens groups.
--Agnes Scott College trustees announced acceptance of applications from Negroes effective for 1963-64 term.
--Oglethorpe University announced acceptance of applications from Negroes.
--Emory University requested declaratory judgment from Superior Court which declared that the tax exemption status of the University would not be jeapordized by accepting Negro students; admitted first Negro students in Nursing School.
--Georgia State College admitted first Negro students.
--Negro policemen in Atlanta given right to arrest whites in line of duty.
--Atlanta hired first Negro firemen.
--Atlanta Art School accepted Negro students.
--Archbishop ordered Catholic parochial schools desegregated.
--Chamber of Commerce admitted first Negro member (did not represent change in policy, invitation was sent by mistake; no Negro members admitted since).
--Fulton-DeKalb Hospital Authority announced policy of considering Negroes for internships, admitted Negro physician to Grady Hospital staff.
--Citizens filed suit for complete desegregation of all facilities of Grady Hospital; also for desegregation of Fulton County Medical Society and Northern Dentist Dental Society.
--Fulton County Medical Soceity voted to remove "white" qualification for membership, accepted Negro members.
--Negroes in DeKalb County attempted to transfer to white schools; Board of Education made no reply to requests to desegregate voluntarily.
--Negro students in Atlanta schools increased to 44 in 9 high schools.
--Superior Court ordered removed "Peyton Wall" and wall on Harlan Road, barriers erected by city of Atlanta, because barriers had been erected as "racial buffers"; "It being unlawful and unconstitutional to legislate in respect of ownership or occupancy of real property on the basis of race or color...the Court holds, that it is illegal and unconstitutional to legislate in respect of use of public streets or portions thereof for the purpose of effecting on the basis of race or color ownership and occupancy of real property and the acquisition or disposition or the market value therof..."
--City Hall desegregated.
--Decatur-DeKalb Library accepted Negro members.
--Negro elected Senator from 38th District (Fulton County).

1963: --One hundred forty-four students in 10 Atlanta high schools.
--Several stores hired Negroes in sales jobs.
--Archbishop ordered Catholic hospitals desegregated.
--Lovett School refused to consider Negro applicant.
--Westminster School refused to test Negro because of no policy of considering applications from Negroes.
--Trinity Presbyterian School accepted Negro students.
--Oglethorpe University accepted Negro student.
--Emory University accepted Negroes in undergraduate, graduate and medical schools.
--Atlanta Speech School accepted Negro student.
--Grady Hospital accepted Negro Intern.
--Smith-Hughes Vocational School desegregated.
--Atlanta Junior Chamber of Commerce removed "white" qualification for membership; elected Negro as one of 5 "Outstanding Men of Year."
--Northern District Dental Society removed "white" qualification for membership.
--Atlanta city pools desegregated.
--Nine neighborhood and 11 drive-in movies in Greater Atlanta desegregated.
--Two airport hotels desegregated.
--DeKalb Building desegregated.
--State Capitol desegregated.
--Fourteen hotels agreed to accept Negroes as convention delegates, up to certain percentage of total convention group.
--Approximately 30 restaurants agreed privately to desegregate. Day-to-day changes in policy and lack of public information resulted in some "re-segregation", less than 20 now certain.
--DeKalb County Commission adopted policy statement regarding rights of all citizens, states no discrinination in county jobs, reference to race in personnel forms and application blanks removed.
--Decatur City Commission stated no discrimination in city jobs, recreation facilities, excluding swimming pools.
--City of Atlanta changed policy of separate Negro and white civil service registers, to one register.
--Atlanta Constitution and Atlanta Journal eliminated reference to race in Help Wanted and Obituary columns.
--DeKalb Area Trade School accepted applications from Negroes.
--City of Decatur hired Negro Relocation Officer for Urban Renewal.
--South Fulton Hospital (Hill-Burton) opened with policy of permitting Negro physicians to admit and tend patients.
--Increasing number of white churches accept Negro visitors (Negroes denied admission at First Baptist Church. Rev. Ashton Jones, white minister who refused to leave church when refused admittance in company of Negroes, arrested for disturbing divine worship, sentenced to 18 months in prison, 6 months at public works, $1,000 fine, with bond set at $20,000.)
--Steady but slow breakthroughs in employment, stimulated and encouraged by regulations concerning U. S. Government contracts, "selevtive buying" campaigns, and negotiations by citizens groups.

Note: Columbia Theological Seminary, Decatur, (Presbyterian) has accepted Negro students as far back as their records go.

1963 First trials of Atlanta arrests under anti-trespass law; white student convicted.

KOINONIA FARM, AMERICUS, GA. NEWSLETTER #28 SEPTEMBER, 1963

The past year has been one of deep searching as to whether or not to continue here. Our group is so small now that the burdens carried by the remaining few are very heavy. As a result, much of our energy is consumed in the physical work, leaving little time for the things we really feel called to do. But even in this realm, there is now so much tension and lack of communication in the larger community that little positive work can be done. Countless times we've wondered if we weren't more needed somewhere else. So far no clear-cut answer has come, but we continue to pray that God's will may be done with this bit of His domain, of which we are but stewards.

In the meantine, some of us have done what little we could to aid in the struggle towards freedom for all. Our facilities have been made available to SNCC for their staff and training sessions, and some of the leaders stayed here off and on for a number of months until they were finally arrested and lodged in the Sumter County jail, where they still reside. Four of them--three whites and one Negro--are charged with inciting to insurrection, a capital offense in Georgia, and are being held without bond. Over 200 Negro young people have been arrested in this county, and some accounts of their treatment are reminiscent of the infamous Civil War prison at Andersonville, also located in this county. Because the newspapers have given this very little coverage, you might wish further information, which may be secured by addressing The Sumter County Movement, Box 91, Americus, Ga. Contributions may be sent to the same address.

Our three High Schoolers, Greg and David Wittkamper and Jan Jordan, continue to have rough sledding, though this is nothing new for them. Almost completely ostracized and repeatedly called filthy names, they cheerfully and courageously bear witness to their faith. They have refused our offers to send them away to school, feeling that they have a mission to accomplish here.

Con and Ora Browne, after twelve years at Koinonia, have taken a year's leave of absence and have moved with their family to Knoxville, Tenn., where Con has a position on the staff of Highlander Training Center. His work is primarily in the field of adult education, preparing leaders in the South for the responsibilities of full citizenship. Their Knoxville address is 115 Greenbriar Drive.

Dorothy Swisshelm will soon be launching on a new venture, having been called to the position of case-worker at Back Bay Mission in Biloxi, Miss., where she will start work the last of October. The Mission, operated by the United Church of Christ, is located at 424 Chartres Street.

The Wittkamper family returned to Koinonia in June after 15 months at the Forest River Community in North Dakota. Their oldest son, Bill, spent the summer here and was baptized by his father in an impressive ceremony just before returning to Reba Place Fellowship in Evanston, Ill., where he will complete his senior year in High School. Last year Bill and a friend placed first among many contestants at the Chicago Music Festival, winning a prize of $200. Bill also won a scholarship to the Chicago Art Academy.

Jim Jordan returns this fall to Mercer University in Macon, Ga., from which he will graduate next spring with a double major in History and English.

Clarence Jordan has finally begun writing down some of his "cotton patch" translations of the Scriptures. He has completed Ephesians and Hebrews, and each is now available in booklet form. They are 35¢ for either Ephesians or Hebrews, 3 for $1.00, postpaid. In quantities of 25 or more (orders may be mixed), the price is 25¢ each, postpaid. The Gospel of Luke has also been translated, but is still in manuscript form and therefore not available now. Tapes of Clarence's four Bible lectures on Ephesians at the American Baptist Convention in Detroit last May may be obtained for $7.00 for all four, or $4.00 for either Lectures 1 and 2, or 3 and 4.

Pecan prospects are good, with the largest crop in history expected. Last year the crop was almost a failure, and supplies were so short that we had none left to carry over for early orders this fall. This means that we will have only new crop nuts, and that we will not be able to begin shipping until harvest begins. Our prediction now is that this will be between Oct. 15 and Nov. 1. Fruit cake and pecandy also won't be available until then. We will fill orders on a first-come first-served basis, so please get your order in as soon as possible.

Because of the big crop, the price of pecans should be lower than last year, although the extremely small carry-over from last year will create a heavy demand at the beginning of the season and hold prices up. Since this letter has to go out early, we're having to guess at the prices. We're lowering ours some, though perhaps not as much as they should be toward the end of the season. If we've missed our guess, and are a bit high, we'll try to make up for it in extra fine quality. The price of fruit-cake remain substantially the same, since the lowered cost of nuts is off-set by the increased cost of sugar and fruit.

We do want you to know that we are very, very grateful for your orders, for this is still almost our sole means of livelihood. And it is our sincere desire that when you make a purchase from us you will get full value received. While we highly value your friendship, we don't want that to be the basis of your order.

In closing, we leave with you the "cotton patch" version of Paul's word to the Ephesian brethren: "Take extra care, then, how you live--not like nit-wits, but like wits. Use your time as though you had to buy it, because there's a lot of wickedness around these days.... Don't get drunk on wine and carry on a lot of foolishness; tank up on the spirit and do your talking to each other with hymns and songs and spirituals, singing and strumming in your hearts to the Lord. Always give thanks for everything to the Father-God in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."

STEPHEN WISE CONGRESS HOUSE • 15 EAST 84TH STREET • NEW YORK 28, N.Y. • TRAFALGAR 9-4500

October 7, 1963

Dear Friend:

An Ill-Advised Boycott. Several months ago the City Council of Cambridge, Maryland, in response to Negro demonstrations, enacted an ordinance prohibiting discrimination in places of public accommodation. This action was immediately challenged by segregationist forces in the community who invoked the right, under State law, to demand that the issue be submitted to a referendum vote.

On Tuesday, the segregationists prevailed by a vote of 1,994-to-1,720. All but 652 of the 3,747 white voters went to the polls. A majority of them voted against the measure but the margin was so small that it could easily have been overcome by a full turn-out of Negro voters. Instead, as the result of the boycott urged by Mrs. Gloria H. Richardson, militant Chairman of the Cambridge Nonviolent Action Committee, barely 48 percent of the registered Negro voters cast their ballots.

Mrs. Richardson's position was opposed by Negro clergymen and by the NAACP. However, their counsel was disregarded by a majority of the Negro voters to whom Mrs. Richardson had become a symbol because of her role in organizing and sustaining the protest demonstrations.

Mrs. Richardson urged that it was wrong to submit "the constitutional rights of our people to the whim of a popular majority." This plea was as specious as it was effective. On her premise it would also be wrong to urge Congress to enact legislation banning discrimination in places of public accommodation, or for that matter in employment, or, indeed, any civil rights laws. Moreover, if Mrs. Richardson's philosophy were accepted, there would be little, if any, point in the struggle by the Negro in the South to secure the right to vote. That struggle continues because the Negro recognizes that without the right of franchise, his status will remain that of a second class citizen.

The Federal Civil Rights Picture. On September 30 the Federal Civil Rights Commission, for the first time in its six-year history, issued a report in which all of the Southern white members joined in the findings and in the recommendations to Congress for legislative action. The unanimity was all the more remarkable because of the sweeping character of the recommendations made for laws to erase racial discrimination. In addition to calling for uniform voter registration standards, the Commission urged enactment of a Federal Fair Employment Practices Law and the grant to the Attorney General of the right to institute suits to end segregation in public schools and to prevent discrimination in various programs supported by the Federal Government.

Paradoxically, the life of the Commission itself will expire at the end of this month unless it is extended by Congress. On Tuesday, a one-year extension was voted by the Senate 70-to-15. All of the negative votes were, of course, cast by Southern Senators but no filibuster was attempted. That weapon is being reserved for the day when an over-all civil rights bill is brought to the floor. In all likelihood, the House will concur in the one-year extension. The House may do so on Monday when the measure will be called up for immediate consideration under a procedural provision which would permit its adoption by a two-thirds vote, thus bypassing the House Rules Committee headed by Representative Howard W. Smith of Virginia.

In the meantime, however, the Commission has been gutted by the departure of key staff members who have resigned to seek positions elsewhere in the Government rather than risk finding themselves left high and dry on November 1. Replacement of its extremely able and highly experienced staff will take a long time. Moreover, there is no prospect that they will ever adequately be replaced unless a law is enacted giving the Commission at least a four-year term. The members of the Commission have themselves indicated that they would not be willing to continue to serve on any shorter basis.

The over-all civil rights bill introduced by the Kennedy Administration proposes to renew the Commission's existence for a four-year period. The House Judiciary Sub-Committee has recently reported the bill with several modifications, one of which would make the Commission a permanent body.

The bill as voted by the Sub-Committee of the House Judiciary Committee went further in other respects than the Administration's proposal. Thus it added a provision for a Federal Fair Employment Practices Commission which is, of course, crucial to ending discrimination against Negroes in the South. It also included another provision of equally basic importance which would authorize the Attorney General to bring suit to protect against violation of any constitutional right, rather than limiting intervention by the Department of Justice to cases of public school segregation.

The bill, as voted by the Judiciary Sub-Committee, is, of course, a long way from enactment even in the House. In the full Judiciary Committee and then in the Rules Committee the measure faces the threat of watering down at the hands of a coalition of Southern Democrats and Republican Conservatives. The reason for the opposition by the Southerners is obvious. The Republican opposition reflects both their general working alliance with Southern colleagues and a reluctance to have a Democratic Administration achieve a spectacular break-through in civil rights legislation.

Once the bill reaches the floor of the House, the chances are good for its adoption, without further weakening. But ahead will be the Senate where the Southern Democrats and the Conservative Republicans will have the advantage of the filibuster rule which requires a two-thirds vote to end debate.

Prospects for Senate consideration for civil rights legislation before the latter part of November or even early December are dim. The filibusterers may therefore prevent any Senate vote before the end of the present session. That, however, does not seem to me to be a crucial consideration since the debate would simply continue with the opening of the new session in January which would be separated from the first session only by the formality of an adjournment. Ultimately, the question will be whether the Senate majority will hold out for a strong bill or will be bludgeoned by the filibusterers into accepting half a loaf.

The country is, I believe, aware of the need for civil rights legislation. It is far from certain, however, that public opinion is prepared to insist upon legislation of the sweeping character called for by the times. Unless, therefore, President Kennedy uses the full power of his office to rally the country, the Senate majority is likely to capitulate and pass a measure falling far short of what is needed. Moreover, even if the President does exert himself to the fullest, there can be no assurance that an adequate law will be adopted without the utmost effort by all of the liberal forces of the nation.

The Right to Know. On September 27 a Federal grand jury in Brooklyn indicted four New Yorkers for their part in promoting a trip to Cuba by 57 American students during the summer. They were accused of violating a Federal statute by making the trip without securing the approval of the State Department, as required under regulations issued in January, 1961. The regulations were issued under a provision of the Immigration and Nationality Law which authorizes restrictions of travel during a time of war or a period of national emergency. The Government takes the position that such an emergency is now in effect in regard to Cuba.

In my opinion, the trial of these cases will be largely a formality and the defendants will be convicted. There is little prospect that a Federal District Judge will rule either that the regulations are not authorized by the Immigration Law or that, if authorized, the statute is itself unconstitutional as applied. It is difficult to predict whether the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit will take the same position. In my judgment, however, the chances for reversal in the Supreme Court are better than even.

In Kent v. Dulles, decided by the Supreme Court in June, 1958, the Supreme Court, in a 5-to-4 decision, struck down a State Department regulation requiring an applicant for a passport to submit an affidavit as to whether he was or ever had been a Communist. The majority held that there was no statutory basis for the regulation. To hold otherwise, the majority declared, would be to require the Court to pass upon the constitutionality of the Immigration Law since, as was conceded by the Solicitor General, "The right to travel is a part of the 'liberty' of which the citizen cannot be deprived without the due process of law under the Fifth Amendment."

The dissenters in Kent v. Dulles were Justices Clark, Burton, Harlan and Whittaker, who took the position that the regulation was authorized but did not express any view upon the issue of constitutionality. Of the dissenters, only Justices Clark and Harlan remain. They have, however, been joined by two other Conservatives, Justices Stewart and White. The five-man majority in Kent v. Dulles were the Chief Justice and Justices Black, Frankfurter, Douglas and Brennan. Justice Frankfurter has since retired but his place has been taken by Justice Goldberg, who has indicated a more liberal position than that of his predecessor.

In Kent v. Dulles, Justice Douglas, writing for the majority, said that "Freedom of movement across frontiers in either direction, and inside frontiers as well, was a part of our heritage." He quoted with approval Chafee's classic statement that > "An American who has crossed the ocean is not obliged to form his opinions about our foreign policy merely from what he is told by officials of our government or by a few correspondents of American newspapers. Moreover, his views on domestic questions are enriched by seeing how foreigners are trying to solve similar problems. In many different ways direct contact with other countries contributes to sounder decisions at home."

Separation of Church and State in New York. Two years ago, as part of a plan of improving the caliber of the New York City Board of Education, the Legislature mandated the creation by the Mayor of a panel to recommend persons for appointment by him to the Board. The panel was composed of representatives of various civic, educational, labor, business, professional and community organizations. The Board appointed on the basis of its recommendations is universally regarded as the ablest group of citizens ever to be charged with responsibility for the nation's largest and in some ways most difficult school system.

Recently, the State Education Commissioner has suggested that the panel might better be chosen on the basis of personal eminence of the persons selected rather than the fact that they are representatives of special groups. Whatever the merits of this proposal, it certainly is to be preferred to the one put forward on Tuesday by the leaders of the three major religions in New York.

The New York Archdiocese of the Catholic Church, the New York Board of Rabbis and the Protestant Council of New York City issued a statement urging the inclusion of representatives of religious organizations on the panel. Their statement was accompanied by the disclaimer of "any intention to dominate the selection of names, or dictate the choice of nominees along religious lines." However, their announcement was accompanied by an observation that, when the present panel most recently provided the Mayor with a list of the candidates, it included no Catholic candidate for a "Catholic vacancy," and remarked that "For the first time in many years the balance of School Board members, according to the old procedure of selection, was changed."

It seems to me that the proposed inclusion of denominational religious organizations in the selection process for choice of members of the Board violates both the spirit and the letter of the principle of Separation of Church and State. Of course the panel should, and it does, reflect the fact that the population of New York City includes people of different religious faiths. It is quite another thing to assign to organized religious bodies a role in a panel which makes nominations for membership on the Board which sets the policies in public school education. It is even worse to propose that once again the Board must be chosen on the basis of a religious quota.

In view of its history, the position taken by the Archdiocese comes as no surprise. What is both surprising and shocking is that the Board of Rabbis and the Protestant Council joined in such a position.

Sincerely yours,

Shad Polier

FROM: COUNCIL FOR UNITED CIVIL RIGHTS LEADERSHIP
10 East 44 Street, New York 17, N. Y.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

OCT 7 1963

FOR CONFIRMATION CALL: VICTOR WEINGARTEN
MUrray Hill 2-0283

BP

The Council for United Civil Rights Leadership, representing all seven major national Negro civil rights organizations, announced today agreement on a common program on the question of a proposed Christmas boycott.

The organizations rejected any proposed nation-wide Christmas boycott. They urged instead that "all Americans who believe in civil rights make some special sacrifice this Christmas in memory of the six Birmingham children who were killed on September 15 and all others who have died this year in the cause of civil rights."

The Council suggested that support be given to all special Christmas projects which might be sponsored by civil rights organizations and by the making of financial contributions to the Council in lieu of routine type of Christmas gifts, the funds to be shared by all seven of the major civil rights groups.

It also urged local leaders to investigate employment practices of stores and other businesses in their respective communities and to make specific demands upon the owners and managers to correct any situations involving racial discrimination locally.

The Council statement was released by Wiley A. Branton, its Executive Director. The Council is composed of the following seven organizations: National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, National Urban League, National Council of Negro Women, NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc., Congress of Racial Equality, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. Whitney M. Young, Jr. and Stephen R. Currier are co-chairmen.

The text of the Council statement follows.

OCT 7 1963

STATEMENT ON PROPOSED CHRISTMAS BOYCOTT BY

COUNCIL FOR UNITED CIVIL RIGHTS LEADERSHIP

The Council for United Civil Rights Leadership (CUCRL) approved a resolution this week urging all Americans who believe in civil rights to make some special sacrifice this Christmas in memory of the six Birmingham children who were killed on September 15, and of all others who have died this year in the cause of civil rights.

The Council suggests that support be given to all special Christmas projects which might be sponsored by civil rights organizations and by the making of financial contributions to the Council, to be shared by all seven of the major civil rights groups.

The Council urged local leaders to investigate employment practices of stores and other businesses in their respective communities and to make specific demands upon the owners and managers to correct any situations involving racial discrimination. Local leaders should take any lawful action which they deem appropriate if their demands are not met in good faith.

This action by the Council was approved in lieu of the endorsement of any proposed nationwide Christmas boycott. at this time.

The Second American Revolution May End in Victory

America's tragedy is the denial of the ideals of the Revolution of 1776 to Negro citizens. America's hope is that these same ideals --

> "All men are created equal. They are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights..."

-- may be achieved in the Second American Revolution in our day.

CORE is a vital part of that revolution. Since 1942 it has been applying the techniques of nonviolent direct action with growing success. A few years ago I enlisted for the duration.

> In 1776 the signers ended the Declaration of Independence by "mutually pledging to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

Today -- as ever since its founding -- CORE's honor stands unimpeached. Nor does CORE lack for lives -- for manpower and womanpower, for low-paid staff members, for volunteers to fill its picket lines and take part in other nonviolent action (in May, June and July 12,546 were arrested.) Last spring CORE member William Moore was shot to death on a lonely Alabama highway. As I write this, CORE National Director James Farmer is in jail in Donaldsville, Louisiana.

What CORE lacks are the fortunes. While we have thousands of loyal supporters, our funds simply are not equal to today's needs. If CORE is to continue its important role -- if we are to man the crucial training institutes in nonviolence, if we are to meet bail bonds, court costs, and increasing medical expenses -- CORE must have your help.

Many have given $10. Give more if you can, less if you must. But give now to insure that the Second American Revolution will end in justice and freedom. Please use the envelope above today.

Sincerely,

James Baldwin

James Baldwin

P.S. I believe that this country is going to be transformed. But it must be transformed by all of us, by you and me. I don't believe any longer that we can afford to say that it is entirely out of our hands. Give now.

DISCUSSION SECTION

(Both of the following articles were written by George Goss - for better or worse)

John and James Giles and Joseph Johnson Appeal

On December 5, 1961, John Gordon Giles and James Vernon Giles, of Spencerville, Maryland, were convicted in the Montgomery County Cirduit Court for the rape of Joyce Carol Roberts, of Hyattesville, Maryland. On December 11, 1961, they were sentenced to death by Judge James H. Pugh of the Circuit Court.

On September 26, 1962, Joseph Elijah Johnson, Jr., of Spencerville, was convicted for the same offense, On November 20, 1962, he was sentenced to death by Judge Matthew Evans of the Circuit Court.

At the present time all three defendants are confined on death row at the Maryland Penitentiary awaiting executing. Unsuccessful appeals have been made to the Maryland Court of Appeals and U.S. Supreme Court. The lives of all three are in the hands of the Governor.

Summary of the Incident

On July 20, 1961, the defendants, who are Negro, and a fourth companion, John Bowie, had been fishing and were returning home. They had to back Bowie's car past another car parked on a secluded dead end road in a wooded area. The 16 year old white complainant and her 21 year old companion, Stewart Lee Foster, were sting in the back seat of the other car. After helping Bowie back up to the driveway of the Cunningham residence, the defendants returned to the car in which Foster and Joyce were sitting. Joseph asked for a cigarette; Foster cursed him, and an arguement ensued. After the window on Foster's side of the car was briken with a stone, Foster got out of the car and was struck in the face by Johnson and knocked to the ground. After laying there for a few minutes he got up and ran about 221 yards to the home of Joseph Cunningham and called the police, who arrived within a few minutes.

At the same time that Foster got out of one side of the car, Joyce Roberts got out the other side and ran into the woods about 30 ft., tripped, and fell. She was soon joined by John Giles who stayed with her alone in the woods for several minutes. He did not harm or threaten her and she did not call for help even though there was a house close by. Joyce did not know at this time what had happened to Foster. She offered to have sexual relations with John Giles if he would not call the others. After a few minutes Joyce a and John were joined by James Giles and Joseph Johnson. Joyce removed her shorts and underpants and lay down on the ground. No threats were made to her safety, and no force was used. She had intercourse with Joseph and James. She made no protest or objections to this intercourse. As the police car was arriving, Joyce said to the defendants, "I'm going to tell the police that I was raped." She did not call out to thepolice; she did not call for help at any time. The police searched the area and found her lying on the ground "whimpering," in a "semi-conscious" state, with her clothes still off. These are the aspects of the case on which there are no disagreements between the testimony of Joyce Roberts, Stewart Foster, John Giles, James Giles, and Joseph Johnson.

There are many questions concerning the trial, the jury, and the sentence.

1. It has been 15 years since Maryland last punished rape with execution. In the case of these three men, the girl consented and no force was used; even by the complaintant's testimony. Last year another defendant was convicted, also in Montgomery County, of raping a woman at gunpoint and cruelly beating her, but he was not sentenced to death.

2. The jury, as is the law in the State of Maryland, was not instructed as to the applicable law. Judge Pugh sent the case to the jury with these words: "Now ladies and gentlemen of the jury, the form of your verdict in this case will simply be 'guilty on the first count' or 'guilty on the first count without capital punishment' or 'not guilty' as you shall find from the law and the evidence.' The jury had no guidelines on the delicate and unsettled law of rape. The jury lacked the rudimentary guidelines about theprosecution's burden of proof, let alone the "reasonable doubt" which must be resolved in favorof the defendants in criminal trials. (Preceding from an article in The Washington Post)

3. There were no Negroes on the jury.

4. Joyce Roberts told the defendants that she had had intercourse with 16 or 17 men that same week and she had admitted to a personal history that in not exactly Puritan; yet a discussion of her record or that of Stewart's Foster's was not allowed in Court.

5. According to the three defendants testimony and one of the conflicting statements made by Joyce Roberts during the trials, John Giles din not have intercourse with her.

6. The testimony of Joyce Roberts became unclear and conflicting as the trials progressed, yet the jury found no"reasonable doubt" as to the guilt of the three defendants.

Upon these questions citizens groups in Maryland and CORE groups around the country are appealing to the Governor of Maryland for clemency. I'll close this summary with the concluding paragraph of the application of the trial lawyers for executive clemency.

It is often observed that a charge of rape is one of the most difficult chargesto defend against. Often, there may be no important evidence other than the testimony of the defendant and of the woman who claims to be wronged. Without more, it is recognized that the defendant is at a severe disadvantage. Surely it is not presumptious to suggest that the handicap of a defendant who happens to be a Negro is multiplied many times. Thus, when new evidence of the nature of that discovered in this case comes to light, it must be weighed heavily by the Governor, who has the responsibility to review sentences. As the Court of Appeals explicitly ruled in this case, the courts in Maryland are not available for consideration of new evidence more than three days after verdict.

Since the only person responsible for the lives of the three is the Governor, I am asking you to write or wire: Gov. J. Millard Tawes, State House, Annapolis, Maryland, in an appeal for clemency.

Madame Nhu - One of the Actors in the Fight of S.V. Government and the U.S. Government Against ?

Since Madame Nhu, part of the South Vietnam Government, is now in the United States and will be in Austin, October 24, I feel that it is a good time to offer a few questions and comments on the "war" or wars in South Vietnam.

South Vietnam has been a republic since the Geneva Convention following the Indo-China War. Ngo Dinh Diem was soon elected President and has, since that time, had a parliment favorable to him chosen by the people under rather questionable circumstances. Police "suprivise" the elections and opposition votes and candidates have a way of disappearing. One of Diem's opponents, Phan Quang Dan, ran as an opposition candidate in the 1959 legislative election and was elected with a 35,000 vote majority over the government sponsored candidate. When he tried to take office, he was "disqualified" and is now in the island prison of Poulo Condore in the South China Sea. It seems that voting in South Vietnam is similar to voting, or trying to, in Mississippi. Although the CIA isn't quite as active in Mississippi as in Vietnam.

Vietnam has a history of 2,000 years of peasant uprisings against feudal or regional control, but this is one of the first (in Vietnam) in which the U.S. has actively supported the opposition. On examining this war (with the usual vague and general figures) one finds that the combination S.V., CIA, and U.S. forces number about 510,000 against 31,000 guerrillas (about 10,000 more than last year) and 300,000 "passive" supporters.

The government forces are euiped with relatively modern weapons, have air transport available, and fighter-bomber support. The Viet Cong is supplied with older weapons from North Vietnam, China, and with newer weapons that they capture from Government troops.

Both "sides" indulge in terrorism; the Viet Cong have hacked wounded to pieces, burned crops, held trials for government officials and then executied them, and practiced various types of local intimidation; the Government forces have poisoned village water wells, sprayed chemicals to defolate trees (which also kills crops), and have a practice of attacking a village, which is possibly holding Viet Cong, with jellied gasoline in an air attack (which "regretfully" does not distinguish between Viet Cong and farmers). Another weapon of honerable mention is the Stratigic Hamlet program; which, by gathering families together makes for more efficient agricultural units, but those exlcuded for security reasons from the hamlet are sent to political prison camps.

This is a war in which the U.S. has been doing "reasonably well" in, but a number of military men admit that it will be a continual stalemate if the present S.V. government stays in power.

Another one of the wars features the South Vienam Government against the Buddhists and students. The shooting and killing of 11 Buddhists in a religious parade May 8, 1963, by South Vietnamese troops, armed, trained, and transported by the U.S. and U.S. equipment, was only one of the instances of government percution of a political minority which composes 70 percent of the population. Since that time priests have burned themselves in order to show the depth of feeling held by the Buddhists and point out, by their sacrifice, the harshness of the Diem Government; S.V. troops have conducted raids on Buddhist pagodaos; students have been arrested and held in jail; and street demonstrations have been stopped with tear-gas, rifle butts, and bayonets. Except for the proper names involved, one might think this a description of Birmingham, Jackson, or Selma.

However, this is not Selma, but only one of the other areas of the world, controlled or influenced by the U.S., in which official violence is part of the political order and sustains the present government in power. Madame Nhu isonly one of many, including the various Diems, the military, and regional governors, responsible for the oppression in Vietnam. As one might gather, from my biased viewpoint, this is not written as a protest against Madame Nhu as much as a protest against the seemingly general policy of the United States of expediently supporting or using those who will best "serve the interests of the U.S." without regard for the liberty, well-being, and even the lives of individuals involved.

Dear friend,

In October Cuba, along with other Carribean countries, was a victim of hurricane Flora. This natural disaster caused the death and injury of thousands of people. It killed livestock and destroyed property in all the countries; but Cuba was especially hard hit. Cuba's sugar crop, her main product, was ruined. Because of the years of United States embargo, medicines and equipment needed to combat disease are unavailable. Cuban doctors have based their practice on U.S. brand name medicines which are now unattainable. Hospitals are unable to accomodate fully the sick because parts for American made medical machines are needed and are unavailable. There is a desparate need for food and clothes for the people.

We are therefore asking you to send to the Cuban Red Cross, Havana, Cuba, clothes, food (not perishable) and medical supplies. If you wish, you may send us check, money order or cash to Alva Buxenbaum, Medical Supplies Fund, 80 Clinton Street, New York 2, N.Y. and we shall purchase the medical supplies and forward them to Cuba.

We are asking your help in the name of humanity, but also in the name of America. Let the food, clothes and medicines be our way of beginning to close the breech between Cuba and the United States in the interests of world peace and the people of both countries.

Sincerely,

Alva Buxenbaum

Now that a majority (?) of Texans have decided to keep the poll tax perhaps the next measure approved will be the granting of votes on the basis of income, one vote per $10,000. The very fact that a little over 300,000 people can make decisions binding on 8,500,000 people is a sad comentary on politics in general and Texas politics in particular. At least this points out in stronger terms the need to increase the size of the voting public; particularly an increase of people voting whose $1.75 vote tax comes out of food money rather than cigarette money. Otherwise Texas politics will continue to be like driving through an unlit Tunnell.

One means today of blasting "Tunnells" and keeping them cleared is the coalition of liberal forces now formed in Texas. However if this coalition cannot exert a political force this comming year, the various parts will probably revert back to the policy of catch as catch can (which usually means Texas gets caught short). The building of a liberal political force depends upon voter registration this year, which is dependant upon students to a large extent in some areas. In short, the choice of liberal or conservative government hinges on your involvement in voter registration.

This somehow brings me to the subject of the SSACC Conference this weekend (Nov.15-17). I still have hopes that at least one of you from each local group or collection of individuals will attend. In order to reach Camp Kinsolving from Hwy. 81: turn onto the street (Central) which takes you through the business district; drive through Belton downtown, cross the narrow bridge you will come to, and turn right; this will put you on the old Nolanville road, which, after two miles of driving will take you to the entrance of the Camp. If you get lost in the process, call the camp: WE 9-2603. IMPORTANT: remember to bring your own blankets, sheets, towels, etc.

The total expenses of the camp will be about $110.00. If 25 people attend there will only be a deficit of $35.00; if less people show up there will be a larger one. I am asking those of you who won't be attending the conference to contribute $1.00 to SSACC to keep the committee out of debtors prison. So far this fall SSACC has been run on money given me by my parents, plus one $5.00 contribution and meals given me as I hitckhiked. If we cannot contribute to our own maintainence now SSACC will dry-rot from lack of funds before the questions of purpose and personnel can be brought up, so please send whatever you can.

Peace,
George

The item in the Discussion-Information Bulletin, November, comes from Prairie View A&M; specifically, from Students for Equality, Liberty, and Freedom (SELF). When I stopped at Prairie View last week I was both suprised and relieved. Prairie View had been known to me as a place where something ought to be happening, but wasn't. Now the happenings are more than I expected, for SELF not only stands in opposition to personal limitation based on the idea of race, but chooses to oppose the idea that a university is a place of Administration parenthood and indoctrination of contemporary values. If you wish to personally contact SELF write to either Tommy Osborne or William Batts, III: Box 2807, Prairie View, Texas.

The following is a letter and sections from two pamplets written by SELF.

. . . . . .

Enclosed is a pamplet containing a list of greivances that the STUDENTS of Prairie View A&M College hold against the community of Hempstead, Texas. We are proud and pleased to inform you that considerable progress has been made in the areas of imployment, and the removal of signs denoting race.

However, we are not and will not, be pacified by receiving a few crumbs from the cake of freedom. There is now a group of approximately fifty students who are willing to take any non-violent action regardless of personal sacrifice, to achieve the rights which GOD gave us, and the constitution guarantees us.

We are dedicated to the doctrines of freedom and believe that you, being just men, will support us in our struggle to acheive true equality. We feel that you know better than we the manner in which you may most effectively help us in our efforts.

We would appreciate any comments, or suggestions, and, or pledges of support. Although we will not and cannot be stopped, we will weigh any criticism carefully.

This is our stand; in light of the current social crisis we cannot do otherwise. The STUDENTS for Equality, Liberty, and Freedom, SELF, thank you for your kind indulgence.

During the later part of June this past summer, some interested citizens of the Prairie View Community started negotiations with the businessmen of Hempstead on the subject of Area Desegregation.

In brief, the five major issues identified were:

1. Expansion of employment opportunities, public and private..
2. Desegregation of cafe, restaurant, and counter services....
3. Desegregation of all movie accomodations.....
4. Removal of all signs denoting race in all public places....
5. Desegregation of all motel and hotel accomodations.....

After two meetings, the businessmen expressed a desire to dummunicate on an individual basis as opposed to the collective group structure, as had been established. This approach, of course, makes it harder to satisfy the aforestated grievances. Upon receiving this discouraging report relative to area desegregation. members of the Prairie View Community interpreted this stand on the part of the majority of the business as a manifestation of disinterest in, if not opposition to, the legitimate requests of the Negro Community.

Therefore, it was felt that until we are confident that satisfactory lines of communication have been collectively reestablished, we have no other recourse but to divert our purchasing power into alternative outlets. "EFFECTIVE IMMEDIATELY"

OUR NATION MOURNS

Our entire nation and the world mourns the tragic assasination of our President - John F. Kennedy. His death, which shocked and stunned us, has placed our country in a sudden and unexpected crisis.

What is the significance of this tragic event? Will his death mean a deterioration of the trend to better relations between East and West -- an important part of his program? Will it mark the death of his proposed Civil Rights legislation now pending in Congress.

While the great majority of the American people feel a deep sense of grief, there are those in our country who hope to gain from the vacuum created by this murder. Those who recently attacked Adlai Stevenson - ambassador to the UnN. - when he visited that same city of Dallas only a short while prior. Those who criticized and condemned the President for his negotiation and signing of the limited test ban agreement. Those who were responsible for the bombing and murder of innocent children in Birmingham, Alabama. Those who beat, terrorize and have murdered innocent Negro and white Americans fighting to be free of rascism, discrimination and inequality. Those who constantly attack and attempt to weaken labor unions and who oppose legislation like the Youth Employment Opportunities Act that would help alleviate problems of unemployment. Those who press to enforce McCarren Act measures which outlaw freedom to think and act.

These groups -- the extreme right wing - hope that the death of President Kennedy will mean the death of his democratic steps forward. They hope and are moving to fill the void created by this horrible murder with their program of hate, fear and repression. This can not be allowed to happen!

We as young Americans, in memory of the democratic achievements and hopes of President Kennedy, say to those in the administration and particularly to succeeding President Lyndon Johnson -- you now have an added responsibility to the memory of President Kennedy and to the American people. That responsibility is to redouble your efforts for immediate passage of his legislation before adjournment of this session.

1. The Civil Rights Legislation
2. The Tax Cut legislation
3. Youth Employment Opportunities Act

We further urge you to make every effort to continue the work of our late President to establish normal and peaceful relations in the world - so that President Kennedy's children and the children of our country can live and grow in a peaceful world.

We pledge ourselves and urge our fellow Americans to all efforts for a fully democratic America. To fight in everyway possible for the immediate passage of the above legislation and in so doing establish a living memorial to the late President John F. Kennedy through an America which stands and fights for Peace, Civil Rights and a secure economic future for all our people.

BUILD A LIVING MEMORIAL

Dear President Johnson:

In this period of national mourning we must rededicate ourselves to the tasks which the late President had set out to accomplish. People throughout the nation mourn the loss of President Kennedy - the man who introduced the Civil Rights Bill and who signed the limited test ban agreement.

A living tribute can be paid to our late President by your determined leadership in behalf of the tasks which he began. We urge you to build a living tribute to the memory of President Kennedy by:

1. Insuring the passage of the Civil Rights Bill before January 1, 1964

2. Continuing efforts for peace through negotiation.

FOR RELEASE -
October 28, 1963

We believe in Christmas, because it is the birthday of the Prince of Peace and Brotherhood; the birthday of the Christ who chased the money-changers from the temple; who said, "Love thy neighbor as thyself;" who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, for such is the Kingdom of Heaven." This is the Christ we will celebrate; the great Jewish carpenter-philosopher who was born in a manger in Bethlehem.

Thousands of atrocities committed against humanity and the Negro people from slavery to the present time, have gone unpunished. And now we are mocking the Prince of Peace; throwing bombs in the Holy Place of God; blasting the brains of His children against the high walls of His Tabernacle in Birmingham; turning His day of days into a sabbath ritual of blood and destruction. We are guilty. Not only those who planted the bomb, but those who condone injustice and segregation and thereby give it sanction; those who profit from it and those who do not work to eradicate it. We are all guilty. And who among us can participate in life as usual, in business as usual, or even Christmas as usual?

Let us celebrate Christmas this year in a way that will bear witness to the life and the love of Jesus. Let us re-create from His Life that image including all the Adams and Eves and their countless generations. Let us repent this most recent of our crimes against humanity and God; the murder of or tender six of Birmingham, with the fervent determination that it will never be sixty, or six hundred, six thousand, or another six million.

This year we will give our children the profoundest gift of all; the gift of truth, which is the gift of love. And we will have the duty to tell them that Santa will not come this year because he is in mourning for the children of Birmingham, who will get no gifts this year or the next year or the next.

And for the children too young to understand we will make gifts and toys with our hands from boxes and cans and string and last year's toys and paste and paint and wood and love.

To the sellers of trees and trains and pins and pianos, we urge you to understand and to pledge with us, that this Christmas shall come from our hearts and minds, not from our pocketbooks. To the ones who must give something, notwithstanding, we urge you to give to the organizations and institutions working to build and strengthen the moral and religious fibre of our nation.

It is in this spirit that we ask all Americans of all colors, creeds and religions, to join us in this determination to put Christ back into Christmas and His Great Life back into moral and religious perspective.

NORTH CAROLINA FUND BOARD OF DIRECTORS TO MEET DECEMBER 13-14--COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS ON AGENDA

Durham, N. C. -- The Board of Directors of The North Carolina Fund, agency created last July to combat poverty conditions in the state, will begin the first of a two-day meeting here Friday, December 13.

George H. Esser, Jr., executive director of the Fund, said that the December meeting will be a routine session "to consider a number of business items" and to map further plans for the Fund's community development program.

Included on the two-day agenda will be a review by the Board of Directors of a statewide study of poverty conditions, a study now being completed by the Fund staff. Esser said that the results of the study will largely determine how many comprehensive community development projects will be necessary for the over-all Fund program to achieve a good cross-section of problems of poverty in the state.

The Fund has previously estimated that it will be giving support to from ten to 12 such community projects. About three-quarters of the $14 million available to the Fund for a five-year program is being earmarked for support of individual community projects.

The executive director emphasized that next week's meeting by the Board is not to select sites for Fund-supported projects. Communities have until the end of January to submit proposals for Fund assistance.

The Board meeting will begin at 4 p.m. Friday in The North Carolina Fund office. Afternoon and evening sessions are to be held. A final session Saturday morning will close out the meeting.

Membership of the 13-member Board is drawn from across the state. Board members are: Governor Terry Sanford, chairman; Hargrove Bowles, Jr., Greensboro; Gerald Cowan, Asheville; Dr. Samuel E. Duncan, Salisbury; Dr. A. Hollis Edens, Winston-Salem; Mrs. H. Frank Forsyth, Winston-Salem; James A. Gray, Winston-Salem; Dallas Herring, Rose Hill; C. A. McKnight, Charlotte; Wallace Murchison, Wilmington; Mrs. B. C. Parker, Albemarle; Thomas J. Pearsall, Rocky Mount; and John H. Wheeler, Durham.

ous young ladies objecting to the stale tobacco smell of their boy friends you would change the habits of a nation more quickly than all the cancer statistics in the world. Nevertheless cancer and the other health risks should remain our chief motivation for trying to bring this social change about.

Up to now two major mistakes have been made. Most of the talking has been at the intellectual level, and the scientists concerned in it have been writing as if they were writing in a scientific journal with no popular appeal. They have gone out of their way to look for every possible fallacy in their arguments, and given serious consideration to every counterargument put up, however absurd, thus leaving the ignorant public with the impression that there is a lot to be said on both sides so that they snatch at the straw, so welcome to their addiction: "It isn't proved." The time has come when we should have the courage of our convictions and speak of the evidence as being already accepted by all who have taken the trouble to read and understand.

The other major mistake is that propaganda both with adults and young people, has mostly relied on fear. Yet it has been shown by planned experiments that an appeal through fear is much more liable to arouse denial and rejection in the human mind than an appeal which gives some positive advantage to the action to be taken. This has been well shown in regard to cancer and other questions of health, and is the main reason why I think we should play down the admonitions on health, though still keeping the facts well before the public, and concentrate more on changing social attitudes toward smoking. I was interested to note that Senator NEUBERGER in her recent book "Smoke Screen" after examining the evidence comes to similar conclusions. The health reasons should be made known in a matter of fact way but final success can only come through changing social habits.

I do not think that antismoking clinics are going to make a very big dent in the statistics of cigarette smoking, but I do think that experiments with them should be continued and encouraged because those who want to give up smoking should be able to get the best advice, and support and because further research into the techniques of nicotine withdrawal is very necessary. I have been collecting up to date information on the clinics which have been established in Britain to put at the disposal of the Cancer Prevention Center of Chicago. Unfortunately, those who seek the help of antismoking clinics are liable to withdraw when they find that there is no magic pill and no easy way which does not require an effort on their part. It is therefore important that clinics should not seem to promise too much and should remain experimental at this stage. Most clinics report a success rate of 20 to 30 percent who stop smoking altogether but of course this is a selected group who genuinely want to stop.

In attempting to combat the cigarette habit is there any point at which compulsion should be used? Prohibition of alcohol did not work in the United States and I don't think prohibition of cigarettes would be more successful. There are however three fields in which I would be very tempted to use legal sanctions. The first is in the advertising of cigarettes and especially in sales promotion amongst young people which in the face of the present evidence might well be made an indictable offense. On a par with this is the avowed intention of some of the manufacturers to spread the habit in African countries where cigarette smoking is at present at a low level. The second point at which I would like to see some control is in the public appearance of leading personalities, be they pop singers, athletes, politicians or intellectuals. It would seem to me at least reasonable to ask if not to insist that in view of the enormous and rising death rate from cigarette smoking and the importance of not spreading the habit amongst young people they should not appear on television or on the stage smoking cigarettes. Third, there should be more widespread prohibition of smoking in public places, especially enclosed ones such as theaters, conference halls, and airplanes, where some rather dingy quarters might be provided for the smokers to retire to at intervals, leaving the remaining space sweet and clean for those who prefer it so. If authorities would take these actions, the general undesirability of smoking would be emphasized.

I have throughout been speaking of cigarette smoking as this is by far the greatest hazard to health. Indeed this is one of the strongest answers to the tobacco manufacturers who profess not to believe the statistics. If they are not due to cigarettes but to some other factor why do the figures for cigar and pipe smoking differ so very materially from those for cigarette smoking? To switch to cigars and pipes would undoubtedly cause a reversal of the lung cancer trend, but it is my personal hope that smokers of these even more pervasive varieties of tobacco would keep to their own enclosures as far as possible.

Finally I quote from Lord Hailsham in the debate in the House of Lords which followed our report. He was referring particularly to the tobacco manufacturers' delaying plea that more research was necessary before any action was taken. Hailsham said: "I do not want to say anything against research, by all means let us research on all these questions, but do not let us delude ourselves that research will buy us out of action now, or out of the belief in the conclusion which has now been established. * * * The impression that tobacco manufacturers now make on public opinion * * * will largely depend on the extent to which they prove themselves able to recognize as facts propositions which are accepted by impartial scientists everywhere. I believe it is to their interest to recognize the truth before and not after they are compelled to do so. The first class man is a man who recognizes and accepts compelling evidence, and not one that fights against it."

CAUSE OF NEGROES INJURED BY PROFESSIONAL AGITATORS

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a distinguished Negro citizen of my State, has undertaken a significant and detailed study of the effect on good race relations of demonstrations, disorder, threats, and intimidation employed by various groups and agitators.

The conclusions reached by Maj. Hughes Alonzo Robinson, U.S. Army—retired—were made after careful investigation into communities where these demonstrations had occurred and following conversations and meetings with average citizens, both Negro and white, in the areas affected.

Major Robinson is peculiarly qualified to undertake this research. He recently retired from the faculty at Fort Valley State College at Fort Valley, Ga. His record in the Army is one of honor. He served both as an Army chaplain and a Veterans' Administration psychologist. Highly educated, he received the bachelor of science degree from Springfield College, Mass., and later studied at six other institutions of higher learning.

I ask unanimous consent that a brief synopsis of Major Robinson's findings, published in the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph together with an editorial from the Albany (Ga.) Herald be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the synopsis and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

[From the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph, Nov. 15, 1963]

NEGROES' CAUSE IS HURT BY PROFESSIONAL AGITATORS

Editor, the Telegraph: During the past 4 weeks I made a survey of areas in which demonstrations were sponsored by the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and the Congress of Racial Equality. The results of the survey indicate without doubt that race relations in Albany, Ga., Danville, Va., and Birmingham, Ala., were seriously hurt by the activities of the groups named above. The real pity is that all persons of importance, except those connected with the demonstrations, expressed the view that much more progress would have been made toward granting Negroes more rights had not the radical elements from elsewhere gone into the communities in which they were not a part.

Responsible citizens of both racial groups had been working for months on grievances advanced by Negroes in various sections of the country. In time it is possible that the Negroes would have been given many of the things they desired had not the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., inflamed the situation with ultimatums.

It appears to be the consensus among Negroes in all sections that civil rights is an issue for politicians and for those who exploit the ignorance of the Negroes for their own economic advantages, influence, prestige, and power. It is felt among the masses of the Negroes themselves that the civil right leaders would not associate themselves with other Negroes except those of the "elite."

Ninety percent of the Negroes feel that mass agitation is the wrong method to go about improving the Negroes' lot. Demonstrations are usually in the form of intimidation which will not be accepted by constitutional authorities, regardless of the positions they may hold.

Aside from special areas in which demonstrations were held, I visited every community in Georgia with a population of 4,000 inhabitants or more. Nowhere did I find Negroes interested in participation in demonstrations except those who received compensations for their activities. What the Negroes desire and want most of all is a job, and otherwise be left to himself to live and enjoy happiness one among the other of his own group. The Southern Leadership Conference, the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, and the Congress of Racial Equality would deprive the Negroes of this inalienable right.

If the incentive of individualism is permitted to be destroyed, free enterprise will disappear.

Certain self-appointed leaders today pretend that they cannot express their will effectively except through marches in the streets or lie-down and sit-in demonstrations which interfere forcibly with motor traffic or the carrying on of private business. Our famed system of communication for the expression of ideas on controversial questions—through the press, through the television, through the radio, in meeting halls and auditoriums, and even in the pulpit is ignored by the racial elements who sponsor demonstrations. Have not all these facilities been made available to minority groups as well as all other groups?

FORT VALLEY.

Maj. H. A. ROBINSON.

[From the Albany (Ga.) Herald, Sept. 12, 1963]

THE VOICE OF NEGRO INTEGRITY

It is indeed unfortunate that an American Negro of widespread respect and integrity cannot voice a moderate viewpoint without being assailed by the radicals within his own race as an "Uncle Tom" and worse. But that, apparently, is the price he must pay for asserting values long cherished in the American tradition. The radicals will not have it otherwise because they cannot afford for their self-appointed authority to be questioned in the slightest degree lest it vanish altogether.

Nevertheless, a great many individual Negroes, viewing the racial crisis askance, continue to make a great deal of sense. One such is a retired Army major, Hughes Alonzo Robinson, who was attached to the faculty of Fort Valley State College until last June. A self-made man who lived on a Florida farm until he was 19, entered school at the age of 20 and received a bachelor of science degree from Springfield College, Massachusetts, later studying at six other institutions of higher learning, Major Robinson served both as an Army chaplain and a Veterans' Administration psychologist.

Interviewed by the Washington Post, he said he strongly opposes the Martin Luther King-type racial demonstrations. He applauded his students at Fort Valley for not participating in them. A far better course, he feels, is embraced by the difficult but rewarding improvement of self by the individual, by service to the nation, by sharing in full citizenship through obeying laws, by more respect for constitutional authority and by criticizing other racial groups far less.

In the opinion of the major, those Negroes who create civil disturbances miss the whole point of the basic needs of their race in American society. Obviously, the cry of "freedom now!" as devised by the Reverend Dr. King is catchy and compelling, but the undeniable fact is that every American, Negro or not, has "freedom." What he does not have is unfettered license. That he will never possess in a democratic society. No truly responsible man desires this questionable quality, for to possess it he must rob his neighbor of some portion of the latter's liberty. This Major Robinson understands full well.

His entire thesis is that the Negro should make of himself whatever he wills. Implicit in his belief is that the Negro can do so under the American system, just as the Irish have done so, the Germans, the Italians, the Japanese, the Chinese and other racial minorities. As he says, human nature is such that "certain ones will go ahead, even if the schoolhouse was a log cabin, while others may be assigned to the best schools and the best environment and still either drop out or fail to measure up to accepted standards."

In this respect, and others, Major Robinson reminds us strongly of the late, great Dr. J. W. Holley, founder and president of what is now Albany State College and easily the finest mind the local Negro community has produced. Dr. Holley, too, was labeled "old-fashioned" and "Uncle Tom" by the racial militants. But he was infinitely wiser. He knew instinctively, as well as by experience, that the color of a man's skin is not as important as the color of his character as measured by his contribution to the general good of the community. That was why Dr. Holley was adjudged by the white and Negro community alike to be a splendid man and a model citizen. He gave so much more than he ever received to his city, his school and his race. His memory is revered, not as a Negro, but as an outstanding human being.

A LUNCHEON WITH A COURAGEOUS MAN

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, approximately a year ago it was my distinct privilege to have been able to arrange a luncheon with the late President of the United States, John Fitzgerald Kennedy, and Martin Andersen, Editor and Publisher of the Orlando Sentinel.

Martin Andersen is a prominent civic leader in middle Florida, as well as a courageous, forthright and highly respected editor and publisher. Though we have differed on occasions, he is my friend of many years standing.

Upon the death of our late and great President, Martin Andersen wrote a remarkable editorial entitled "A Luncheon With a Courageous Man" in which he captured with the precision of words the true essence of John Fitzgerald Kennedy as he really was.

I ask unanimous consent to have this editorial placed in the body of the RECORD, because of its unique insight into the characteristics of our late President that have won the hearts of the American people and the countless millions throughout the world.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A LUNCHEON WITH A COURAGEOUS MAN

(By Martin Andersen)

No matter whether you agreed with him on all his policies or not, you had to admire John F. Kennedy.

He had a certain tough courage which is difficult to define, because it was a sort of courage which carried him forward in behalf of his beliefs in the face of great criticism from a large segment of the public and a large segment of the country.

He was a controversial figure, as he had to be, because he was bold enough to step up and stand out for his new and revolutionary concept of government and rights for all the people—with no thought to creed or color.

And yet, when the cowardly assassin's bullet cut him down from ambush yesterday, the Nation was shocked in its grief. Strong men and strong women wept after exposing themselves to hour after hour of the TV exposure of the tragic story. Others, too stunned to cry, thought of this young man's widow, his children, his mother, father, brothers, sisters and thought mostly of his great and sincere ordeal for his country.

President Kennedy was not a strong man physically. He was at death's door during World War II, after a Jap destroyer had cut his PT boat in half and left him for dead in an ocean of sharks. Ever since that time his back gave him trouble. There were times when he could hardly walk, so great was the pain in his repaired and wounded spine. But he did walk and he did travel and he did work and he did speak and argue and fight for his program and he courageously kept his suffering mostly his own secret.

We sat to the immediate right of the President one day at a luncheon in the White House some 2 years ago, with a group of six or seven other Florida publishers.

We occupied that seat of honor because our name came up first alphabetically. Greater publishers with larger newspapers, more circulation and more money were scattered around the table farther away. But President Kennedy followed the protocol of the alphabet and there we were not only in the White House for the first time in our life but we were having lunch with a President for the first time in our life and we were also closer to him than anybody else—except the man on his left.

The group of us arrived ahead of the President and were in a sitting room when he arrived. Senator SMATHERS introduced all of us to the President and as he gave us a firm, warm handclasp he called our names as they were announced by Senator SMATHERS. A waiter brought around cocktails. Martinis and scotch and bourbon and sherry. Most of us had a cocktail of strong liquor but the President took a small glass of sherry wine.

He never finished his drink, even though several minutes of conversation passed and some of the crowd took a second cocktail.

This was a busy man. There was trouble in Vietnam. There was trouble in Berlin. There was trouble in Africa and the Cuban thing and the Bay of Pigs fiasco had just passed. The President had plenty on his mind. But he appeared calm and collected and talked first to one and then to another of us, just about like a district governor of a Rotary Club would do. There was, of course, a certain austerity about the scene. There is no denying that we all held him and the high office he represented in awe. And we all addressed him, with care, as "Mr. President."

When I speak of the President's certain tough courage, I refer to his stand on Cuba.

We began asking him questions about his next move on that island, shortly after we were seated at the round table.

I am not going to quote the President because Senator SMATHERS announced before the luncheon that this was just an informal social gathering and not a press conference in any sense of the word.

But the President gave us to understand that he did not give air protection or an air offensive to the invading Cuban fighters at the Bay of Pigs for the simple reason that he did not dare risk a counter military move in Berlin or elsewhere or in "ten other spots" which Russia was able to initiate and which possibly would wind up in the last world war to be fought by modern man.

The popular thing before him of course was a marine landing on the island of Cuba and the elimination of Castro.

He admitted that this could be done—at that time—in 10 days of fighting.

He seemed to think that Castro, if given plenty of rope, would hang himself. And we would have been saved all the lives of several thousands Marines in Cuba plus the lives of perhaps several hundred thousand of Americans in "local wars" or incidents in a dozen different spots all over the universe.

At the time I disagreed with his plan, but later on, as I began to mull his program over in my mind. I realized the chance he would have been taking to invade Cuba. Not a personal risk, but a risk of many thousands of others. And we understood, as we thought over the situation months [illegible], that the President was willing and [illegible] to let the Castro crisis ride for a[illegible] and perhaps erase this problem in s[illegible]ther manner.

Right or wrong, s[illegible] a move demanded a strange sort of courage. The country, and Florida in particular, was crying for action and hollering about the Reds being just 90 miles away. But the President was able to ride with the punches as he understood there is more to the problem of running our country and keeping the peace than teaching this bearded upstart a lesson. He had more information than I had and more information than any of us around that table had. He also had a program and his program was aimed at peace and survival and the prevention of unnecessary killing of American boys in a dozen little wars all around the world.

We looked down at the President's shoes as we sat there and listened to him banter questions put to him by the publishers.

The shoes looked old to us. They were brown and had not been shined, it appeared, for several days. They must have been comfortable shoes and we surmised that he must have argued with his butler or valet about wearing them day after day as any ordinary American will wear his favorite shoes and, being the busiest man in the country, he just didn't have the time nor the inclination to get them shined.

I think he had on a brown suit. Neat enough but it did not appear any more expensive than our own. He wore a shirt with a slight pinstripe and a blue necktie.

He appeared to be not in too good health. And shortly after our visit, he did go to bed with a cold or some other slight illness.

He was a bundle of nerves and as he talked, he played with a piece of toast with his right hand, breaking it in small bits there on the table. He drank milk and after his lunch he pulled out a small cigar, little longer and a little fatter than a cigarette. He did not offer anybody a cigar, but a little later, the waiter passed cigars and cigarettes.

After the luncheon he guided us into the elevator and we got off on a higher floor and there was his beautiful wife.

"Why didn't you come down and have lunch with us?" he asked her.

"I would have, if I had known about it," she replied.

Then the two of them paraded us through the various rooms of the White House, Jackie explained each room and each piece of furniture and each picture.

There was no hurry.

The President and his wife appeared to have all the time in the world. Just like your next-door neighbor. We wound up on a portico looking out over what I would call the spacious backyard of the White House. Workmen were putting up collapsible seats for some affair scheduled for the next day.

There seemed to be no end to the job of being President—either for John Fitzgerald Kennedy or his wife.

He belonged to the people.

One may disagree with some of his policies, but he had the size and the touch of greatness. He cared naught for money and on most occasions carried none with him. Lyndon Johnson used to chide him during the campaign that he, Lyndon, always had to pay for the drugstore lunch they would eat on the fly.

He belonged to the people and the people loved him as an individual, because he was a warm, charming human being with a beautiful wife and two wonderful children. And because he was fundamentally a great American who believed in rights for all of the people.

TRIBUTE TO PRESIDENT KENNEDY

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, Mr. William E. Bradley, chairman of the Democratic Central Committee of Multnomah County, Oreg., has brought to my attention a resolution adopted unanimously by the committee on December 5.

Because of the very fine sentiments expressed in the resolution concerning our late beloved President, John F. Kennedy, and the resolution's endorsement of the forward-looking legislative program President Kennedy sought on behalf of the people of the United States, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Bradley's letter of December 6, containing the central committee's resolution, be set forth at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEMOCRATIC CENTRAL COMMITTEE,
Portland, Oreg., December 6, 1963.

Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR WAYNE: The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Democratic Central Committee of Multnomah County at its meeting last night. I thought that you might be interested in it.

Whereas the late great President Kennedy had dedicated his life to the establishment of conditions of peace and dignity for human existence everywhere, and

Whereas President Kennedy, preoccupied with international relations, had only partially accomplished his aims to secure these objectives on the home front, and

Whereas President Johnson has emphasized his purpose to carry forward the same tradition of our late President: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Multnomah County Democratic Central Committee, That the Congress of the United States be urged to enact into law as a memorial to our late great President, those programs—such as civil rights, aid to education, tax reduction, medical care for the aged—for which he fought so valiantly; and be it further

Resolved, That like-minded Americans everywhere be urged to write their Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States, to erect this memorial to a great American.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM E. BRADLEY,
Chairman.

SENATOR HARTKE PRAISES REMARKS OF INDIANA NEWSPAPER COLUMNIST

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, the assassination of President Kennedy deeply moved the people of this country and expressions of sympathy continue to be voiced throughout the land. Many of my fellow Hoosiers have sent their condolences through my office.

Few of the tributes which have reached my desk are as poignant and meaningful as that embodied in a newspaper column written by Mrs. Mary D'Andrea, society editor of the Logansport (Ind.) Pharos-Tribune. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the text of this column be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the column was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

NEWS AND VIEWS

(By Mary D'Andrea)

Words are inadequate in a time of great sorrow.

The loss of this Nation's President was one of inexpressible grief and frustration for the millions who considered him not a Republican or a Democrat, not a Catholic or a Protestant, but a leader of all men.

"Logan-land" residents expressed themselves in silent and solemn tribute, in special services in all churches, in a memorial service at Berry Bowl, in the display of the American flag at half mast or with black crepe, and in written words, lines of poetry.

Some of the poetic tributes to the late President, John F. Kennedy, are recorded here. Three of the local authors prefer to remain anonymous.

BLACK FRIDAY

From Washington to Dallas and back
This day for our Nation was very black
It was Nov. 22nd, the year 1963,
It will never be forgotten, but go down in history.

It started with a big parade
With our President in a motorcade
In the State of Texas, on a Dallas street
Never thinking his fate he'd meet,
When all of a sudden, above the cheers
A shot rang out that brought us tears.

And now he's gone, and left us sad
This youngest leader we ever had
But our Nation lives on and is stronger today,
Because we had him—J.F.K.

TO KILL THIS NATION

How do you kill this Nation?
Murder its leader?
Oppress its people?
Purge its name?
Destroy its flag?

How do you kill this Nation?
Benedict Arnold tried betrayal.
John Booth tried murder.
Adolf Hitler tried war.
Nikita Khrushchev tried intimidation.

How do you kill this Nation
If it is loved?
If it is free?
If it is Christian?
If it is America?

How do you kill this Nation?
Only when you destroy peace.
Only when you destroy the last American.
Only when you destroy the world.
Only when you destroy God.

A SHOT WAS FIRED

A shot was fired
An irrational act of man
Upon mankind
And though it was but one
It pierced the hearts of millions
Slaying a part of each.

A shot was fired
Producing not the death desired
But giving life anew
Through grief
To build men's lives
With courage and with love.

A shot was fired
In death to martyr
But in life
To give
A hundredfold
That which it was meant to destroy.

IF DADDY HAD BEEN THERE

The day was gloomy in spite of the sun,
People crowded around everywhere
But John-John missed only one
His Daddy was not there.

"Why do all these people come?"
Was John-John's puzzled look.
It wasn't a day for fun; besides.
He'd rather look at a picture book.

Daddy always read to him
Before he went to bed
But last night all seemed grim
So he left the words unsaid.

John-John couldn't understand.
When Mommy wouldn't play his favorite game
Because Daddy wasn't home yet, and Things just weren't quite the same.

MERRY CHRISTMAS MERRY CHRISTMAS MERRY CHRISTMAS

FOR FREEDOM FOR FREEDOM FOR FREEDOM

COAHOMA COUNTY BRANCH
NAACP

December 14, 1963

While the nation emerges from the shock of the death of the late President John Fitzgerald Kennedy, one of the best friends of the Civil Rights Movement, the following quote of a Negro laborer is symbolic: "I never knew I could love a White man that much,". This statement was made as tears streamed down his face.

Recent visits to the Whitehouse, by National and Local Negro leaders, give us assurance that the cause of Civil Rights will not suffer as President Johnson is just as determined as President Kennedy was to make America a showcase of Democracy. The only persons that can lose this great opportunity to gain Rights and Justice for the Negro People are the Negro people themselves. If we will not participate in activities destined to bring Freedom to all, then we do not deserve freedom. THE GREATEST OFFENDERS OF FREEDOM ARE THE NEGROES THAT STILL SHOP IN DOWNTOWN CLARKSDALE, FAIR DEAL GROCERY, 5TH STREET GROCERY, MONNEYHAN'S LION SERVICE STATION, WONDER POTATO CHIPS, AND JORDANS FURNITURE COMPANY.

WHEN THE POLICE OF CLARKSDALE AND THE CLERK AT FAIR DEAL GROCERY TEAMED UP AND KILLED EARNEST JELLS, AS HE PLEADED FOR HIS LIFE, ANY NEGRO WHO STILL TRADE AT FAIR DEAL GROCERY CAN LOOK FOR THE SAME THING. ALL JELLS WANTED WAS A BANANA. MUST IT BE YOUR SON, OR YOU, BEFORE YOU WILL BECOME CONCERNED??

IT APPEARS THAT THE ONLY WAY OUT IS TO THROW UP ANOTHER PICKET LINE IN DOWNTOWN CLARKSDALE TO EDUCATE THE NEGRO PUBLIC THAT DIGNITY AND EMPLOYMENT IN THE DOWNTOWN AREA CAN NOT BE EXPECTED UNTIL THE MERCHANTS FEEL IT IN THE POCKET BOOK SO BADLY THAT THEY LOSE THEIR RACE CONSCIOUSNESS. THERE IS NO TRUER ADVICE THAN IS FOUND IN THIS VERSE OF THE SONG OF WHICH SIDE ARE YOU ON.

DON'T "TOM" FOR MR. CHARLIE,
DON'T LISTEN TO HIS LIES,
US BLACK FOLKS,
WE AIN'T GOT A CHANCE
UNLESS WE,
O R G A N I Z E.

To better understand the real race relations in mississippi, all of us should read the address by Dr. James Silver of the University of Mississippi, entitled; Mississippi, The Closed Society. A few copies of the speech are available at our office. More than 200 copies of the speech ~~has~~ have been distributed in the local community. The request for the speech, from local white Citizens, has been tremendeous, and all who have requested it have been supplied. We are pleased with the interest by both racial groups in this literary gem.

THE CITIZENSHIP SCHOOLS ARE MAKING PREPARATION TO OPEN FOR THE YEAR OF 1964. IN THESE SCHOOLS THE ISSUES OF SELF HELP, SANITATION, DEPORTMENT, MORALS, EDUCATION, DIGNITY AND THE RIGHT TO VOTE ARE STRESSED. AS MANY SCHOOLS AS INTEREST INDICATES WILL BE SET UP WITHIN THE CITY AND COUNTY. APPLICATIONS WILL BE TAKEN BEGINNING WITH THE FREEDOM MEETING THIS WEEK AT THE CENTENNIAL BAPTIST CHURCH.

TRANSPORTATION IS AVAILABLE FOR SHOPPERS DESIRING TO SHOP OUTSIDE THE CITY OF CLARKSDALE. TELEPHONE HEADQUARTERS TO INDICATE WHERE AND WHEN YOU WANT TO GO.

FREEDOM MEETING, WEDNESDAY NIGHT, CENTENNIAL BAPTIST CHURCH.

NEGRO LEADERS MEET LBJ— HERE ARE THE RESULTS THEY SEE

Civil rights, it seems clear, will become a major test for President Johnson—as it was for the late John F. Kennedy. Negro visitors to the White House talk of resuming demonstrations unless Congress passes a civil-rights bill soon.

Congress, however, seems in no real hurry. Even with White House prodding, it may take months to get a bill passed.

In the White House, President Johnson lost no time before he talked individually with leaders of this country's Negro organizations.

As an aide to the President expressed it: "Nobody should get the idea that the new President is going to permit the Republicans to take from the Democratic Party the Negro vote in big cities of the North."

President Johnson, in his talks with the heads of the leading Negro organizations, stressed two things:

- Jobs hold the key to the easing of race tensions in the U. S. The White House will press ahead with plans for a cut in taxes and other measures designed to generate jobs.
- Laws that enforce Negro rights need to be strengthened, and Congress will be pressed to act as early as possible on civil-rights legislation.

The President moved quickly in an effort to pry loose from the House Committee on Rules the civil-rights bill that was introduced early this year.

That bill, already approved by the House Judiciary Committee, would authorize the Federal Government to enforce equal rights for Negroes in voting, jobs and unions, in such public accommodations as hotels and restaurants, and in such publicly operated facilities as parks, libraries and schools.

Most legislation must clear the Rules Committee before reaching the floor for action by the House. Mr. Johnson had hoped this would take place before Christmas adjournment. But Representative Howard Smith (Dem.), of Virginia, chairman of the Committee, made it clear he planned no early action. This was President Johnson's first rebuff, coming in his second week in office.

It remained to be seen how successful he would be in maneuvering the bill into law.

The late President Kennedy was unable to make much progress through his own methods. The civil-rights issue, in fact, has been the rock on which the 1963 session of Congress has foundered.

Persuasion. The new President, judging by his early moves, is determined to use whatever persuasive powers he has to try to get this issue resolved early in 1964.

First indications are that this objective will not be attained by a frontal assault on congressional opposition.

A discharge petition, bearing the signatures of 218 Representatives—half of the House membership—could force the bill out of committee. This procedure, however, would have to follow a rigid timetable which would make it all but impossible to get the bill onto the House floor before Christmas.

Top Republicans, furthermore, have said they will not support a discharge petition. This raised the question of whether "liberals" of both parties could muster enough votes to force the bill out of the Committee.

Now the House Republican Leader, Charles A. Halleck, of Indiana, after a talk with President Johnson, is predicting passage of the civil-rights bill in January.

After that, however, comes the question of getting it through the Senate, which could take months. Some leaders in Congress say that the only solution lies in compromise on the bill.

In that situation, Negro leaders are talking once more of demonstrations along the lines of those that sprang up in many places last summer, then died away with the onset of autumn.

These leaders, emerging from the White House after seeing Mr. Johnson, seemed to approve of the new President. They seemed cautious in their appraisal of his ability to get the civil-rights legislation that President Kennedy had been unable to get.

Chief topic: jobs. Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said after his meeting with Mr. Johnson that the President's chief topic was jobs for Negroes.

Mr. Wilkins, who made an appearance subsequently on WABC-TV, New York, recalled that Mr. Johnson—as Vice President—had been the chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

"He said that a good part of the Negro's trouble was the lack of employment," Mr. Wilkins said.

"He said he was going to keep an eye on this committee and on the work that it was doing, not only in Government employment but employment with firms that have contracts with the Government."

Mr. Wilkins said he is sure President Johnson will push for civil-rights action—not only from conviction but from political necessity. He added:

"I think Mr. Johnson enjoys the respect of the Negro community for his very great abilities, and, as Vice President, he emerged from the role of legislating for a single State or section and became a national figure. Naturally Negroes are skeptical of a man with a Southern background. But, on the other hand, they love Hugo Black [Supreme Court Justice, an Alabamian]."

Mr. Wilkins predicted that Mr. Johnson's background as a Southerner and former Senate Majority Leader would "bring a new dimension, a new skill" to the civil-rights movement.

On the other hand, he warned of demonstrations "if Negroes get nothing tangible out of Congress." Among other things, he said, the NAACP plans to launch a drive to defeat Congressmen who oppose civil-rights legislation. In the past, the NAACP has merely listed a candidate's record without recommending how a person should vote.

"Depth of understanding." The Rev. Martin Luther King, head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, was another White House visitor.

In mid-November, Dr. King was quoted as saying he would not support a presidential candidate in 1964. After seeing Mr. Johnson, he went no further than to say he was "impressed by the President's awareness and depth of understanding" of the civil-rights problem.

Dr. King said demonstrations by integration backers were "mentioned only in passing. But I made it clear to the President that . . . we will have demonstrations until the injustices that have caused them are eliminated. The President made no request that they be discontinued."

Dr. King said that his organization, which called off demonstrations after President Kennedy's assassination, plans to resume them in the near future in such places as Danville, Va., and Williamston, N. C.

The organization would take "direct action" if there is a Senate filibuster against civil-rights action, he said, and this might include another "March on Washington" or nationwide demonstrations.

More public works? Whitney Young, executive director of the National Urban League, said after seeing Mr. Johnson that he felt the President "has deep convictions in his own right" and is no Johnny-come-lately as a civil-rights supporter.

JAMES FARMER, of CORE, wanted remedial education for "deprived" children

In this talk with the President, as in others, jobs for Negroes was a prime issue. Mr. Young said he suggested to the President a vast public-works program to meet the unemployment problem as a whole.

President Johnson apparently did not commit himself on this proposal but asked Mr. Young to prepare a memorandum on the subject.

Mr. Young said that the President, for his part, seemed much interested in stepping up the retraining of workers by unions and industries so they could be fitted into job openings.

Remedial education. Another visitor, James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality, said on leaving the White House that he had asked President Johnson to sponsor a five-year program of remedial education for "deprived" children, mostly Negroes. The program, he said, would cost 15 billion dollars.

On this proposal, too, the President's response was to ask for a memorandum.

Also among White House callers was A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, who is considered the top Negro spokesman among union officials.

After meeting the President, Mr. Randolph said he asked Mr. Johnson for a $2 hourly minimum wage, as well as a "crash training program" to prepare unskilled workers for jobs in automated industries.

Out of these meetings with Negro leaders, conviction grows that President Johnson regards the civil-rights bill—and the Negro vote—as essential to his plans for 1964.

Experience and civil rights. What now remains to be seen is whether President Johnson, with his long background in congressional maneuvering, can use that experience to get civil-rights legislation through both houses of Congress to the satisfaction of the nation's Negro leadership.

Christmas is for children. But there will be no Christmas this year for the six who died at Birmingham. And so in memory and in mourning for them let us give to our children this Christmas not the tinseled tree, the toy trains, the talking dolls, but the great moral gift of understanding: an understanding of the grave racial and spiritual crisis in America today.

We will therefore tell them that the bombing of the church and those six deaths have made a mockery of Christmas and we choose not to be part of that mockery.

We will tell them that as long as the perpetrators of that murder go unpunished we cannot celebrate Christmas in the usual manner and feed those very economic forces which permit such crimes.

And we will tell them that the struggle of the Negro for equality cannot be won without sacrifice on the part of us all, both black and white in this country. We must remind them that the children in Birmingham made the supreme sacrifice while they are only giving up a toy...

This gift of understanding which is also the gift of truth and love is the same one after all offered the world by the man whose birth we celebrate each Christmas, the gentle carpenter-king of Bethlehem who said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me.." -- and he meant the children of Birmingham; who said "Love thy neighbor as thyself" -- and he meant both black and white in America.

Remember the Children of Birmingham then this Christmas, we ask you, and give your Christmas dollars to those Civil rights organizations working toward racial justice and equality in our country.

Remember Birmingham-don't buy for Xmas

ASSOCIATION OF ARTISTS FOR FREEDOM

Aims and Purpose

The Association of Artists for Freedom was born out of a shocked reaction to the bombing of the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church in Birmingham, Alabama, on Sunday, September 15, 1963, at which time four innocent children were killed while they attended Sunday School, and the lives of two others were snuffed out in the streets of that city on the same day.

We, as human beings, as Americans, as artists, felt it was time for us to speak to the conscience of America and make ourselves heard on the questions of freedom and human dignity for all peoples everywhere. Brought together in memorial to the tender martyrs of Birmingham, we have decided we need to remain in Association with each other and with other artists.

Our Aims are as follows:

1. To be a cultural adjunct, and not in competition with, the existing organizations fighting for civil and human rights in our country.

2. To achieve a meaningful unity of all artists who are concerned with the great American moral and cultural crisis.

3. To conceive and sponsor and encourage cultural and artistic activities in the Negro communities in particular, and in the entire American community as well.

4. To help make art a part of the ordinary life of all people.

5. In the main, our activities will be neither political, nor legislative, but cultural.

Annual Report 1963

TUSKEGEE CIVIC ASSOCIATION

Tuskegee Institute
Alabama

"SO MUCH FOR SO LITTLE EFFORT"

As I have reported on several occasions, the Tuskegee Civic Association is a civic education organization. A major function of the Association is the assembling, analysis, interpretation, and the dissemination of civic data, which, if used intelligently, might stimulate and facilitate responsible civic behavior.

During the year, the Association presented five special programs in observance of as many special occasions. In observance of the one hundreth anniversary of the issuance of the Proclamation of Emancipation, the Association presented as guest speaker Dr. Lucius H Pitts, president of Miles College, Birmingham, Alabama. On Race Relations Sunday, in February, Dr. George W Starling, professor of History, Tuskegee Institute, was the speaker. In May, in recognition of the efforts of Africans to gain independence, the Association presented Mr. Douglas Mujana, of Southern Rhodesia, a student who is majoring in social science, Tuskegee Institute. In June, as guest speaker for the observance of the sixth anniversary of its Crusade for Civic Democracy, the Association presented Mr John Doar, first assistant to the Chief of the Civil Rights Division of the United States Justice Department. In observance of American Education Week, and of National Achievement Week, in November, the Association listened to Dr. C R Dowe, basileus of the Iota Omega Chapter, Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, Tuskegee, and to Mr. Jerry C Carter of Shreveport, Louisiana, a student in sociology, Tuskegee Institute. On the other regular meeting Sundays, regular programs were presented.

At the Tuesday evening meetings, January - April, inclusive, the Association continued the study of the structure and the functioning of the governments of Tuskegee, Macon County, and Alabama, which was begun in October, 1962.

The Association is grateful to all persons who participated in any way on the programs presented during the year. Thanks are extended to the pastors, officers, and members of all of the churches in which TCA meetings have been held.

During the year, as in former years, the Association, through its officers and some members, has cooperated with other civic and political education organizations, such as, the Alabama Democratic Conference, the Alabama State Coordinating Committee for Registration and Voting, the Highlander Research Center, the Penn Community Center, and the Southern Regional Council.

Special assistance has been given to those parents whose children were admitted to the Tuskegee Public School which, in August, was ordered to desegregate in September. The Association is appreciative of the civic service which is being rendered by these parents and their thirteen children. Thanks are also due the officials and the agents of the United States Department of Justice who worked diligently to see that the orders of the Court were obeyed, and that the lives of the children were protected. Also deserving of commendation are the Macon County School Board, the County Superintendent of schools, the Principal of the Tuskegee Public School, and those teachers who continued to teach the Negro students after all the white students withdrew. Recognized and congratulated are those few white citizens who encouraged, and urged, their fellow citizens to accept the decision of the Federal Court, and keep their children in school. Theirs was not an easy task.

It seems that this report is mainly one of thanks. This year, it could hardly be otherwise. That which the Association has done has been made possible by the generous contributions of service and money of many persons and groups. Thanks are extended to all persons and groups purchasing life memberships, annual memberships, patrons tickets and advertisements for the sixth anniversary souvenir program as well as to all who contributed at the Tuesday evening meetings, and through the mail. We are especially grateful to the Alabama Association of Women's Clubs, which repeated its annual donation of fifty dollars. Very special thanks are given to Dr. John I Ingle, professor of dentistry, School of Dentistry, University of Washington, Seattle, Washington, who,at the suggestion of Dr. CliftonO Dummett, U. S. Veterans Hospital, Tuskegee, contributed $200.00.

Alyhough the Association failed in its efforts to stimulate and facilitate the registration of 1000 voters this year, it is grateful to the Voter Education Project, and to all others who helped the Voter Franchise Committee.

Again, as president of the Association, I must recognize and commend Mr William P Mitchell, executive secretary, for the many hours of effective services which he has given to the Association and to the community without any financial compensation. Appreciated, also, is the service rendered by other officers and committee members.

REPORT OF THE
EXECUTIVE SECRETARY

For fourteen consecutive years you have elected me to serve the Association as your secretary. For an equal number of years.I have endeavored to perfom the task and responsibilities entrusted to my keeping. During this span, we have witnessed the TCA grow from a membership ranging from 125 fourteen years ago up to 1700. This phenomenal growth has carried with it its attendant responsibilities.

During the se 14 years, our assets have increased from $250.00 to an amount in excess of $22,000.

While trying the best we know how to carry on here, we have been called on often to assist our neighboring counties. While this additional responsibility has demanded more and more of our limited energies we would want it no other way. We have derived great satisfaction from assisting these people and have, in turn, learned from them.

We continue to work with and assist, the Alabama Coordinating Association for Registration and Voting and have each year made our financial contribution of $300.00 to this organization.

During the year it was necessary to purchase another typewriter; to have our equipment covered by insurance, and to review our surety bonds with the view of making them commensurate with the liabilities of your secretary and treasurer.

On November 2, it was necessary that we move our office to temporary quarters in order that the office building in which we held space may be renovated and enlarged. We were successful in obtaining temporary quarters approximately four hundred feet from where we were, in the Perdue home. We are expected to remain here until February or March, 1964.

As we look to the future, we are still of the opinion that our life membership program offers the greatest opportunity to make us financially affluent. We shall continue to try to increase our fully-paid life members to 1000 - lookingforward to the time when the interest accruing to this account will substantially defray our operating expenses. There are 335 fully-paid life members on roll to date as compared with 270 oneyear ago. There are 192 partially paid members. There is presently $10,184.67 in this account - $368.16 representing interest accrued during the past 12 months.

As has been our system during the past six years, we have not prepared a detailed accounting for your perusal. However, we continue to invite you to inspect and constructively criticize the handling of your funds. These reports and accounts will be made available to any member of the Association upon request.

REPORT OF THE MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE

Seventy-four solicitors enrolled 871 regular members during our 1963 membership campaign. In addition, 21 new life memberships were added to our rolls during this drive. Thirty-two partially-paid life members paid out, and 56 partially-paid life members made additional payments on their $25.00 obligation. A total of $1,671.00 was collected during our drive.

While our regular membership goal of 1200 was not reached, we take this opportunity to thank all of our citizens who made it possible for us to obtain the degree of success attained in our campaign during 1963. We are indeed grateful to all who assisted us in any way.

We are again, calling upon you to assist us in reaching our goal for 1964, which is 1200 regular $1.00 memberships, and 50 new life memberships.

We are asking persons who have paid some on their life membership, to pay out if at all possible during this month-long membership campaign, or to make at least another $5.00 payment on their obligation.

Our drive this year, commences Sunday, December 8, 1963, and concludes Sunday, January 12, 1964.

REPORT OF THE
VOTER FRANCHISE COMMITTEE

Period: December 1, 1962 - November 30, 1963

The ballot used intelligently can do more good for more people with an expenditure of less effort and resources than any single instrumentality. This has been our credo as we have gone about working to cause the registration of all qualified citizens of Macon County.

It was early during this reporting period that we discovered that we had reached the unregistered within our immediate environs and hub of activities which are located principally in Precinct #1, who would respond to the usual appeals. While we recognize that there are still many hundreds of people in this precinct who are not registered voters, there were and are even more voters in the out-lying communities of Macon County who needed to be reached and urged to register. We sought, during the past 12 months, to reach these people.

Our registration goal for this reporting period was one-thousand. A total of 819 applications were accepted from Negroes; 150 were known to have been rejected. We have no report from 111. Five hundred Fifty-eight were actually registered. A detailed report indicating registration by months and dates follows on succeeding pages.

In our effort to reach and appeal to people in Creekstand, Franklin, Fort Davis, Armstrong, Roba, Hardaway, Warrior Stand, Chesson, Notasulga, Milstead, Fitzpatrick, Cotton Valley, Shorter, La Place, and Shady Grove, it was necessary that we travel over 5000 miles. We distributed 29,000 handbills, sent 1438 notices to 50 churches and 19 Masonic Lodges. We made 105 radio appeals; held over 200 voter registration clinics, and used more than 4000 sample registration forms in conducting these clinics.

It was in June that the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council approved a $3,000.00 grant to us to assist financially in this undertaking. Because of this grant, we were able to employ three part-time persons - two field workers and a clerk, to work with voter registration. It was stipulated that this grant would run from June 1st. through November 30th. However, because some money remained at the close of this period, permission was granted to continue to use the funds remaining for voter registration as long as they lasted, but not beyond March 31, 1964. This financial assistance enabled us to serve many more people than was possible under our system of using only volunteer workers.

In our all-out effort to get rural Macon County population to register, we discovered that a wide variety of roadblocks to registration existed in the non-urban areas that were not in evidence in Precinct #1. We were to learn that these persons were not as literate. Indeed, many were illiterate. Many were those who feared that the local whites would not look with favor upon their becoming registered and upsetting the status quo. Some would openly make such statements to us while other more sophisticated persons would simply not take part in our voter registration clinics and in our other efforts to assist them in becoming registred voters. These latter persons were to be found in the back pews of the churches and on the periphery of a gathering under the shade trees and environs of the General Stores as we carried our voter registration programs to rural Macon County. Many of these fears were unfounded and fancied. Ours, then, was a program of reassurance and an allaying of these fears to the skeptics as well as to appeal constantly to them to become registered voters.

Then, too, there were some who were callous from the years of plantation-life indoctrination; some were indifferent and apathetic, while others did not know what the word "register" was, and plainly said so. Some even asked, "Do I have to register?" Then, too, many Negroes in rural Macon County do not have their own transportation. This presented a problem of their getting to and from the board of registrars. We were able to eliminate this problem in most instances, by designating some local persons who had transportation to carry and bring them. We would pay their mileage.

The mainstay of our voter registration efforts here has always been, continues to be, those members on the Voter Franchise Committee who give their time gratis; who travel over the county in their personal cars and refuse to be refunded even for gasoline. Although I run the risk of being guilty of impropriety by failing to list the names of some members on this Committee, I feel compelled, nevertheless, to mention D L Beasley, Charles W Chisholm, Bennie Davison, Mr and Mrs Frank Bentley, Sill V Adams, Robert Knight, C G Gomillion. J A Watkins, Leon Lumpkin, Otis Pinkard, and John W Mindingall as a group of dedicated persons who have caused the registration of more people in this county than any other persons. These members, because of their abiding interest in, and dedication to, the program of causing the registration of the fellow citizens, deserve the plaudits of all who want to see civic democracy become a reality in Macon County, Alabama, and the South.

We are grateful, as always, to all who helped in any way in our voter registration program, and are especially grateful to the ministers for the use of their churches for the dissemination of voter registration information.

As your committee looks to next year with the knowledge that only 550 Negroes were known to get registered during this reporting period despite our concerted efforts, especially after June 1st., we must set a more realistic goal of 250 for 1964.

REPORT OF THE
PUBLIC EDUCATION COMMITTEE

Apart from its concern for a desegregated public school system, this Committee has also been fully aware of the great need to ameliorate the deplorable conditions existing in the Negro public schools of Macon County, both high schools and elementary schools.

The Committee is working very closely with interested parents in one community with tangible results. It has investigated the conditions in some of the schools, and is continuing its investigations in other schools. These investigations, it is hoped, will facilitate a more objective analysis of the situation. This is, of course, preparatory to the making of appropriate recommendations structured to bring about increased awareness from the citizenry concerning conditions which are handicapping the educational preparation of the children of the community.

There has been a noticeable increase in this awareness. The Committee is, therefore, optimistic about future steps of amelioration.

Stanley H. Smith

STANLEY H SMITH, Chairman

REPORT OF THE COMMUNITY WELFARE COMMITTEE

During the past year some increase in services rendered by city and county officials has been noted. While there is still much to be desired, we are pleased to report this increase.

Among the physical improvements have been:

1. The installation of the treffic light at Greens Fork. This much-needed facility was secured after lengthy negotiations, extending over a period in excess of one and one-half years. This was necessitated by the fact that Highway 80 is a State road and all improvements to, or work on State Highways must be cleared through the Highway Department.
2. The ball diamond in the Community Park was laid out and lighted; and while there is still work to be done on the park, it was used during the summer months by the youth of our communities.
3. Garbage collection services have been extended in several areas of the community with some sections receiving this service twice each week. We have been promised that equal services will be extended - including the entire area within the existing city limits.
4. Lagoon type sewerage system has been approved which will afford sewer service to all the residents within the city limits and to the Greenwood area. Plans and specifications for this work have been let out for bids.
5. Three streets un the Greenwood area have been paved. An effort is presently being made to secure funds to pave the other streets in this area.

6. Brown Street and Railroad Avenue have been approved for paving. Work on these streets have been delayed pending the approval of sites for the housing development.

For approximately eight or nine months, a Bi-racial Committee on Community Affairs has been meeting at least once each month. This Committee's functions have been confined to identifying community problems and making recommendations to city and county officials. While this group does not have official sanction as yet, it's work has been effective.

A Negro deputy has been hired by the Sheriff's Department, and two police-women have been added by the Tuskegee Police Department. One is stationed on Franklin Road, while the other works at Lake Street and the Atlants Highway.

There are other areas in which our efforts have been directed but have not borne fruit. We appreciate the cooperation of our citizenry during the past year, and we look forward to even greater gains during the year ahead.

CONGRESS OF RACIAL EQUALITY
CORE

38 PARK ROW
NEW YORK 38, N.Y.

Dear Friend:

This is how Eric Weinberger looked as he was released from a 31-day stint in three Alabama prisons. Eric was arrested on the Moore Memorial March commemorating the hope and belief of William Moore, the CORE member murdered as he was traveling to present his personal plea for civil rights to Mississippi Governor Ross Barnett.

Eric fasted during his entire period in prison. He felt that this was the only way to protest his illegal arrest and the inhuman system of segregation that demands the arrest of those peacefully walking along a federal highway.

Previously Eric had been tortured by police in Haywood County, Tennessee, where he was teaching sharecroppers, evicted from their homes for attempting to register to vote, new handicraft skills. Here is how he described this experience.

> "We were dragged out of the courthouse by the feet with our heads bouncing on the cement steps and put in the county jail ... I was beaten and punched in my eye. This finger was bent back to the ultimate. I passed out several times. They slapped me back to consciousness. The next beating lasted fifteen minutes. I was dragged back to the cell...

Eric is not the only CORE worker who has suffered. In North Carolina, more than 3,000 students were arrested in June. In Alabama others were beaten. These sacrifices by CORE members have been made willingly but not lightly.

Their suffering has helped to bring substantial change. In North Carolina, discrimination at hundreds of restaurants, hotels and motels has ended in Raleigh, Durham, Charlotte, Winston-Salem, Statesville, High Point and Greensboro. Within one week, 60 southern Howard Johnson restaurants opened their doors to all. CORE has integrated the major hotels of New Orleans and secured 59 jobs for Negroes there. The entire civil rights movement has been thrust forward because of the courage and devotion of CORE members.

CORE has spent thousands of dollars for training in nonviolence, for bail and legal defense, and for field work. Now we must have money to carry our program forward in the crucial summer months. Those in the front lines must appeal to you for support.

Won't you support CORE and its program of nonviolent action for interracial justice? Remember, when you write your check you write history.

Sincerely,

James Baldwin

The husky young Negro pushed a white girl out of her chair for the third time. She fell limply to the floor, brought her knees up toward her chin and clasped her hands behind her neck.

"That's better," said a second young Negro, David Dennis.

He turned to the girl who was getting to her feet.

"But you're still looking up," he said. "We can see your face."

Mr. Dennis, Mississippi director for the Congress of Racial Equality, addressed the audience of 30 Negroes, another white girl and a few white newsmen.

"That's the trouble with women," he remarked. "They just can't help flirting a little, even when they are getting knocked off their feet at lunch counters."

Each morning in the last week, Mr. Dennis has conducted an hour-long class in non-violent picketing and sit-in methods for the Negroes, who go downtown later in the day to demonstrate against segregation. He holds classes in the rear of an auditorium in the building housing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

A Symbol of Protest

Mr. Dennis, and another instructor, George Raymond, wear coveralls during the class and later on downtown streets.

"They're a symbol of protest," the CORE director said, "and a reminder that we're boycotting the downtown shopping area."

Beckoning to a Negro girl, Mr. Dennis placed her between two chairs.

"Now you stand here and don't let anybody carrying signs pass you," he told her. "You are a white agitator."

The girl glowered as a Negro youth advanced with a sign reading, "Don't Buy on Capitol Street."

On coaching from the instructor, she tore the sign from around the picket's neck.

The man turned without comment and began marching in the other direction.

"If the white agitator wants the sign, let him have it." Mr. Dennis called. "Get the point?"

The girl turned to her girlfriend seated nearby and said.

"You see, I'm a white agitator."

Advises Relaxation

Mr. Dennis emphasized the need for a relaxed attitude during the demonstrations.

"Don't tense or you will get the full impact of the blows," he said. "Probably it's a good thing to chew some gum. Of course, the Jackson papers may have something to say about gum-smacking niggers on the picket lines, but I think the gum helps."

"What happens," a young Negro asked, "when some cat reaches around like this and pulls at you?"

He demonstrated with Mr. Raymond.

"I go," answered Mr. Dennis.

"What if you're approached with a dangerous weapon?" asked the white girl who had practiced being knocked from her chair. She said later she preferred not to give her name.

"Anybody here got a knife?" Mr. Dennis asked. No one responded.

A white television cameraman dug in his pocket and produced a small pocket knife.

Backs Away From Knife

Mr. Dennis took the knife and brandished it at another Negro, who retreated slowly.

"You're not going to let me get that close with a knife," Mr. Dennis told him, "brotherly love or no brotherly love."

Joan Trumpauer, the second white girl, asked:

"What if someone comes at you from behind?"

Miss Trumpauer, a student at Tougaloo College, was one of the sit-in demonstrators who was covered with catsup and mustard on Tuesday by a white crowd during a three-hour clash at the F. W. Woolworth Company.

"If he comes from behind," Mr. Dennis said, "you have to hope and pray that you reach that man's conscience before it's too late."

Some of the young Negroes stirred restlessly, and Mr. Dennis addressed himself to them.

"We're trying to change a system with love and understanding," he said. "It's very difficult.

"Maybe it sounds stupid, but if any of you know what violence will accomplish, let me know."

He paused and looked around the room.

"Now," Mr. Dennis said, continuing with the class, "let's get us another picket line up here. And some more white agitators — some more people who just don't understand the problem."

Dave Dennis, 22, a field worker for the Congress of Racial Equality, protects his face with his arms while his hands are locked together behind his neck, guarding against rabbit punches, in demonstration for Students at CORE's School of Non-Violence in Jackson, Miss.

Intergroup. Hist. Introduction

YOUR COMMUNITY LOOKS AT ITSELF

EMPHASIS IS ON THE "SELF"

A Home Town Self-Survey is just what the name implies--a local stock-taking with emphasis on the self.

Civic-minded people across the South are discovering that the way to get things done is to quit using the pronouns "they" and "you" and start using "I" and "we." No amount of professional surveying, no amount of advice by visiting experts, can accomplish much. Things start happening when you and other local citizens get together, find the facts, and put them to work.

The effectiveness of that approach has been remarkably demonstrated in Jacksonville, Florida, and Greenville, South Carolina. People in those two cities concluded that their biggest problems were those facing the Negro communities. They recognized that solving those problems wasn't the business of one race, or of one special group, but the whole town's business. In each case, they organized a Steering Committee made up of representatives and influential citizens, including white persons and Negroes, city officials and civic leaders, ministers and church women, labor and business folks doctors, lawyers, and housewives.

With the aid of local volunteers, the Committee itself went out and gathered the facts. Then the Committee made its report to the community--a simple statement, from citizens to citizens, of what conditions were and how they might be improved. Finally, a follow-up group was formed to make the recommendations realities.

The people of Jacksonville and Greenville are proud of their self-surveys, and well they may be. For today they can look around and see the tangible improvements that have resulted--such as better schools, more health facilities, newly paved streets, slum clearance, parks, playgrounds. Most important of all, they can see results in a new quality of understanding, cooperation, and working citizenship which will go on paying dividends for years to come.

The Southern Regional Council is also proud of those successes. For, though the self-surveys were local jobs from start to finish, the Council's Manual for the Home Town Self-Survey and advisory services played a significant part.

During the past few years, the Southern Regional Council has helped to spread the self-survey idea to other Southern towns, where it has proved equally rewarding. This revised edition of the Manual is published in the expectation that many more communities will want to make use of it.

IT'S EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS

A self-survey draws its strength from the citizens who take part in it. It will succeed in direct proportion to the interest, initiative, leadership, and hard work contributed by the major segments of the community. In fact, the chief advantage of the method lies in its democratic approach. Working together for common goals can unite people of differing backgrounds, occupations, and everyday interests as nothing else can. Once established, that kind of [illegible] benefit your community long after the self-survey is completed.

So the more widely representative your Steering Committee is, the better. If any major group is omitted--whether it be religious, racial, economic, or civic--your self-survey will be seriously weakened.

Your community has its own pattern of civic life which will determine the make-up of the Steering Committee and its various subcommittees. But here are a few "don'ts" that will apply:

DON'T let the self-survey become identified with one particular group; there's no surer way to breed apathy and opposition in the community at large.

DON'T appoint minority-group "representatives" who don't truly represent their groups; nobody will be fooled and many people will be alienated.

DON'T fail to include public officials; their participation and interest are important assets and will do much to assure the success of the follow-up.

DON'T hesitate to add to the Steering Committee individuals who show outstanding leadership after the survey is under way; the initial selection, however, careful, is likely to miss some of the people who can contribute most.

YOU'RE THE DOCTOR

Communities, like people, have their own personalities. And, like people, no two are exactly alike. You can get help in the form of techinical resources, from outside the community. But no one can tell you just what kind of self-survey your town needs. That's a decision for you and your fellow citizens to make.

This Manual is designed as a working document which can be adapted to the particular needs of varying communities. Some towns will want to do a self-survey of the total community--including all or most of the fields outlined in the following pages. Others will want to single out only a few fields which are most in need of improvement.

In the case of Jacksonville and Greenville, the local Steering Committees felt that the whole range of conditions affecting the Negro population needed primary attention. Another city concentrated solely on housing--housing for the entire population, white and Negro.

A second matter for the Steering Committee to decide at the outset is what geographical area the self-survey will cover. If yours is an urban community, the survey may be confined to the city limits, or it may take in part or all of the surrounding county. If your community is rural, the survey may be county-wide, or it may be limited to a few neighborhoods. That must be determined by the make-up of the community: what local government provides most of the public services, how the people of the community make their living, and so on.

Some clerical work and coordination will be needed. Reports must be typed, material mimeographed, publicity releases prepared, and meetings called. An existing office staff which can give part of its time to these duties is a great asset. In Greenville, for example, the Community Council served as the sponsoring agency, contributed personnel for the routine work, and provided a "headquarters" for the self-survey.

Some such arrangement as that, if at all possible, will help your survey to roll more smoothly. Don't forget, though, that the survey belongs, not to just one club or agency, but to the whole community--and don't let the community forget it!

LOOK BEHIND THE FIGURES

How many? What kind? How often? For whom?

Your fact-finding subcommittees will be answering questions of this sort. But your self-survey won't be complete if you stop there. The schedules and questionnaires in this Manual are not meant to dictate all the information you will need; they are merely guides to some of the basic data which you will want to expand.

For one of many possible examples, let's suppose your subcommittee on health finds that the infant death rate is very high. You will have to look behind the figures to find the cause--or, more likely, the causes. Inadequate hospital facilities, shortage of doctors, public ignorance about prenatal care, attendance at births by untrained midwives--any or all of these might be major contributing causes. A thorough survey will dig out the answer.

The strength of your findings and recommendations will depend on how well you interpret the facts and figures that are collected. There are at least four steps to sound interpretation:

1. Subcommittees should make their initial reports as complete as possible. In addition to filling out the questionnaires, they should submit the results of personal observation, interviews, and any other information which will make for fuller understanding.

2. Fact-finders should supplement their own observations by consulting local people who work daily in the particular fields. In the case of infant mortality, for instance, doctors, public health nurses, practicing midwives, and mothers themselves can give the surveyors more insight into the problem.

3. Each subcommittee report should be given careful attention by the Steering Committee. Able persons representing many points of view, their discussions will strengthen the findings and recommendations in each field.

4. Once the reports have been worked over in the Steering Committee, it is a good idea to submit them to the appropriate public and private agencies for corrections and suggestions. You probably won't accept every criticism that is offered, but you will be protected against errors of fact and judgment that might weaken your report once it was made public. At the very least, you will have prepared yourself for the reactions of the groups most directly concerned.

Whatever you decide, you will find appropriate sections in the Manual. The questionnaires and schedules are flexible models which your Committee can alter to fit the structure of your community and the scope of your self-survey.

PAVE THE WAY

It's always good policy to let people know you're coming, and a self-survey is no exception. Your town doubtless has its touchy spots--political factions, civic rivalries, personal feuds, and the like. These are danger points which your self-survey will steer around if possible. But no matter how tactful and nonpartisan your intentions are, your self-survey may arouse suspicions if you fail to lay the proper groundwork.

A safe rule is to spend as much time as necessary getting the community familiar with the self-survey idea and sold on its desirability. Usually the place to start is with the people who make things happen--or keep them from happening--in your town. Many of these key people will be in on the planning from the start as members of the Steering Committee. Others should be approached individually and be acquainted with the methods and aims of the proposed self-survey. That way, when you launch your fact-finding, you won't be faced with opposition born of misunderstanding.

It's a good idea to include the editor or some other appropriate representative of your newspaper at an early stage. He can be of great value to your Committee in working out the initial publicity by which the public will be informed of plans for the survey.

Don't rely wholly on newspaper publicity to get the story out. You can reach a number of people through their organizations, clubs, unions, churches, and so on. These memberships will be of major help later in providing volunteers for the fact-finding.

TEAMWORK IS ONE WORD

The speed and efficiency of your self-survey will depend a lot on how well it is organized. To put it another way, if the team is right the work will get done.

Your Steering Committee, of course, will be the governing body of the self-survey. Its job is to do the overall planning and directing and to approve the final reports and recommendations. But it will probably need help for the fact-finding and detailed work--particularly if your survey takes in more than one field of community life.

The best way to handle the work load is to distribute it to subcommittees, whose chairmen will be members of the Steering Committee; that is, a subcommittee on housing, one on recreation, one on welfare services, and so forth. When large-scale fact-finding is involved, as in housing and transportation, the subcommittee can, in turn, enlist the aid of volunteers to complete the individual schedules. Again, be sure to make the subcommittees representative of the total community, including minority groups. Much depends, too, on the right choice of chairmen; pick people who know the fields their subcommittees are concerned with and who can give the energy and leadership required.

If there is a college or university nearby, don't neglect its resources. There will be people on its faculty--social scientists, statistics experts, journalism teachers, and others--who have skills your need. Students are often the best and most enthusiastic of volunteers.

[illegible] about recommendations: if your data have been well interpreted, many of the recommendations will emerge almost automatically. For example, if you have found the greatest number of infant deaths among low-income families who rely on untrained mid-wives, two recommendations immediately suggest themselves: more free and inexpensive maternity care by hospitals, public health clinics, or private physicians; and training and licensing of such midwives as will be practicing in the community.

It's wise to check all recommendations for feasibility. There may be a legal or technical barrier to the step which seems most naturally to be called for.

The main object of the recommendations is not to point out blame but to get results. They should be honest, but they should also be tactful. Your Steering Committee will want to give painstaking consideration to wording them in such a way as to avoid needless controversy and antagonism. Sometimes, of course, you must choose between trampling on a few toes and being less than honest. That's likely to arise at some point in any self-survey. The only thing to do is state the facts calmly and objectively, with confidence that most people will recognize and respect the undistorted truth.

Recommendations are generally placed at the end of each section, so they can be readily understood in the light of the findings. If you have any doubt about whether the reason for a recommendation is clear, it's best to be absolutely sure. Include a note along with the recommendation, explaining why it is desirable and what its effect will be.

FACTS DON'T SPEAK FOR THEMSELVES

Many a shelf is filled with dusty copies of survey reports made by high-powered professionals. That's where the self-survey is different: it aims to let citizens see for themselves and then tell their fellow citizens about it. The facts are not ends in themselves but means to an end--namely, concrete improvements.

Once your fact-finders have done their job and your Steering Committee has agreed on its recommendations, in one sense the self-survey is just getting started. You are ready then to begin telling the story--as dramatically, as graphically, and as widely as you can.

The first step is to get the findings and recommendations into attractive, readable form, mimeographed or printed, depending on the ~~respirees avao;abje/ Upi ,au want tp dp as ptjer tpwms aja~~ resources available. You may want to do as other towns have done--prepare two versions of the final report. One, the "official" report, will include all the subcommittee reports in full, plus any charts, tables, and supporting documents that are relevant. The other, the "popular" version, will aim more at brevity, simplicity, and eye-catching arrangement.

The popular version is the one you will want to get broadly distributed, and its effectiveness will depend on how readily the average citizen will pick it up and read it. He probably won't be interested in long statistical tables and wordy analysis. But he will be interested in photographs, drawings, illustrated charts, and punchy text that show him quickly and clearly how the survey's findings affect him and what he can do about it. There may be someone in your town--an advertising or newspaper person, perhaps--who is skilled in bringing facts and figures to life. If not, the Southern Regional Council will be glad to help you plan your publication.

At this point, again, the newspapers can be invaluable. They may be willing to run the final report in serial form--or, at any rate, a summary of it. They certainly will open their news columns to statements by prominent citizens endorsing the survey's results and calling for community support of the recommendations. Favorable editorials and photographs can also help stimulate public interest.

Keep in mind, however, that a daily newspaper is turned out at top speed by many hands; inaccuracies and damaging emphases can slip in very easily. To avoid that, cooperate closely with the reporter. If you are giving him complicated information, it's best to reduce it to writing, as short and clear as possible. Invite him to check back with you or some other informed person if questions arise while he is writing his story.

If your town has a radio station, publicity through that medium is equally desirable.

Take your story to the civic clubs and other organizations which have regular meetings. One city set up a speakers' bureau made up of leading citizens who had participated in the survey. The PTA wanted to hear about education, the Chamber of Commerce about industry and employment, the Council of Church Women about law enforcement, the Lions Club about all those subjects and more.

These are only a few of the ways to get your town to sit up and take notice of the survey's results. Church services, town meetings, and neighborhood get-togethers are some of the others. Whatever the methods available in your community, use them often and use them well.

THE PROOF OF THE PUDDING...

If your survey has had the right kind of participation, results will start coming in even before the fact-finding is completed. Officials begin to view shortcomings in public services in a new light; commercial agencies serving the public begin to see themselves as others see them; civic groups become aware of needs that never seemed important before.

These by-products of the fact-finding method are all to the good. But they shouldn't be allowed to take the steam out of the follow-up. An effective self-survey will go on producitng results for years, provided interest and leadership are kept alive. Organized activity is the only way to guarantee that. The final act of the Steering Committee should always be the establishment of a Follow-up Committee which will meet regularly, keep the recommendations before the public, and work with established groups on specific projects.

The logical people to serve on the Follow-up Committee are those who have shown the most interest and ability in the course of the self-survey. Often the simplest thing to do is to convert the Steering Committee itself into such a body. In any case, it is essential to keep enough of the original leadership active to preserve continuity and know-how.

Two years after its self-survey was completed, the Jacksonville Follow-Up Committee was still keeping tabs on progress and reporting to the public. And it was able to point to over sixty-five impressive achievements which grew, directly or indirectly, from the survey. Since then the list has grown even longer.

To retogress a moment, I would like to report on another sort of isolated project that I've been carrying through. I think of it as certainly compatible with my work with the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee and the Southern Conference Educational Fund. It's an interesting sidelight to my case in Mississippi.

I was very much concerned about the lawyer situation in Mississippi. I knew from accounts of people who had been involved in the civil rights struggle in Mississippi that it was very difficult to get legal counsel. There are very few Negro lawyers in Mississippi and the ones who are in Mississippi are literally swamped with cases involving civil rights. So I wanted to conduct a project to put the white lawyers in Mississippi on a spot in which they would have to choose between their personal prejudices and their code of ethics as lawyers. Therefore, I wrote to about 40 or 45 lawyers and called about 5 or 6 more asking them to take my case in McComb in which I was involved in an anti-segregation demonstration and was arrested. I'd like to report some of the results of this.

I contacted Attorney John Satterfield the president of the American Bar Association and he lived luckily in Yazoo City, Miss. I asked him to take my case. He refused to take it on the grounds that he was too busy. After the trial in Municipal Court I contacted him again and asked if he would have time to take my case in the County Court. He again refused and has consistently refused and has refused even to answer letters after the first two.

I also asked Ross Barnett, Jr., the son of the governor of Mississippi and a lawyer, to take my case. He asked me some of the details about the case. I told him it involved a demonstration. He asked what kind of demonstration. I said a demonstration against segregation with Negro students. He said, "I'm sorry, I can't handle that case." I said, "You can't consider taking it at all?" He said "No, I can't."

To the lawyers I contacted by mail, I wrote the following letter:

"Dear Sir:

On October the 4th in the city of McComb I became engaged as a matter of conscience in an activity against racial discrimination in Pike County. Being a white man and involved with Negroes in a protest march, I am encountering difficulty securing white legal representation on my trial on charges of disturbing the peace.

I am due for arraigment on appeal May 14 in Magnolia, Miss. Could I engage you to represent me? If you can take my case I would appreciate your sending me an estimate of your fee and suggestion of a time when I could discuss the case with you."

So this was the kind of pattern I encountered all along.

I received numerous letters back from lawyers and I will give you just a few excerpts from these to indicate the way that segregation has undermined the very ethics of the legal profession and how prejudice tends to destroy a man in many other areas.

I have here a letter from _____, an attorney in Hazelhurst, Mississippi, dated March 30, 1962 He writes:

"John Robert Zellner Century, Fla.

Dear Sir:

Receipt is acknowledged of your letter, March 22nd, 1962. There was no excuse or justification for outside agitators coming into Mississippi seeking notoriety. No matter of conscience was involved. I have lived all my life in Mississippi and grew up in a community where there were more Negroes than there were white people. The two races got along fine. I'm on the school board in the city of Hazelhurst and the Negroes here have a half million dollar school plant, their facilities being much better than that of the whites. As far as I'm concerned you're not interested in protecting the rights of the Negro race but you are seeking notoriety for pay, Therefore, I suggest that you get a lawyer from the group that you are a part of. If you prefer to promote the Negro race against the white race and prefer to be black instead of white then you employ a Negro lawyer.

Yours very truly,

_____ "

This is an example. Now I'd also like to give you an example of one of the good replies, although it was still a refusal. This is from _____, dated April 16, 1962:

"Your letter dated April 7, 1962, has been received. I admire your courage and you are certainly entitled to legal representation. I have engaged in limited amount of practive outside of _____ County but I have confined such practice to matters in connection with labor relations and I have not engaged in any practice in connection with criminal law.

It seems to me that in matters of this kind where constitutional rights of individuals are involved there should be some organization that could and would provide legal counsel and representation. I practice alone and at times have a rather rough way of it, partially because I have been identified for a long time with attempts to improve the economic status of laboring people.

I find now that some of this segment of population whose economic status has been appreciably improved appear to have forgotten the source of their economic betterment and are now engaged in states rights, fighting sin and keeping the quote 'nigger" in his place.

There are some very fine law firms here in _____, some of them claim to be interested in the rights of humanity but I couldn't say as to whether these firms claims bear the degree of sincerity to the extent of defending someone facing charges in a situation such as yours.

May I again say I appreciate your letter but I feel that under the circumstances it would be best that I decline an attempt to represent you.

Sincerely,

_____"

Just a few statements from other letters:

"Under no circumstances would I be interested in representing you as I feel very strongly that you and your kind are doing a disservice to all of the people in this state both black and white.

Sincerely yours,

_____"

"In view of my own personal belief, it will be impossible for me to represent you on this charge. I respect your right to form your own opinion with regard to the question of racial discrimination in the state of Mississippi but I feel that you are definitely wrong in becoming involved in such a demonstration as was carried on at McComb for the obvious purpose of creating a civil disturbance.

The colored and white people of Mississippi have had mutual respect for one another for many years and demonstrations of this character can do nothing but destroy the harmony that has existed in the past between the two races."

This is from a lawyer,-according to his professional ethic, a lawyer is not supposed to refuse his services to a defendant because of his personal beliefs. And yet this is what they write in Mississippi. I feel it is necessary to expose; so this is one of the things that I have attemtped on the side.

1st TIME EOC OPERATES WITH FULL 10-MEMBER BODY

With the appointment of five new commissioners by Mayor Theodore McKeldin, EOC is now operating for the first time this year at its full 10-member capacity.

The new members are: H. Warren Buckler, Jr., chairman; Marshall W. Jones, Jr., Mrs. Katherine Black Massenburg, the Rev. Alfred B. Starratt and Hural Thompson.

Mr. Buckler, an attorney and member of the law firm of Niles, Barton, Gans and Markell, succeeds Dr. Raymond V. Rangle whose term expired last October. Mr. Buckler's term runs until October 1965.

Mr. Jones, an undertaker, succeeds Robert B. Watts whose term expired last October. Mr. Jones term will run until October 1965.

The Rev. Mr. Starratt, Ph.D. and rector of Emmanuel Church, succeeds Manuel E. Lefko, who resigned before his term expired. Dr. Starratt will serve the remainder of Mr. Lefko's term until October 1964.

Mr. Thompson, representative of labor, is president of Local Union 2610, United Steelworkers of America and the first Negro to serve in this capacity. He succeeds Francis S. Filbey who resigned before his term expired. Mr. Thompson will serve the remainder of Mr. Filbey's term until October 1963.

Mrs. Massenburg, a civic leader and technical officer for the Seventh Congressional District 1960 decennial census, succeeds John Hauswald whose term expired last October. Mrs. Massenburg's term extends until October 1965.

Other members of the commission include: Mrs. Emil Henning, James J. McDonnell, Mrs. Charles Michael, Leon Sachs and William Tutton.

BANKS TOLD TO IMPLEMENT MERIT EMPLOYMENT POLICIES

Bank personnel managers throughout the country have been advised that unless they implement merit employment policies, they will hold themselves subject to community, political and economic pressures.

This warning was issued recently in Chicago to delegates at the National Personnel Conference of the American Bankers Association by William G. Caples, vice-president, industrial and public relations of Inland Steel Company and also commissioner of the Chicago Commission on Human Relations.

Citing the fact that some of the banks throughout the nation have improved their hiring practices "either from threat of legal action or from the exercise of strong informal pressure," Mr. Caples avowed, "Sooner or later every major employer is going to be put on the spot. . . . .". He made reference to nationwide reports which indicate an approximate $2,700 difference in earnings between white and non-white employees in the banking industry and commented: "This situation can hardly be accidental. Nor can it be merely a question of the availability of qualified workers, although that may play some part in it."

According to national figures, in the banking industry in 1959, white male employees averaged $5,664 in earnings while non-white male employees averaged $2,916. Mr. Caples attributed this differential to the fact that almost no non-white employees occupy the more well paid professional and supervisory jobs in the industry.

He told the personnel managers that they are the ones with the knowledge, skill, influence and power to introduce merit employment practices. He pointed out: "A good personnel manager is a realist. He knows fact from fiction in the field of human capabilities and human behavior. . . . .He knows equally well what factors are relevant to the quality of an employee's performance and what factors are not relevant. And he know that foremost among the irrelevant factors is the color of a person's skin."

EYES – WISE

LITERATURE – The Commission has begun issuing single-paged "Photograms" to employers and students throughout the city. These releases are picture pages which show Negro and white employees in actual job situations. Limited copies are available for distribution to civic organizations.

Two pamphlets: "Equal Employment Opportunity in Baltimore" and "Equal Job Opportunity For All" are now being revised and updated. Copies of the originals are still available.

TELEVISION – Now being shown on all three television channels is a one-minute animated cartoon spot on merit employment depicting an Indian president of a blanket company who is eventually convinced that the American way of life is to hire everyone regardless of race, color or creed.

THEATRES – All neighborhood theatres have been supplied with two 30-second film trailers in which two EOC staff members give statements on seeking employment and the necessity to be qualified for good jobs. The films will be shown interchangeably throughout this year.

TRANSIT CO. – All buses and streetcars throughout the city are carrying cards stating that discrimination in employment is prohibited by local law.

IN OTHER PLACES

Durham, N.C. – Dr. James T. Taylor, recently employed as administrative officer with the North Carolina Employment Security Commission, is the first Negro to hold a position of this nature in that State. He works with employers in an effort to develop merit hiring policies.

Fayette County, Tenn. – Through the efforts of the National Sharecroppers Fund, application for help for unemployed Negro sharecroppers was filed under the Area Redevelopment Act. As a result, a new metal plating plant is now under construction in the county, and, upon completion, will hire men at decent wages regardless of color.

Pittsburgh, Pa. – The Urban League has been requested by United Airlines to refer candidates for employment as stewardesses. The training school is located in Chicago.

Colorado – The Colorado Supreme Court recently handed down a decision upholding the legality of the State's 1959 Fair Housing Act and reaffirmed the "inalienable" right of any person to buy property. The ruling reversed a previous District Court decision which held that the act violated constitutional guarantees of property rights.

Miami, Fla. – Donald D. Weddington, instructor of freshman math, is the first Negro to be appointed a member of the faculty at the University of Miami.

Oklahoma City, Okla. – John E. Green, attorney, has been appointed as assistant Federal district attorney for the state and is the first Negro to serve in this capacity.

North Carolina – Governor Terry Sanford, aiming to encourage better training of Negro youth, has organized a Good Neighbor Council composed of 24 members to work toward that objective.

Texas – During the recent legislative session, Negro secretaries were hired by members of the all-white state legislature for the first time. The employees were selected from Houston-Tillotson College, a Negro institution.

Erie, Pa. – A new anti-discrimination ordinance has been passed rewriting the employment provisions and embracing housing and public accommodations. The law, which is patterned after the one for the State of Pennsylvania, also changes the name of the Erie Community Relations Commission to the Human Relations Commission.

LOCAL HIGHLIGHTS

- As result of recent ruling by the city solicitor, the Baltimore City Public Accommodation law has been revived because of specific amendment to the state trespass act. Several cases are now being processed by EOC.
  In view of the fact that the state Public Accommodation law also applies to Baltimore City, the City Solicitor and the Attorney General have ruled that both laws apply within the city.
- An Ordinance has been introduced into the City Council banning discrimination in the sale, lease, rental or financing of housing. If passed, this ordinance will be enforced by EOC.
- In addition to functions given EOC by city ordinance: discrimination in employment, public accommodations, and possibly housing, the Commission may be entrusted by Mayor McKeldin with the responsibility of acting as a concilliation agency in all other human relations areas.

THE WONDERFUL WORLD OF THE NURSING PROFESSION

Looking for a job which guarantees you a life time of work and good pay no matter who you are, what you are or where you are?

Well, if you have one – three or four years to devote to study and training, and you are concerned with the care of the sick, the prevention of disease and the promotion of health, then Nursing is the field for you. This is one of the few professions which offers a wide range of job opportunities. Positions are available in hospitals, public health agencies, schools, industry, government (both state side and foreign service) and the armed forces.

Furthermore, here is one career where you can get paid for seeing whether or not you have the patience, emotional stability, intelligence and sympathy to enter the field. All you have to do is work at any hospital as a Nurse's Aide to learn whether or not you are suitable.

There are three areas of training and study which you can consider, depending on the amount of time and money you have to invest in the program. The least expensive and time consuming is that for Practical Nursing where the one-year training program costs range from $20 to $125. In this field the student earns a certificate or diploma, and upon passing the state board examinations obtains a license and is eligible to practice anywhere in the country.

The next program is the three-year hospital course ranging in price from $300 to $1100. In this area the student earns a diploma, and upon passing the state board examinations is licensed as a registered nurse and is qualified to work anywhere in the country.

The third program is the four-year college course which costs approximately $1200 per year. In this area the student earns a Bachelor's Degree, with a major in nursing, and upon passing the state board examination is licensed as a registered nurse and is qualified to work anywhere in the country.

Financial aid through loans and scholarships is available in the three programs.

NEW EOC INVESTIGATOR

Mrs. Maria Armstrong, former personnel technician with the Baltimore Civil Service Commission, has joined the EOC staff as Field Representative. In addition to assisting in investigating complaints, Mrs. Armstrong also conducts educational visits to business establishments under EOC jurisdiction to determine general hiring practices.

BRANCH OFFICES SUBJECT TO FEP LAWS

A recent U.S. Supreme Court decision has reaffirmed the position of state and city FEP Commissions claiming jurisdiction over firms which maintain employment offices and district offices within such jurisdictions, notwithstanding the fact that home offices may be located elsewhere.

The decision resulted from an appeal filed by the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commission after the Colorado state courts had determined that the agency did not have the right to insist that an interstate airline maintain a policy of merit employment. Involved in the case was a former Negro Air Force captain, Marlon D. Green, who in 1957 sought a job as pilot with Continental Air Lines, Inc. of Denver, Colorado. Although he qualified through examination, Green contended that he was not hired because of his race. He pointed out that the white men who were tested got jobs although he had more flying experience.

Investigation by the Colorado Commission revealed discriminatory hiring practices on the part of the airline, and subsequently the airline was ordered to enroll Green in its next pilot-training class.

The U.S. Supreme Court decision was handed down in April 1963, nearly six years after Green had filed his application with the airline. The father of six children and a former classmate of astronaut Virgil Grissom, he had been unable to obtain suitable employment for the work he is trained to do. At present he has accepted a position flying for the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation out of Denver, pending actual placement on the job at Continental Air Lines.

BUSINESS SOCIALS TO BE MIXED

Social functions sponsored by employers and labor unions for the benefit of employees or members must be conducted on a non-descriminatory basis.

This determination was made by the Equal Opportunity Commission after it was learned that certain companies which otherwise maintained a merit employment policy were permitting minority group workers to participate only in segregated social affairs.

The new regulation, entitled "Employer and Labor Union Sponsored Social Events", reads as follows:

"Pursuant to Sections 10 (a) and 12 (e) of the Equal Opportunity Ordinance No. 379, as amended by Ordinance No. 409, (Article 14A Baltimore City Code)

"No employer or labor union subject to Ordinance 379, as amended, shall make any differentiation among employees or members on the basis of race, religion, color, national origin or ancestry with respect to attendance at, or participation in, social events which are directly or indirectly sponsored by the employer or labor union for the benefit of employees or members."

47% NEGRO UNEMPLOYED

Because of EOC's concern with the number of Negroes unemployed in Baltimore City, the staff recently conduced a five-day survey at the Baltimore City Claim Office of the Maryland State Employment Service. Results of this study showed that approximately 47 percent of the persons drawing unemployment compensation in the city are Negro.

This percentage was determined from the total number of persons, both Negro and white, who appeared at the Claim Office, to collect their unemployment checks during the five-day period.

In another research project, the EOC is in process of gathering census data to determine average incomes, education and job positions of white and non-white residents of established neighborhoods in the city. From this study, the EOC staff intends to show how the non-white residents measure up to the whites in certain sample residential areas.

"EMPLOYMENT BAROMETER" INITIATED WITH FIRST YOUTH LABOR REPORT

The primary phase of the EOC's "Equal Employment Barometer" is now being established with the completion of a report on the initial experiences of white and Negro youth on the labor market in Baltimore City.

This report is the first of a series of reports to be developed from a research study conducted recently under the direction of Dr. Bernard Levinson of the Department of Social Relations of Johns Hopkins University. The study was made at the request of the EOC in order to determine if Negroes and whites with comparable education receive comparable jobs and earnings.

With the cooperation of the Department of Education of Baltimore City and the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivor's Insurance, data was obtained based on records of graduates of Carver Vocational-Technical High School and Merganthaler Vocational-Technical High School. The study includes only graduates who pursued courses taught at both schools during the years 1956-1960. For the males there were nine common trades: auto mechanics, carpentry, commercial art, electrical construction and maintenance, food preparation and service, machine shop, tool and die making, radio television and electronics, trowel trades and welding. For the females there were three common trades: business education, cosmetology and dressmaking.

The following findings in the initial report present a factual account of earnings and employment during the first year or so after the students have left high school:

1. In the first year following graduation, the median earnings of Carver female graduates was approximately $11 per week, while that of Merganthaler females was about $50 per week. In only one of the nine graduating classes studied, that of January 1958, did the median Carver earnings reach 50 percent of the median Merganthaler earnings.

2. Carver males did relatively better than Carver females, for their median earnings was about $22 per week. On the other hand, the median earnings for the Merganthaler males was about $38 per week.

3. The differences in earnings, in large part, stemmed from differences in employment rates. During the first year, only 1 in 4 Carver females was regularly employed, and only 1 in 2 Carver males was employed, while 3 in 4 Merganthaler males and females were regularly employed.

4. Within three months after graduation, 90 percent of the Merganthaler females were gainfully employed while scarcely over 50 percent of the Carver females were employed. For male graduates, at the end of the first year after graduation, 92 percent of the Merganthaler males were employed while 85 percent of the Carver males were employed.

5. Differences in employment experiences did not abruptly start at graduation but continued a pattern that was well under way at graduation. For example, one year before graduation 50 percent of Merganthaler females were employed, whereas, only 14 percent of Carver females were employed.

6. In earnings, a regularly-employed Merganthaler female could expect, on the average, about $14 per week more than the regularly employed Carver female, while the Merganthaler males could expect to earn about $19 more than the Carver male.

In addition, the report also revealed that in some instances the highest paid trade for Negroes was the lowest paid trade for whites. For example, during the first year after graduation, the highest paid Carver trade, electrician, was the lowest paid Merganthaler trade.

Union discrimination was cited in the report as being a cause for the differential in employment experiences between the Carver males and Merganthaler males. However, a question was raised in the report regarding the differential between the females of both schools inasmuch as the majority of them are in business education. Despite the apparently great demand for business majors, generally, Carver females could not achieve more than 55 percent employment. Furthermore, the median annual earnings of June graduates who majored in business education for a period of 7-18 months after graduation was $621 for Carver girls and $2,613 for Merganthaler girls.

The report also takes into consideration the variation in cultural backgrounds of the graduates of both schools, but leaves unanswered two questions:

1. Why do Carver girls, who come from the same deprived environments as Carver boys, experience so much more difficulty in securing employment.

2. Why do Merganthaler girls who come from the same non-deprived environments as Merganthaler boys seem to experience less trouble in finding employment.

Subsequent reports will cover employment and earning patterns by trade as well as examining pre-graduation experiences during summer vacation and the school year.

60 BRING EMPLOYMENT PROBLEMS TO EOC INVESTIGATION DIVISION

Some 60 persons have discussed their employment problems with the EOC Investigation Division since the first of the year. About half of these, however, have had to be referred to other agencies, such as the Urban League, Maryland State Commission on Interracial Problems and Relations, and the Maryland State Employment Service, because the nature of their complaints placed them outside the jurisdiction of the EOC.

Some complaints involved matters of minimum wage which are not within the jurisdiction of the EOC. These persons were referred to the Baltimore office of Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Division, a Federal agency which administers the Federal Wage-Hour law.

Seven cases have been disposed of by the EOC. In one situation, the Commission dismissed the complaint when the investigation revealed that the company involved was hiring on merit and had released the complainant because of poor conduct.

In another case, the commission reached a satisfactory agreement with a firm which rehired the complainant in another capacity after it was discovered that there had been a misunderstanding between the two parties.

EMPLOYMENT LAW
What the Law Says About Equal Employment Opportunity

Ordinance No. 379, as amended, applies whenever any employer with 15 or more employees, employment agency or labor organization acts in a discriminatory manner towards any individual because of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry, in connection with the following:

. Hiring and firing
. Upgrading or promotion
. Training and apprenticeship programs
. Referral practices of employment agencies
. Membership in labor unions
. Employment application forms or interviews
. Any other terms or conditions of employment

Violators of this law are subject to investigation by the Commission and possible legal action.

YOUNG BALTIMOREANS IN JOB PREPARATION PROGRAMS SPONSORED BY PUBLIC AND PRIVATE ORGANIZATIONS

A three-pronged program is now underway in Baltimore City with the primary purpose of preparing young people for jobs.

The first phase was initiated by the Baltimore Urban League when, in co-operation with certain fraternal and business organizations, it opened a Youth Employment Center at 1524 W. North Avenue.

The second operation was spearheaded in East Baltimore when representatives of the Northern Student Movement, many of whom come from the New York State area, set up an office at 622 Aisquith Street in order to carry out an Education project identified as Baltimore Youth Opportunities Unlimited.

Still in the planning stage is the third program which would establish an Apprenticeship Training Center in the Baltimore Area with purposes of counseling, interviewing and testing youths for apprenticeship training in the various trades.

The Youth Employment Center was established as a clearing house for teenage help available to undertake small jobs or part-time chores during the summer. The young applicants are prepared to do all types of work including housecleaning, babysitting, yard care, car washing, clerical and typing. Anyone seeking part-time help may contact the center.

To overcome the school drop-out, unemployment and low income situations which typify depressed communities, The Baltimore Youth Opportunities Unlimited program utilizes the educational process in an effort geared toward making secondary school students and college students aware of opportunities available to them. In addition, it is expected that these persons would become more cognizant of their responsibility to participate in community affairs.

The mechanics of the operation are developed around the core of a tutorial program which provides college guidance counseling, vocational guidance counseling, and workshops for the students, as well as seminars and workshops for the tutors.

The proposed Apprenticeship Training Center will serve as a clearing house of information for all apprenticeship training programs in the state, in addition to determining whether or not an applicant is qualified to participate in the program.

While new to Baltimore City, centers of this nature have been established in Washington, D.C., New York City, and three have been set up in California. It is anticipated that by establishing a center in this area, more employers will become involved in apprenticeship training programs, thereby opening up more jobs for apprentices.

MINISTERS' RECOMMENDATIONS GET HIGH PRIORITY FROM EOC

As result of recommendations recently presented to Mayor McKeldin by the Interdenominational Ministers Alliance, the Commission is giving high priority in considering their proposals.

In substance, the requests of the clergy involve:

- o Integration of apprenticeship training programs
- o Integration of the work forces of general contractors and sub-contractors engaged under city contract
- o Elimination of racial discrimination in the employment, promotion and up-grading of city employees.
- o Increasing the budget of the EOC.
- o Discontinuing segregated apprenticeship training programs in public schools.

At press time, the EOC staff members have met with representatives of unions, contractors and government officials in efforts to ameliorate the conditions cited by the ministers.

The advent of the clergy into the civil rights movement through seeking affirmative action by the city fathers is not new. Recently, in New York, Philadelphia and Erie, Pa., ministers have asked that the city fathers openly pledge to implement fair employment practices in all of their departments and in all of the companies holding contracts with city government.

In addition, they have urged business and industrial leaders to hire qualified Negroes, specifying that these employees be given priority consideration in hiring in order to eliminate the present lag in their employment.

PUBLIC ACCOMMODATION LAW

What the Law Says About Public Accommodations

Ordinance No. 1249 applies whenever an owner, operator or agent of any hotel, motel, inn or restaurant (where the average daily food sales exceed the average daily alcoholic beverage sales) discriminates against any individual because of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry, in connection with the following.

- . Refusing, withholding from, or denying any of the accommodations, advantages, facilities and privileges to any person.
- . Circulating or displaying any notice or advertisement stating or implying that such privileges or accommodations are being denied or withheld.

Violators of this law are subject to investigation by the Commission and possible legal action.

APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING

Building construction trades whose apprenticeship training programs are registered with the U.S. Department of Labor through the establishment of Joint Apprenticeship Committees, are now supplying EOC with their respective qualifications and standards for prospective applicants into the programs.

This procedure is being done at the request of EOC which conferred recently with several representatives of the various construction trades. The meeting was the first in a series to be held with these organizations, with the objective being the stimulation of a sense of urgency in utilizing minorities in these trades.

Represented at the initial meeting were: bricklayers, carpenters, cement masons, electrical workers, plasterers, plumbers, sheetmetal workers, steamfitters, wood, wire and metal lathers, sprinkler fitters, glaziers, as well as members of the Associated Builders and Contractors, Building Trades Council, Department of Education, Urban League, NAACP and the Bureau of Building Construction.

According to most of the representatives, the lack of Negro participation in the various apprenticeship programs was due to the fact that applications have not been filed by minority group persons. In response to this contention, the Urban League, in cooperation with the EOC, is now establishing a register of persons in the Baltimore Metropolitan Area who are interested in becoming apprentices.

Subsequent meetings with individual contractors are being scheduled by the EOC, and as soon as the Commission is satisfied that progress is being made in the construction field, it will set up meetings with other trades which have apprenticeship programs.

Integration Impact

Desegregated Concerns In South Say Patronage Holds Up in Long Run

Some Hotels, Restaurants Do Better; Atlanta, Dallas Cite Larger Convention Market

New Rights Often Not Used

By JAMES C. TANNER
Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

ATLANTA—Things are swinging these days at the Wit's End, a swank North Side night club which opened its doors last November. Though the Treasury's new expense account rules made things tough at first, the Wit's End is now packing in customers regularly.

In Memphis, the 126-room Downtowner Motel is doing so well its occupancy is even running ahead of last year's booming 95% rate. The Downtowner has been filled to capacity much of the time in recent weeks and all signs point to a record year.

The financial fortunes of these Southern establishments are of special interest because both are among those that have begun serving Negroes for the first time. Their experiences, plus those of scores of other businesses from Texas to the Carolinas, point up a significant and perhaps surprising fact: Among those restaurants, hotels, theaters and other places of public accommodation in the South that have begun serving or hiring Negroes, only a few report suffering any lasting economic consequences. A sizable number, in fact, declare that business has been better than ever.

"Couldn't Have Been Smoother"

"We were scared to death—we could just see all our white customers walking out the minute the first Negroes walked in," says Paul Stickney, manager of the Wit's End. "But things couldn't have been any smoother. We know of only one white couple who walked out because we admitted Negroes and they came back within two weeks. As far as stirring things up around here, it's been one big zero." The Wit's End is one of only three Atlanta night clubs serving both whites and Negroes.

All this is not to suggest that desegregation would go smoothly for all Dixie establishments. At Ormond Beach, Fla., near Daytona Beach, motel operator George Thomas is still reeling from the financial punch delivered by boycotting whites when he decided it was the "right thing" to desegregate his 32-unit Star of the South Motel seven months ago. "My business at first dropped about 50%," he reports. But he adds that an influx of Negro guests quickly took up much of the slack, and he expresses confidence that many of his white customers eventually will return.

But most businessmen questioned by The Wall Street Journal report no grave economic dislocations from integration and they leave no doubt that desegregation of commercial facilities has been less painful than expected.

No Loss of Business

"Things have been going like clockwork—we're surprised and pleased," says Dallas hotel man Henry Rather of last summer's decision by the city's major hotels and motels to integrate. Mr. Rather says a recent check of the city's 35 largest hostelries failed to turn up a single instance of lost business because of desegregation. "There were a few letters and a crank call or two at first, but that's all," comments Mr. Rather.

Broader access to privately owned places of "public convenience," such as hotels, restaurants, amusement facilities and stores, has become a prime goal of Negroes lately. The recent riots in Birmingham, and subsequent disturbances in such cities as Savannah, Ga., Jackson, Miss., Danville, Va., and Tallahassee Fla., primarily revolved around Negro demands that merchants open their facilities to Negroes—in some cases as customers and in others as employes.

The question has taken on added importance in recent weeks with the appeal to Congress by President Kennedy for Federal power to outlaw racial discrimination in all places of public accommodation. This is unquestionably the most controversial provision of the Kennedy civil rights program and seems likely to become the focal point of the coming Congressional battle over civil rights.

Negroes Making Major Strides

Southern businessmen generally express strong opposition to this section of the proposed civil rights legislation. But even without such a law, Negroes are making major strides in their push to break down segregation barriers. The Justice Department reports that some desegregation of commercial facilities occurred in 143 cities in Southern and border states in the four weeks ended June 18; others are joining the list daily.

Last week, for instance, a bi-racial committee in strongly segregationist Fort Worth announced that all of the city's public facilities, including hotels, restaurants, theaters, department stores and athletic contests, would be desegregated in September when the city's schools are scheduled for integration.

If the pattern emerging in other Southern cities holds true, Fort Worth merchants can expect some protests and loss of business when they first begin accepting Negroes. But experience shows that such adverse effects are rarely lasting.

Fred Harvey, president of Harvey's Department Store in Nashville, says that when his store desegregated its lunch counters in 1960 only 13 charge accounts were closed out of 60,000. "The greatest surprise I ever had was the apparent 'so-what' attitude of white customers," says Mr. Harvey.

Even where business losses occur, they usually are only temporary. At the 120-room Peachtree Manor Hotel in Atlanta, owner Irving H. Goldstein says his business dropped off 15% when the hotel desegregated a year ago. "But now we are only slightly behind a year ago and we can see we are beginning to recapture the business we initially lost," declares Mr. Goldstein.

William F. Davoren, owner of the Brownie Drug Co. in Huntsville, Ala., reports that though his business fell a bit for several weeks after lunch counters were desegregated, he's now picked up all that he lost. Says he: "I could name a dozen people who regarded it as a personal affront when I started serving Negroes, but have come back as if nothing had happened."

Memories Are Short

Even a segregation-minded businessman in Huntsville agrees that white customers frequently have short memories when it comes to the race question. W. T. Hutchens, general manager of three Walgreen stores there, says he held out when most lunch counter operators gave in to sit-in pressures last July. In one shopping center where his competition desegregated, Mr. Hutchens says his business shot up sharply and the store's lunch counter volume registered a 12% gain for the year. However, this year business has dropped back to pre-integration levels "because a lot of people have forgotten" the defiant role his stores played during the sit-ins, he adds.

Some Southern businessmen who have desegregated say they have picked up extra business as a result of the move.

At Raleigh, N.C., where Gino's Restaurant was desegregated this year, owner Jack Griffiths reports only eight whites have walked out after learning the establishment served Negroes, and he says "we're getting plenty of customers to replace the hard-headed ones."

In Dallas, integration of hotels and restaurants has "opened up an entirely new area of convention prospects," according to Ray Bennison, convention manager of the Chamber of Commerce. "This year we've probably added $8 million to $10 million of future bookings because we're integrated," Mr. Bennison says.

Conventions for Atlanta

Within a day after 14 Atlanta hotels announced on June 13 they would begin accepting Negro guests who come to the city with conventions, the Atlanta Convention Bureau had nailed down three organizations for 1964 and 1965 meetings, a total of 3,000 delegates who otherwise would not have visited Atlanta. Walter Crawford, executive vice president of the Convention Bureau, says the hotels' decision opens up "the remaining 40% of the convention market that we estimate we haven't even been able to talk to before."

One frequently expressed fear of Southern white businessmen, that their establishments would be overrun by Negroes if they integrated, apparently is not materializing. "The Negroes want the right to enter your place of business, but they're not so anxious to use the right," says a Nashville banker.

At Knoxville, Tenn., William Tiller, assistant manager of the city's largest hotel, the Andrew Johnson, reports that although the hotel has been integrated more than a month, "we've had only three Negro families and two couples."

SOUTHERN REGIONAL EDUCATION BOARD
130 SIXTH STREET, N. W.
ATLANTA 13, GEORGIA
TR 5-9211

SB

FROM: RUDOLPH PATE

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

ATLANTA, Ga.---At the close of the 1963 legislative sessions in early summer, ten states of the South had moved to establish a planned state-wide system of state colleges and universities, or to strengthen existing state systems.

These systems are now operating in Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Arkansas, Kentucky, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Texas and Virginia, the Southern Regional Education Board said in a publication released recently. Each of the systems is organized to suit the needs of the individual states, but all were designed to produce educational opportunity with a minimum of confusion and without duplication.

Georgia, Florida and Mississippi centralize planning and coordination in a single coordinating-governing board. Arkansas, Kentucky, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Texas and Virginia operate through a liaison coordinating board which serves as an intermediary between higher institutions that have their own boards and the state legislative and administrative agencies.

"The future of higher education in the South will depend on planning and coordination within each state--the twin keys to effectiveness and quality," SREB said in its publication, "State Planning and Coordination" by A. J. Brumbaugh. "Without this planning, higher education will develop in a state of confusion and will not be able to meet the demands we place upon it."

One state in the South enrolled 135,000 students in its publicly supported colleges and universities in 1961, but in 1970 it will enroll 249,000, the SREB publication said.

√ SREB was established in 1949 under interstate compact, now ratified by the legislatures of Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia.

√ SREB aids in the social and economic advancement of the South by assisting states to improve the quality of higher education . . . provide the widest opportunity possible in higher education . . . build educational programs which meet the social and economic needs of the region.

√ SREB is devoted to helping Southern colleges build high quality research and educational programs . . . by providing regional support and utilization of advanced programs . . . and avoiding unnecesssary duplication of facilities among the compact states.

"Its higher institutions must find more efficient methods of operation and more effective educational procedures within a decade or this state will have to double its educational facilities and employ more than 8,000 new faculty members," according to Dr. Brumbaugh's report.

Dr. Brumbaugh lists 11 requirements for effective state planning of higher education:

1. A state must adopt a formal approach to state-wide planning and coordination to achieve excellence and to gain the highest possible return for every dollar invested in higher education.

2. Whatever the organization for state-wide planning and coordination may be, it must grant higher institutions the largest possible degree of autonomy within the limits of general policies necessary for a coordinated system of higher education

3. A state planning and coordinating agency must have a clear concept of planning and coordination.

4. An agency must limit itself to planning and policy-making and leave institutional management to other bodies.

5. Members of the board of a state agency must be the highest type of citizens who divest themselves of partisan politics.

6. An agency must maintain effective liaison with the institutions, the legislature and the public.

7. The agency must determine criteria for the establishment of new institutions and programs.

8. The agency must have a competent staff.

9. The agency must have adequate financial support.

10. The agency must involve private institutions of higher learning as well as public institutions in planning and coordination.

11. The agency must be suited to individual needs and problems of the state it serves.

News Release for Fayette County Workcamps
Virgie Hortenstine, Coordinator
5541 Hanley Road
Cincinnati 29, Ohio

Harassment of Negores and white sympathizers, in some cases, improved race relations , in other cases have followed an early summer workcamp in Haywood county, Tennessee. This workcamp, the sixth in the area, launched a Negro voter registration drive which has been continued after the close of the workcamp by local workers and visiting students. Haywood County Negro Families have been threatended for housing white workcampers who worked on their farms. Workcampers were frequently stopped by police. Several were arrested and fined on traffic charges.

Since the workcamp has ended, the voter registration workers have extended their drive also into Fayette County, where sit-ins are also being held for the first time. There they were met with threats of violence as six carloads of white gangs, armed with ropes and weapons, camped across the street from the building where they were housed. One group of voter registration workers was followed down the highway at high speed. The occupants of the car yelled out, "You better get out of Fayette County or you're going to get killed." The incident and the license number of the car were reported to the FBI and sheriff.

At a mass meeting several Negroes announced their intention to run as candidates in the coming election. Rev. June Dowdy, Vice President of the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League, has already announced his intention to run for County Tax Assessor. Allen Yancey, President of the local NAACP, has stated that he will run for a county office. These will be the first Negroes to run for office in Fayette County since Reconstruction.

Lines of hot and exhausted sharecroppers have stood outside the Fayette County Courthouse. On the last registration day, nearly one hundred were registered. Records show that the Negro total has already become equal to the white in the three years since Negro voter registration.

The most outstanding harassing action in this area has been a paternity suit which was brought against Negro leader, John McFerren, President of the Original Fayette County Civic and Welfare League, on July 10. McFerren has set forth all the facts of the case in a public statement. He lists adequate proof that he is not guilty, but he was declared guilty by Judge A.V. Luck. It is alleged by the Negro community that this suit is an attempt to discredit one of Fayette County's most effective Negro leaders by the U.S. Justice Depatrment under the 1957 Civil Rights Act, for intimidating the voter registration efforts led by John McFerren and others. It is also significant to the case that the State of Tennessee has recently passed new "Newburgh, NY" legislation dealing with Welfare payment's to women whohave illegitimate children. These payments are discontinued unless the mother first names the father and attempts court action to make the father pay the support costs.

After the trial, Sheriff C.E. Pattat said to John McFerren, "Why don't you compromies, and stop the sit-ins?"

"You haven't seen anything yet," John McFerren answered. McFerren is appealing the case.

A half dozen groups of teenagers have attempted to use the white sections of restaurants, drug stores, and the Sommerville movie house. They were turned away. One group was threatended with a pistol. An affidavit on this matter was filed with the U.S. Justice Department. According to local Negroes, Somerville has been bracing itself for a larger sit-in movement to come. The sheriff has deputized local whites.

The first integrated facilities were reported in Brownsville, in Haywood County, this month. The Library is now integrated and so is the bus stop. Negro policement have been added to the police force for the first time.

Workcampers, who attended the early summer workcamp, who chopped cotton and talked to Negroes about voting, represented Swartmore College, Sarah Lawrence College, and Ohio State University. Fayette and Haywood County workcamps are coordinated in Cincinnati by Mrs. Virgie Hortenstine, 5541 Hanley Road, Cincinnati 39, Ohio. Sponsoring organizations for the workcamps are the Baptist Ministers Conference of Cincinnati, the Race Relations Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends (Quakers), the Cincinnati Chapter of Operation Freedom, International Voluntary Service (American branch of Service Civil International) and Miami (Ohio) Quarterly Meeting of Quakers. Part of the workcamp project is the raising of funds for building materials for the Fayette County Community Center, where the workcampers will continue to do construction work in August, as they have done in three previous workcamps.

In exchange for the Swartmore and Sarah Lawrence College workcampers, a group of Fayette and Haywood County Students want to Philadelphia for a workcamp in the downtown area there. In addition to working along with local students to renovate houses of needy Philadelphia, they were entertained with sightseeing and a swimming party by families in the Philadelphia Friends Social Order Committee. CLARKSDALE, Miss.--Two students from Michigan were jailed when they arrived here with food, clothing, and medicine for Negroes being harassed for trying to vote.

Local police said the shipment included narcotics donated by doctors in Louisville, Ky., from whence the truckload of material was sent. The physicians swore that there were no sedatives or narcotics in the truck when it left Louisville.

Ivanhoe Donaldson and Benjamin Taylor, both 21, were arrested after their arrival at the Fourth Street Drug Store, operated by Aaron Henry, state NAACP president. The store is a receiving station for aid to starving people in the Delta area of Mississippi.

The young men arrived at the store before it was open, so they went to sleep to wait for Henry. Police found them, took them to headquarters, and searched the truck. Officers then charged Donaldson and Taylor with possession of narcotics.

Bond was set at $15,000 apiece and they were held in jail pending action by the Coahoma County grand jury. National civil rights groups began protests and legal action to free them.

Among those calling upon the U.S. Attorney General for help was Methodist Bishop Edgar A. Love, Baltimore, president of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), New Orleans. SCEF was one of the groups that sponsored the relief shipment.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), Atlanta, headed by Dr. Martin L. King, Jr., asked the Department of Justice to investigate.

Donaldson and Taylor were arrested on their second trip to Mississippi during Christmas week. They first delivered a truckload of goods from Michigan Friends of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), at Ann Arbor. Donaldson and Taylor are students at Michigan State University, East Lansing, and Donaldson works with SNCC.

After delivering the first load, the two returned to Louisville to pick up food and clothing collected under auspices of SCEF; the Student Nonviolent Action Committee (SNAC), Louisville affiliate of SNCC, and Louisville CORE.

Dr. Marshall King of Louisville had directed the gathering of medical supplies to go along with the shipment. Dr. King said that he and a druggist checked the material carefully to make sure there were no objectional drugs.

In Clarksdale, Henry said he thought the police objected to the food and clothing as much as anything. He noted that aid to the hard-pressed Negroes here will cripple efforts of plantation owners to discourage registration and voting.

He declared that police were looking for something to charge the students with, and "they're using it against the total freedom movement."

Henry said he hopes that people elsewhere will continue to send relief to this area, where thousands are on the verge of starvation because of the voter-registration drive. He also asked friends everywhere to seek action by the Federal Government to aid the sufferers and to stop harassment of persons trying to help.

"Let tons of material be the answer of the civil-rights movement to this latest harassment by Mississippi," he said.

IN RE: Jailing of Students Taking Aid to Mississippi

Two students carrying aid to stricken Negroes in Mississippi have been charged with possession of narcotics and are held in jail at Clarksdale under $15,000 bond each. This despite the fact that they had nothing stronger than aspirin on a truck they were driving. (See enclosed news release for details.)

The leadership in the Delta area of Mississippi has asked SCEF to contact you for help. Two kinds are needed:

(1) Write, wire, or call Robert F. Kennedy, U.S. Attorney General, Washington, D.C., and urge him to act to stop this prosecution. Also ask him to adopt a policy of protecting the rights of people arrested in Mississippi and other Southern states for working for civil rights and integration.

Write to City Attorney William H. Maynard, Stevens Bldg., Clarksdale, Miss., and his brother, Attorney George Maynard, same address, and ask them to use their influence to stop this harassment. Also contact the Rev. James T. McCafferty, The Methodist Church, 1012 W. Second St., Clarksdale, and urge him to use his good offices.

(2) Mobilize your organization, club or church group to send tons of food, clothing, and medicine to the Delta area of Mississippi. Send shipments to Aaron Henry, Fourth Street Drugs, 213 Fourth St., Clarksdale, Miss.

Let tons of material be the answer to this latest harassment by Mississippi.

CLARKSDALE, Miss.---Nationwide protests helped to bring about the release of two students arrested when they arrived here with relief goods for hungry Negroes. A grand jury will meet January 16 to decide whether to indict them.

Bonds for Ivanhoe Donaldson and Benjamin Taylor, both 21, were cut from $15,000 to $1,500 apiece. Cash bail was provided through the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), Atlanta, and the young men were freed after 11 days in jail.

The prosecuting attorney here agreed to the bond reduction after protests to Washington caused U.S. agencies to inquire into the arrests. Attorneys for the young men had also filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that the bonds were too high.

Donaldson and Taylor were charged with possession of narcotics after they arrived here December 27 with a truckload of food, clothing, and medicine for thousands of needy people. They were accused of having a drug used to ease distress in middle-aged women.

However, doctors in Louisville, Ky., swore there were no sedatives or narcotics on the truck when it left Louisville on Christmas day. The goods had been collected in Louisville by SNCC, CORE, and the Southern Conference Educational Fund, (SCEF).

An earlier shipment from Michigan had also been brought here by Donaldson and Taylor. This goods was collected by Friends of SNCC at Ann Arbor, headed by Miss Martha Prescod. Donaldson is a field worker for SNCC and Taylor is a student at Michigan State University.

The arrests of Donaldson and Taylor not only set off protests but also spurred drives to collect more relief goods for the Delta area of Mississippi. In Cincinnati, Operation Freedom speeded its plans for financial aid to persons punished for registering to vote or encouraging others to do so.

The Louisville Defender made a front-page appeal for aid, and other newspapers were reported doing likewise. Churches and student groups throughout the country joined in the relief drive.

Aaron Henry, Mississippi state president of NAACP, asked that shipments be sent to the Emergency Welfare and Relief Committee, Haven Methodist Church, 400 Yazoo Ave., Clarksdale, Miss.

"We are asking the citizens of this nation for immediate aid," Henry said in a letter to friends throughout the U.S. "We need your help in trying to ease this human misery. We need food, preserved or canned; clothing, coats, dresses, slacks, underwear, socks, shoes of all sizes, and finances to pay utility bills for light and heat.

"Negroes who have been involved in the freedom movement are the first and the most severely victimized, if their activities are known to the white racists."

Among those responding to the appeal was Bishop C. Ewbank Tucker, Louisville, Ky., whose diocese includes much of the Delta area of Mississippi. Bishop Tucker is also president of Louisville CORE and a director of SCEF.

He told Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy that the arrest of Taylor and Donaldson was "a move to thwart the whole freedom movement in Mississippi."

Both he and Henry urged people throughout the nation to continue to pour protests into Washington and relief into this area.

CLARKSDALE, Miss.---Circuit Judge E.H. Green has reversed the convictions of four Clarksdale Negro leaders who were charged with conspiracy to injure trade in 1961.

State NAACP President Aaron Henry and three others had been sentenced to six months in jail and a fine of $500 for leading a boycott of white merchants. The boycott is still in progress.

Judge Green's action, on appeal of the case from County Court, came by coincidence on the same day that the Coahoma Grand Jury here dismissed charges against two Michigan students who had been arrested while bringing relief goods to hungry Negroes at Christmas time. This made a day of double-barreled victory for the Mississippi civil rights movement.

The judge said he reversed the boycott conviction "after mature consideration and because of reversible errors in the record."

But his decision came too late for one of the defendants, the Rev. Theodore Trammell. The Rev. Mr. Trammell died of a heart attack last year, while campaigning for a seat in the U.S. House of Representatives. He was one of the first Negroes to run for Congress from Mississippi in this century.

The other two defendants whose convictions were reversed are R. L. Drew and John C. Melchor. All four were represented by Jack Young, NAACP attorney in Jackson.

CLARKSDALE, Miss.---The Coahoma County Grand Jury has refused to indict Ivanhoe Donaldson and Ben Taylor, Michigan students who were arrested her on a narcotics charge when they brought food, clothing and medicine at Christmas time for Negroes being harassed for trying to vote.

This means the charges are dismissed.

Aaron Henry, Mississippi NAACP president, called it "a tremendous victory for the people in all parts of this nation who raised their voices against this injustice." He said he hoped the victory would serve as a springboard for continued campaigns to send in relief goods.

Donaldson and Taylor, who work with the Michigan Friends of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), were free on bond when the Grand Jury refused to act this week. However, they had spent eleven days in jail after their arrest.

The arrest brought nationwide protests sparked by SNCC, the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), a section of the AME Zion Church led by Bishop C. Ewbank Tucker, and CORE, all of which had helped collect the relief supplies the students were delivering when arrested.

"More than 500 families have been aided," Henry said. "Thanks to the individuals of this nation for your responses with food, clothing, and finance. Much more is needed and we ask you to please continue to make contributions."

Volunteer relief goods are received at the Emergency Welfare and Relief Committee, Haven Methodist Church, 400 Yazoo St., Clarksdale, Miss. Mail should be addressed to Aaron Henry, 213 Fourth St., Clarksdale.

Most of the food and clothing / Donaldson and Taylor were delivering when arrested was returned when they were freed on bond, but police held the medicine. Carsie Hall, NAACP attorney in Jackson who represented them, said after the Grand Jury dismissed the charges that the medicine also should now be returned. (Police had claimed the medicine contained narcotics, but doctors in Louisville who donated it said it did not).

Another truck from Michigan took on additional food and clothing supplies this week at Louisville, where the Louisville Defender continued to assist the drive for aid.

Detroit Friends of SNCC set up receiving stations at several places in that city. Similar operations have been started by various groups at Iowa State College, in Chicago, in Los Angeles and at Ann Arbor.

Negroes in the Delta area are having a very hard winter because of a general campaign of reprisals as a result of stepped-up voter registration efforts. Many have been cut off public relief and government surplus food programs.

Meantime, in Cincinnati, Operation Freedom reported that it is making loans to Mississippi residents victimized for registering to vote. The organization extended its operations from West Tennessee into Mississippi last October.

It has helped many persons to stay on the land after they were harassed for voter activity. Funds to help in this work may be sent to Operation Freedom, care of the Rev. Maurice McCrackin, 932 Dayton Street, Cincinnati 14, Ohio.

HUNTSVILLE, Ala.---The University of Alabama canceled an extension course offered here after a Negro woman applied for admission.

Officials at the university's Huntsville Center said they acted because they were unable to get speakers needed for the course, a six-week seminar on current affairs.

However, integration leaders are pretty sure that the cancellation was because Mrs. Joan Cashin, wife of a local dentist, applied.

They point out that officials stopped all admissions to the university at Tuscaloosa for next semester after Negroes applied there. There have been no Negro students in any branch of the university since Autherine Lucy was admitted briefly seven years ago.

Mrs. Cashin filed her application for the course in person on December 19, 1962. The seminar was to start Feb. 15, required no previous scholastic record, and would result in no credit.

A white friend applied later so that university officials would not be able to say that Mrs. Cashin was refused admission because she applied too late. All applicants for the course have now been advised that the seminar will not be held.

It was noted that the university center has many students from the Redstone Arsenal near here, which is operated by the Federal Government. Regular college-credit courses are offered in such fields as engineering, and many employees at the Arsenal enroll to improve their qualifications for higher job levels and higher pay.

Civil rights leaders here point out that listings of such courses are regularly posted at the Arsenal as an incentive for employees to enroll, although Alabama state policies deny Negro Arsenal employees the right to attend the university extension.

Mrs. Cashin was asked about her application after word got around that the course had been canceled. She said: "My main regret is that the State of Alabama, through the university, has in effect put a brake on better race relations which have been developing here.

"Various facilities in this area have been opened to all people on an equal basis and we expect still further gains. Now the university takes a backward step while the rest of Huntsville tries to go forward."

One of the big gains here has been in voter registration in Madison County. During the past three months, more Negroes have registered to vote than in the entire preceding 10 years; the total number of registered Negroes now stands at over 2100, and more are registering all the time.

Mrs. Cashin herself has been active in breaking down the barriers here. Last spring she spent several days in jail after she and six others were arrested for sitting in at a drugstore lunch counter.

Her husband, Dr. John L. Cashin, Jr., has also been active in opposing various forms of segregation.

TALLADEGA, Ala.---Another round in the battle to cripple integration work in Alabama will open in State Circuit Court here Monday, February 4.

Judge William C. Sullivan is hearing a suit by the State of Alabama to ban sit-ins, parades, and demonstrations against segregation. Students and faculty at Talladega College are the main targets of the action.

Also named in the suit are several other individuals and organizations working to end segregation. These include Bob Zellner, a field worker for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), and Carl Braden, an editor of the Southern Patriot and a field worker for the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF).

The State sought an injunction last April after sit-ins and picketing by white and Negro students and faculty members from the college. First hearings in October showed that throngs of white segregationists were to blame for disorders that resulted.

The injunction, which is now temporary, bars integration activity throughout Alabama by those named. The hearings are to determine whether it shall be made permanent.

Dr. James A. Dombrowski, New Orleans, executive director of SCEF, urged friends and sympathizers in Alabama to attend the hearings, which are held on the second floor of the Courthouse here.

Dr. Dombrowski noted that bans on peaceable protests violate the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, guaranteeing freedom of speech, press, petition and association.

DANVILLE, Va.---Five integration leaders were fined $50 in Municipal Court for sitting in at a Howard Johnson restaurant here on New Year's Day. The formal charge was trespass. They filed notice of appeal.

Fined were the Rev. A. I. Dunlap, the Rev. L. W. Chase, the Rev. L. D. Campbell, Julius E. Adams, a taxicab owner, and Arthur A. Pinchback, butler for one of the most prominent families in Danville.

The manager of the restaurant said his place is independent of the national chain. He told the court that the local restaurant is operated by Southern Restaurant, Inc., under franchise from the Howard Johnson Company.

Long-standing segregation in the courtroom was broken down for the first time on motion of Len Holt, Norfolk, defense attorney and member of the Legal Committee of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF). About 300 persons crowded into the courtroom for the hearing.

Both Mr. Dunlap and Holt are members of the board of directors of SCEF, a Southwide integrationist group based in New Orleans. Holt recently filed an omnibus lawsuit to end segregation in all public facilities here. As a result, segregation has been quitely ended in several public buildings.

IN RE: Victory in Mississippi
Protests Needed over Harassing of Bob Zellner in Alabama

All of you are to be congratulated on a big victory. Thanks to your protests to various officials, Ivanhoe Donaldson and Benjamin Taylor have been freed of charges that they transported narcotics along with food and clothing for needy people in Mississippi. The grand jury failed to indict them after officials in Mississippi and Washington received wires and letters from all over the nation.

However, an equally serious situation has arisen in Alabama and we need your help again. Bob Zellner, a student working for integration, has been harassed to the point where state agents created a state of terror at the funeral of Bob's grandmother last weekend.

His grandmother was Mrs. J. J. Hardy, Mobile, Ala., widow of a Methodist minister who served many churches throughout Alabama. Bob's father is the Rev. James Zellner, who has also pastored a number of churches in Alabama and Florida.

Young Zellner, a white native of Alabama, has been working for two years as a field secretary for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), based in Atlanta. He has a special assignment to carry the message of integration to white students.

Bob has been arrested several times because of his activities, once on a charge of criminal anarchy in Louisiana. He was arrested again January 8, 1963, as he walked with some students on the campus of his alma mater, Huntingdon College, Montgomery, Ala. This time the charge was vagrancy, for which was sentenced to 30 days in jail. He was freed under bond pending appeal.

Just before he was arrested, Bob had given a pawnbroker a check for $85 for a camera he wanted to use in his work. He issued the check with the understanding that money to cover it had been deposited in his account in Atlanta. Through a clerical slip, the deposit was not made on schedule.

When the pawnbroker read of Zellner's arrest for vagrancy, he called the bank and was told there was not enough money in Bob's account to cover the check. Police then filed a charge of false pretense against Bob, although money to cover the check was deposited in the Atlanta bank within three hours after the pawnbroker made his complaint. If the pawnbroker had sent the check to the bank in the normal manner, the money would have been there when it reached Atlanta. State authorities plan to present the false-pretense charge to the county grand jury in Montgomery on Feb. 12. The charge carries a possible 10-year sentence.

After Bob was released on bond, five men in automobiles and on foot followed him wherever he went in Montgomery, including to the home of his lawyer. They trailed him when he went to Mobile, where his grandmother was near death.

Mrs. Hardy died last week and relatives gathered at the home of one of Bob's aunts in Mobile to pay their last respects. The agents trailing Bob set up a watch outside the home. It was learned by checking car licenses and credentials that they were from the office of Al Lingo, new state safety director in Alabama.

The presence of the agents caused so much distress among Mrs. Hardy's relatives and friends that a state of terror resulted. Bob and his father made a personal appeal to the men to go away. Bob's mother, Mrs. Ruby H. Zellner, wrote a personal note to the agents in which she said:

> "My mother was the widow of a Methodist minister. Both my mother and father were known and loved in many communities throughout Alabama. I am asking that this desecration of their memory be stopped at once."

The pleas were ignored. Instead, the agents followed when Mrs. Hardy's body was removed to Loxley, Ala., for the wake. They hung around the funeral home, followed the family to church on Sunday morning, and then trailed the funeral procession on Sunday afternoon, January 27.

Bob's father made a new appeal to the agents to leave them in peace---but again the plea was ignored. Instead, after the funeral, the agents followed Bob and his father across the state line into Florida. They did not leave until the Zellners reached PanamaCity, about 100 miles inside Florida.

Officials of SNCC and the Southern Conference Educational Fund have protested to various public officials about the harassment of Bob Zellner, which obviously results from his work for equal rights for all people. We ask you to add your voice to the protest by wiring, writing, or calling one or all of the following:

1. Maury Smith, Assistant Circuit Solicitor, Montgomery, Ala., regarding the charges against Bob.

2. Richmond Flowers, Attorney General of Alabama, Montgomery, Ala.; Gov. George C. Wallace, Montgomery, and Al Lingo, State director of public safety, Montgomery, regarding the charges and the harassment by state agents.

3. Attorney General Robert Kennedy or the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, Washington, D.C., about the arrest and harassment. Stress that state agents followed Zellner across state lines, putting the case within federal jurisdiction.

It would be helpful to send a copy of your protest to the News Editor, MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER, Montgomery, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.---State agents have harassed Bob Zellner, young integration worker, to the point of creating a state of terror at the funeral of his grandmother.

Protests have been filed with Gov. George C. Wallace, Richmond Flowers, new attorney general of Alabama, and Al Lingo, new state safety director. U.S. officials have also been asked to act because Zellner was followed across state lines by the agents.

Officers of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), Atlanta, and the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), New Orleans, said the agents' actions "disgrace America." Zellner is a field worker for SNCC.

Charles McDew, SNCC chairman, told Wallace and Lingo in a telegram that their agents "harassed Zellner's family during the last hour's of his grandmother's life and even during her funeral by following them, parking near the house during the wake, and following the funeral procession."

Methodist Bishop Edgar A. Love, Baltimore, president of SCEF, asked state officials to halt the harassment and discipline the agents. He also urged friends throughout the nation to protest to Alabama authorities and to the Department of Justice, Washington, D.C.

Zellner is a son of the Rev. James Zellner, Methodist minister who formerly pastored in Alabama but now has a church in Florida. Young Zellner's maternal grandmother, Mrs. J. J. Hardy, was the widow of another Methodist minister widely known in Alabama. She died in Mobile, Ala., where she spent the later part of her life.

Bob Zellner has been arrested in several states for his work for integration, especially among white college students. The latest harassment began Jan. 8 when he was arrested on a charge of vagrancy on the campus of his alma mater, Huntingdon College, Montgomery.

He was sentenced to 30 days in jail and appealed. Police then charged him with false pretense. The charge arose from a misunderstanding over a check Zellner gave a pawnbroker for a camera. The county grand jury is to hear this case Feb. 12.

Meantime, Zellner was freed under bond. Five investigators began following him around Montgomery, even to the home of his lawyer. They trailed him to Mobile when he went there because of the illness of Mrs. Hardy.

After Mrs. Hardy's death, the agents loitered outside the house. They followed the family and friends to Loxley, Ala., where the funeral was held. This caused so much distress among Mrs.Hardy's relatives that a state of terror resulted.

Zellner and his father made a personal appeal to the agents to go away. They refused. Neither did they heed a plea from young Zellner's mother. She sent the agents a note that said:

"My mother was the widow of a Methodist preacher. Both my mother and father were known and loved in many communities throughout Alabama. I am asking that this desecration of their memory be stopped at once."

After the funeral, the agents trailed Zellner and his father to Panama City, Fla., where the elder Zellner now lives.

RALEIGH, N.C.---A noted civil rights lawyer here is in prison on income-tax charges, which he denies.

Probation was revoked for Herman Taylor when he failed to pay a $20,000 fine in a 30-day period allowed him to do so. A Federal Court in Greensboro ordered him into custody for transfer to a Federal prison, and he faces a two-year sentence.

Len Holt, civil rights attorney in Norfolk, Va., who represents Taylor, said:

"It has been my belief from the beginning of this case that the prosecution of Herman Taylor, initiated by Southern agents of the Internal Revenue Department, can only be explained by his militant defense of the rights of Negroes in North Carolina."

Taylor has been in the civil rights movement since the beginning of his legal career, working first in the office of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund. He then taught law at North Carolina College at Durham before coming to Raleigh. Since 1952, he has handled many of the major civil rights cases in this state.

In 1961, Internal Revenue agents accused him of late filing of returns and fraudulant reporting of income in the period from 1953 to 1956.

He pled guilty to the late-filing charge but denied the fraud. He was convicted, sentenced to two years in prison and ordered to pay a $20,000 fine and $32,000 in back taxes.

He appealed and the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals cut the liability for back taxes to $6,000, let his sentence stand, but granted probation on condition of payment of the fine within 30 days of a final court order. The U.S. Supreme Court refused to review the case.

Taylor is a former law partner of Samuel Mitchell here. Together they filed the original suit attacking school segregation in Raleigh. They also handled the Raleigh sit-in cases and won the first legal victory of the sit-in campaign when one of these cases was won at the State Superior Court level.

They also attacked North Carolina's use of literacy laws to deny voting rights to Negroes in several key cases. They represented Dr. A. E. Perry, Monroe, N.C. civil rights leader charged with performing an abortion and made a major attack on jury discrimination in that case.

In the 1950's they were responsible for a widespread campaign of prison reform in North Carolina when they won a suit growing out of the death of a young Negro girl in a North Carolina prison, in which it was charged that the girl died from gagging used as punishment.

Mitchell has also been charged with income tax violations, and his case is still pending.

Attorney Holt said it was completely impossible for Taylor to pay the $20,000 fine the court ordered.

"Because of the attacks on him, his business has fallen off drastically," Holt said. "When the threat of a jail sentence hangs over a lawyer, many people are naturally reluctant to bring a case to him. Also, he has felt duty-bound to refuse certain cases in this period because he himself knew that he might not be free to see them through to conclusion."

Holt said there would be further legal action in an attempt to free Taylor.

TALLADEGA, Ala.--The State of Alabama has dropped three of the defendants from its lawsuit to cripple integration work in Alabama.

The Rev. Norman C. Jimerson, Miss Joanne Grant and Carl Braden were removed from the case by Judge William C. Sullivan in State Circuit Court here.

Judge Sullivan is hearing a petition by the State to permanently enjoin sit-ins, picketing and demonstrations. White and Negro students and faculty members at Talladega College are the most numerous groups named in the action.

Mr. Jimerson, secretary of the Alabama Council on Human Relations, had been dismissed from the suit prior to resuming of the hearing on February 6.

On the morning of February 7, Assistant Attorney General John G. Bookout filed a written request that Judge Sullivan dismiss Braden and Miss Grant. After the request was granted, Judge Sullivan proceeded with hearing of the case against the others.

Braden is assistant editor of THE SOUTHERN PATRIOT, an integrationist journal, and a field worker for the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), New Orleans. SCEF is a Southwide interracial organization working to end segregation and discrimination.

Miss Grant is an associate editor of THE NATIONAL GUARDIAN, New York. She and Braden were in Talladega last April 16 to report the trial of 18 students and a Talladega dean arrested for sitting-in at lunch counters. Braden also helped to organize integration activity in Alabama and throughout the South.

"Our dismissal is a tribute to people all over the country who have protested about these proceedings," Braden told reporters after the dismissals. "We shall continue to work for dropping of the case against the others, as they are guilty of nothing more than seeking their rights as citizens of the United States."

Braden urged friends throughout the nation to write to Attorney General Richmond Flowers, Montgomery, Ala., and ask him to drop the case against the others.

In explaining the request for dismissal to reporters, Assistant Attorney General Bookout said: "We think it will strengthen our case to deal with the local situation only."

Attorneys for Talladega College and the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) objected to dropping some of the defendants without dismissing all of them, but the judge overruled their objection. The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), Atlanta, and one of its field workers, Bob Zellner, also remain as defendants in the case.

Braden's attorneys at the hearing included the Rt. Rev. C. Ewbank Tucker, A.M.E. Zion Bishop of Kentucky and West Alabama and a member of the SCEF Legal Committee. Another was John M. Coe, Pensacola, Florida, chairman of the SCEF Legal Committee and formerly president of the National Lawyers Guild. Victor Rabinowitz, New York, represented Miss Grant.

BALTIMORE, Md.--After a whirlwind campaign of exactly one week, Herman Taylor, noted Raleigh, N.C., civil rights lawyer jailed for probation violation on income tax charges, was released on bond.

The U. S. Court of Appeals, Fourth Circuit, set bond at $1500, while Defense Attorney Len Holt of Norfolk, Va., processes an appeal of the revocation of probation.

Holt said it is one of the few times in the history of American jurisprudence that bond has been granted in a probation violation case.

He said that in his intensive week's effort to free Taylor he had the support of the Committee to Assist Southern Lawyers of the National Lawyers Guild and of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, on whose legal committee he serves, plus the assistance of numerous lawyers and individuals in Detroit, Lynchburg, Va., Washington, Baltimore, and New York---people, Holt said, "who helped with research, paid expenses, picked up the telephone bill, or fed and housed me on my travels."

"It is a good example of how people and organizations will pitch in and come to the support of a brave man who takes a stand for civil rights and then gets in trouble for it," he declared.

All in all, he estimated, getting Taylor released on bond took about a week of his time (with time out while he handled a hearing on the Danville, Va., omnibus integration suit) and about $700 in expense money from organizations and individuals.

"It's a small price to pay to have a man like Herman Taylor free again," said Holt. "The question is: how much is a lawyer with courage worth? A person's value depends on what your problem is. If your water pipes are frozen, a plumber is more valuable than the President of the United States. In North Carolina, there are few lawyers with the courage to militantly defend the rights of Negroes; Taylor is one of them, so he is invaluable. That's why so many people went all-out to free him."

Taylor, along with Attorney Samuel Mitchell, has handled many of the key civil rights cases in North Carolina since 1952. In 1961, he was charged with fraudulant reporting of Federal income tax, which he denied. But he was convicted and sentenced to two years in prison and a $20,000 fine.

The sentence was probated on condition he pay the fine. When he failed to do so, Federal Judge Edwin M. Stanley in Greensboro, N.C., revoked his probation on January 31. He was transferred immediately to a Federal prison in Tallahassee, Fla., on an unusual procedure when an appeal is pending, Holt said.

Holt said the appeal is based on the assertion that it was completely impossible for Taylor to pay the fine because he did not have the money.

"We maintain that this is not a willful violation of probation," Holt said. "It is like a case where a man is required to report to a parole office on a certain date but doesn't get there because he has an automobile accident and lands in the hospital. That man is not guilty of willful parole violation."

Holt said the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, on whose staff Taylor once served, has been asked to file a friend-of-the-court brief in support of Taylor's appeal.

IN RE: Developments in Case of Bob Zellner

Two weeks ago, we wrote you about the case of Bob Zellner, young integration worker on the staff of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), who was being harassed by Alabama officials even at this grandmother's funeral and had been arrested in Montgomery, Ala., on two charges.

You will be pleased to know that one of the charges, vagrancy, was dismissed this week on motion of the Montgomery city attorney. This happened after officials in Alabama began hearing from people all over the country about this case.

We believe if citizens of good will continue to let the Alabama officials know that they are concerned and outraged by the harassment of this young man, a victory can be won in the other case against Bob.

The second charge is the one of "false pretenses," and it carries a possible 10-year sentence. This charge was filed in connection with a check Bob wrote shortly before he was arrested on the vagrancy charge. He later testified that he had reason to believe funds to cover the check had been deposited in his bank account in Atlanta, but through an error they had not been. They were deposited shortly thereafter, however, and if the check had cleared through normal channels, the funds would have been on hand to cover it. A Montgomery newspaper, reporting the case, stated: "It is rare for such a charge to be filed until such a check is taken to the bank."

At a preliminary hearing, one of the character witnesses on Bob's behalf was a Montgomery woman who is the daughter of a Methodist minister, the wife of a retired minister and mother of two ministers. She said she had known Bob since he was a child. Asked about his reputation, she stated: "It is above reproach in my estimation."

The real purpose of the prosecution was revealed in this same hearing, when Maury Smith, assistant circuit solicitor, stated that he had offered to dismiss the check charge if Bob would plead guilty to the vagrancy charge, accept a suspended sentence, and leave town, and "cause us no trouble in regard to race matters."

"I told you I wanted this boy to leave Montgomery," Smith told Bob's attorney in open court. "This is what I was interested in."

Bob of course refused any such deal.

Please continue your protests to Maury Smith, Assistant Circuit Solicitor, Montgomery, Ala.; to Richmond Flowers, attorney general of Alabama, and Gov. George C. Wallace, both in Montgomery.

Protest also to the U.S. Department of Justice and the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, and ask them to intervene in the case since it is so clearly an effort to discourage Bob from working for civil rights in Alabama.

IN RE: Mississippi Shooting; Zellner Case; Rights Debate

James Travis, 20-year-old voter-registration worker, was shot and seriously wounded by three men in a car who fired into an auto driven by Travis near Itta Bena, Miss., last week. Travis missed death by a hair, as the bullet entered his neck and lodged behind his spine. Another bullet hit him in the shoulder. Randolph Blackwell and Bob Moses, riding with Travis, narrowly missed death or serious injury.

Bishop Edgar A. Love, Baltimore, president of SCEF, sent the following wire to Attorney General Robert Kennedy, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington 25, D.C.:

> "We urge prompt and vigorous action, including the dispatching of Federal marshals, to protect Negroes in Leflore County, Miss. The shooting of James Travis, latest in a long series of violent acts of intimidation of registration workers, indicates a reign of terror. Must we wait until someone is killed before we act?"

You, too, may wish to communicate with Mr. Kennedy and other officials.

Your protests against the harassment of Bob Zellner in Alabama had a profound effect. The vagrancy charge against Bob was dropped and he won a hung jury on the charge of false pretense, described in our memos of Feb. 1 and Feb. 13. However, the State of Alabama may retry him on the pretense charge. You are urged to continue protests to Maury Smith, Assistant Circuit Solicitor, Montgomery, Ala., and to Gov. George C. Wallace, Montgomery. See February and March issues of The Southern Patriot for further details.

Shad Polier and Satterfield to Debate

Wednesday, March 13th, 8:30-9:30 p.m., EST, WNDT Channel 13, New York, (and WGBH Channel 2, Boston) Shad Polier, noted civil liberties lawyer, and John C. LOUISVILLE, Ky.--Two more tons of food and clothing have been trucked from here to Greenwood, Miss., to help Negroes victimized for registering to vote. About $100 cash went with the shipment.

It was Louisville's answer to the recent shooting of a young voter-registration worker near Greenwood. James Travis, 20, field worker for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), was critically wounded by a bullet that lodged near his spine but he is recovering.

The food and clothing from here was collected under auspices of the Louisville Defender, weekly newspaper. It was taken to Mississippi by Local 89, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, who provided help at the request of Frank Stanley, Jr., Defender editor.

The Hertz Company donated a truck at the request of the Teamsters. Local 89 furnished gas and oil and two drivers, the Rev. James Martin, Local 89 executive board member, and Gilbert Ryan, an assistant business agent.

The food and clothing were collected throughout the Louisville area after civil rights leaders in Mississippi reported that thousands of Negroes in the Delta are in dire need because of reprisals arising out of the stepped-up registration campaign.

Among organizations cooperating in the Defender collection were: SCEF, CORE, SNCC, the Baptist Ministers Meeting, and A.M.E. Zion churches under the leadership of Bishop C. Ewbank Tucker.

Civil-rights leaders in the Mississippi Delta say there will continue to be urgent need for relief through most of April. Aid should be sent to Relief Committee, Haven Methodist Church, 400 Yazoo Ave., Clarksdale, Miss., and to Relief Committee, Wesley Chapel Methodist Church, Howard and Gibbs Streets, Greenwood, Miss.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.---The Alabama Court of Appeals reversed two convictions on breach-of-peace charges against the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham integration leader.

The charges grew out of the May, 1961, Freedom Rides, when Mr. Shuttlesworth was charged with conspiring to provoke a breach of the peace because he notified law enforcement officers and the press of the arrival of the Freedom Riders in Birmingham.

Commenting on the reversals, the much-arrested minister said: "This may be a sign that some of the people in the Alabama court system are getting some religion."

The appellate court said in its reversal order that the facts were not sufficient to let the defendant know exactly what he was called on to defend.

Mr. Shuttlesworth noted also that the issues of courtroom segregation had been raised in one of the cases which was reversed. "This issue would have certainly been looked at by the U.S. Supreme Court if the case had gone that far," he said.

The Birmingham leader has been arrested more times for his actions challenging segregation than any other one Southern leader. He still has pending against him criminal charges carrying a total of two years in sentences. These are at various stages of appeal.

Mr. Shuttlesworth is now pastor of a church in Cincinnati but spends much of his time in Birmingham, where, at the insistence of local Negroes, he continues to serve as president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights. He is also a member of the board of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, based in New Orleans.

EDENTON, N.C.--New demonstrations have broken out here, in protest against what civil rights leaders describe as "unequal justice."

The first demonstration, in the form of a prayer pilgrimage to the local courthouse, came when Golden A. Frinks, Edenton Movement leader, was returned to jail after losing an appeal of a 30-day sentence for contempt of court.

Frinks had served all but nine days of the sentence last fall before he was released on bond pending the appeal. He was released again March 12 after serving the remaining nine days.

The Rev.Fred LaGarde, president of the Edenton Movement and Northeastern North Carolina representative of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said more demonstrations, including picketing are planned.

Shortly before Frinks was jailed the last time, Edenton Negroes had been outraged by the way local officials handled two cases involving the deaths of Negroes at the hands of white men. In one case, a Negro boy was struck and killed by an automobile; the white driver went free of any charge. While local Negroes do not feel the man deliberately hit the boy, they think some action should have been taken.

In the other case, a white man killed a Negro in an altercation. He was charged with second-degree murder but is free on $5000 bond.

"These two white men are walking the streets free, and Golden Frinks was jailed for a minor matter," LaGarde said. "We simply cannot feel that this is equal justice before the law."

The contempt charge against Frinks grew out of his failure to answer when Superior Court Judge Chester A. Morris called his name during a hearing in September. Frinks said the whole thing resulted from a misunderstanding.

Frinks has been a leader in demonstrations against segregation here for several years. The contempt sentence came just after he had obtained warrants against the Edenton police chief charging that the officer struck him during picketing of a theater.

His recent return to jail came after the North Carolina Supreme Court refused to reverse his conviction. LaGarde said Sheriff Earl Goodwin told him Frinks would have been let off for "good behavior" except that he appealed the case and called on "outsiders" for support.

Frinks has recently been hospitalized and requires a special diet, but Sheriff Goodwin told his friends this could not be provided in the jail.

LaGarde said the new demonstrations here will also be directed at downtown segregation and job discrimination. The Edenton Movement is a coalition composed of the local SCLC unit, the NAACP, and other local groups.

The Movement is also carrying on a campaign to end segregation at the County hospital here. The Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, administrative assistant to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., is due here on the weekend of March 16 to speak in support of the Edenton Movement's activities.

LYNCHBURG, Virginia--People all over Virginia are becoming aroused over the case of Thomas C. Wansley, a Negro youth under two sentences of death for alleged rape.

He is also under a 20-year sentence on a charge of taking $1.36 from one of the women involved. A Negro minister who protested against the treatment of Wansley was charged with contempt of court.

Many citizens are not only outraged by the severity of the punishment meted to the 18-year-old prisoner. They also object to the way the State conducted his trials and the shaky evidence on which he was convicted.

Negro leaders and others point out that Wansley was first sentenced to die on a charge of raping a white woman who could not positively identify him. A short time before this, in the same court, a white man was given five years in prison for raping an 11-year-old Negro girl, although he was caught in the act by a policeman.

The Rev. Virgil A. Wood, a leader in the fight to save Wansley, has appealed to people everywhere to join in asking just treatment for the youth. He asked that protests be sent to Gov. Albertis Harrison, Executive Mansion, Richmond, Virginia, and to United States officials in Washington, D.C.

Wood himself is under a charge of contempt placed against him by Judge O. Raymond Cundiff, who presided at Wansley's three trials in February. The minister was cited for distributing a leaflet calling Wansley's first trial "a legal lynching."

The leaflet charged that the youth's conviction "differs from the old type of lynching only in that this one is done in the name of law and justice. The old type never pretended to be decent or lawful."

It adds that when Judge Cundiff passed judgment on Wansley he "looked straight at Wansley and said, 'You will be electrocuted until you are dead.' This result is the same as when Negroes were killed at night by hooded klansmen and angry mobs. This court practices a double standard of justice, one for whites and one for Negroes."

Another who has spoken out is the Rev. Harold A. Carter, president of the Baptist Ministers' Conference, which also includes churches of other denominations. Addressing a mass protest meeting, Carter said:

"Ask Judge Cundiff how he can expect a young boy to come up out of a dungeon, denied the normal privileges of a growing boy, and know any better. Go tell him that when God pronounces His judgment he (Judge Cundiff) won't have a higher court to appeal to."

White citizens who are disturbed about the case include the editors of the student newspaper at Randolph-Macon Woman's College here. This is one of the leading women's colleges in the United States and does not admit Negroes.

The student paper, The Sun Dial, said "...serious reservations about this sentence in the circumstances of the trial can not help but be raised in the minds of thoughtful and conscientious citizens."

Wansley's second death sentence was imposed on a charge of raping a woman of Japanese descent. The youth testified that he has sexual intercourse with the woman on two previous occasions before she accused him of rape.

The Wansley trials took place amid growing impatience of the Negro community with the slowness of integration here. Negroes are especially irked by a system under which they are being admitted to previously all-white schools at the rate of one grade a year.

Wansley's attorney, Reuben Lawson of Roanoke, has filed notice of appeal to the Supreme Court of Appeals at Richmond, Virginia. The youth's execution is set for June 7 unless a stay is granted.

The Gandhi Society for Human Rights has agreed to underwrite court costs. The Baptist Ministers' Conference, 1303 Wise Street, Lynchburg, is raising money for other expenses. The Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), headed by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Atlanta, Georgia, and the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), New Orleans, Louisiana, have asked friends and cooperating groups throughout the nation to join in protests to state and U.S. officials. The Rev. Mr. Wood is president of the Lynchburg unit of SCLC and a member of the board of SCEF. Methodist Bishop Edgar A. Love, Baltimore, Maryland, is president of SCEF.

Negro Youth Gets 'Chair' In Rape Case

By HORACE OVERMAN

Thomas Carlton Wansley, 18-year-old Negro, was sentenced Thursday by a Corporation Court jury to death in the electric chair for the Dec. 5 rape of a 59-year-old woman on Rivermont Avenue.

An all-white 12 man jury deliberated one hour and 41 minutes before returning the death penalty for the slender restaurant helper.

Judge O. Raymond Cundiff passed judgment and set June 7 for the date of execution. Looking straight at Wansley, Judge Cundiff said "you will be electrocuted until you are dead."

Thomas C. Wansley

Wansley, expressionless throughout the trial, broke into tears. Moans from his mother echoed through the courtroom. Wansley did not testify.

Being led by jailers away from the courtroom back to his cell in City Jail where he spent his 18th birthday, Wansley gasped, "I'm not going." He made a brief attempt to get away until jailers grabbed him and handcuffed him while bystanders comforted his mother.

Commonwealth's Attorney Royston Jester III declared in his opening statement and in his concluding argument to the jury that Wansley should receive "death for this vicious, unwarranted attack" on the dedicated church worker Wansley raped around 7:30 p. m. in the rain.

JESTER SAID if the jury returned any verdict other than death residents here "can't walk safely upon the public streets." Pointing his finger at the Negro, Jester declared "all evidence shows this man is the guilty party."

He referred the jury to testimony of state's witnesses who easily picked out Wansley as the person who admitted to them in words and a signed confession the crimes that resulted in one of the most intensive city manhunts in recent years and the posting of a $1,000 reward.

Witnesses for the state were the woman, Det. Sgts. E. L. Francis and C. W. Loving, Major R. O. Brooks, police chief, and Lee A. Read, chief probation officer of Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court.

All the officers testified to Wansley's confession that was followed by him taking them around to the scenes of the crimes and describing in detail what took place.

ALSO ENTERED into evidence was a blue coat identified as the coat the woman wore the night she was jumped from behind, dragged into a side yard on Ruffner Place and raped.

She testified she gave her purse to Wansley when he approached her and threatened her hoping that would send him away. She said he then grabbed her from behind and overpowered her while she fought and screamed.

She said he had a knife at her throat and sometime during the attack rammed his first into her mouth in an effort to stiffle her screams for help. She said she was on her way to church when Wansley came up to her.

She was unable to make positive identification of him as the Negro who viciously attacked her.

For that reason the state

WANSLEY 3RD TO GET CHAIR

Sentence of death in the electric chair in the state penitentiary in Richmond for Thomas Carlton Wansley, 18, Negro, was the third such verdict returned by a Corporation Court jury in recent years.

Carroll Lewis Garland, 26, Negro, died March 2, 1962, in the penitentiary for killing a white service station operator, Jimmy N. Nuckles, 27, the night of May 28, 1961.

Nuckles' body was found on a rock in the James River. Police said he had been beaten over the head with soft drink bottle but death was attributed to drowning.

In November, 1958, another Lynchburg Negro, Clarence Sparrow Dabney, 24, was executed for a similar crime—the slaying of a young white service station attendant during a robbery.

built its case around Wansley's admissions of the crimes and the fact he guided officials to the locations of his attacks and filled them in on details.

CHIEF BROOKS and the others testified that Wansley was advised before he was allowed to say anything that whatever he might say could be used against him and that he was not being made to say anything.

Reuben Lawson, Negro attorney of Roanoke who acted as defense counsel, argued to the jury that Wansley was a "mentally sick boy" who should be put away if he was guilty.

He urged the jury to treat the 18-year-old as they would their own son. He said "the poor little boy, if he is guilty, deserves some punishment" but "he's sick and its your responsibility to help him."

In his final argument, Jester declared Wansley "is not sick" pointing out that if Wansley had been, there would have been evidence introduced by the defense to that effect.

He said Wansley "is not a sick boy. He is a vicious man capable of a man's functions and a man's desires." He insisted to the jury that "there can be no alternative in this case. The only proper verdict is death."

Wansley also was on trial Thursday for robbing the woman of her pocketbook containing $1.37. This charge was contained in another bill of indictment. The jury returned a verdict of guilty of robbery on this charge and sentenced the Negro to 20 years in the penitentiary.

Lawson moved at the presentation of the jury's verdicts that the verdicts be set aside and a new trial set. Judge Cundiff denied the motions.

Lawson spent the majority of the morning making motions that would have delayed the trial. He was overruled on all of them.

Lawson asked that Wansley be placed under observation at Central State Hospital in Petersburg. He moved that the trial be held elsewhere because of publicity given the case in the press.

He wanted the all-white jury dismissed for alleged bias, and suggested that Judge Cundiff disqualify himself. And he insisted that the segregated courtroom be integrated.

One by one Judge Cundiff denied each and every motion.

WANSLEY now is being held in City Jail awaiting trial Tuesday on another rape indictment. Judge Cundiff said this trial will be held as scheduled.

The case Tuesday charges the Negro with raping a Lucado Place housewife around midnight on Nov. 14 by threatening her and one of her three sleeping children.

Court convened at 9:30 a.m. and promptly settled down to selecting the jury from a special 32 man venire. The selection was concluded and the jury was impanelled shortly before 11 o'clock.

The case went to the jury at 4:40 p.m. and the verdict was returned at 6:21 p.m. Judge Cundiff called the jury back to the courtroom at 6:05 to ask if they felt they could reach a decision before mealtime, then sent them back.

It was the second death penalty for the jurist in his two years on the bench in Corporation Court.

In passing sentence Judge Cundiff set the hours "between sunrise and sunset" on June 7 and said Wansley would be "electrocuted until you are dead."

5-Year Term Given Brooks For Rape Of Negro Girl, 11

By HOWARD EANES
The News' City Editor

George W. Brooks, 37, of 1129 Westchester Dr., was sentenced to five years in the state penitentiary Tuesday for raping an 11-year-old Negro girl in his automobile last March 21.

The Corporation Court jury fixed his punishment at the minimum provided for rape. He had pleaded NOT guilty.

Judge O. Raymond Cundiff stayed execution of sentence until Dec. 3 to allow defense counsel, Atty. Paul Whitehead, time to petition the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals for a writ of error. Whitehead had noted an exception when Judge Cundiff overruled his (Whitehead's) motion to set aside the verdict on the grounds of insufficient evidence and as contrary to law and evidence.

UNDER THE FIVE-YEAR sentence, Brooks, a used car dealer, will be eligible for parole after serving 18 months.

Patrolman C. W. Snow, first witness told of witnessing Brooks having sexual intercourse with the 11-year-old girl in the front seat of his automobile just off Hudson Street on the Presbyterian Cemetery property March 21. He fixed the time of the offense at 3:15 p.m.

Snow said he was on routine patrol on Hudson Street when he observed a car parked on cemetery property. He said he could see it was occupied so he got out of the patrol car and walked to it. He said he observed Brooks and the Negro girl partly undressed.

Snow said he moved around toward the front of the car and looked through the windshield from which point he witnessed the act of sexual intercourse. He said when he tapped on the car window Brooks looked around at him and exclaimed: "My God, do something for me!"

The officer said he had known Brooks for many years.

He identified the girl brought into the courtroom during his testimony as the girl in the car with Brooks. He said the car was parked 75 to 80 feet from Hudson Street.

* * *

DET. SGTS. E. L. Francis and C. W. Loving, who questioned Brooks about the offense within an hour after he was arrested, said the accused admitted having sexual relations with the girl that afternoon and on two previous occasions.

"He told us he didn't know what made him do what he had done," Sgt. Francis testified.

Sgt. Francis said Brooks told him the girl "gave him a sign" when he drove past her on Grace Street and he continued to Grove Street where he stopped and waited for her. She got in his car there and he then drove to the place off Hudson Street where he had sexual relations with her, Francis testified Brooks told him.

Sgt. Loving, who said he had known Brooks at least 10 years, testified the defendant told him he thought the girl was in her teens.

The only other witness called by Commonwealth's Atty. Royston Jester III was the girl's mother, who testified the child was born Jan. 5, 1951. The girl's birth certificate was entered as Commonwealth's exhibit number one as further proof of her date of birth.

(Virginia law prohibits a girl under 16 years of age from giving consent to sexual intercourse. Because of this a man who has such relations with a girl under 16 is automatically charged with rape).

At the conclusion of the commonwealth's case, Defense Atty. Whitehead moved to strike the evidence because there was no testimony from the prosecutrix. He contended it is necessary in this type case. Judge Cundiff overruled the motion and Whitehead noted an exception.

Brooks, only defense witness other than character witnesses, denied having sexual intercourse with the girl on the day in question or at any time. He denied the girl was in his automobile. He further testified he didn't know the girl and had never seen her before. He also denied making any statement to Sgts. Francis and Loving about having sexual relations with her.

BROOKS SAID he had been in the Hudson Street area on March 21 to call on a prospective customer and not finding him at home had stopped to check some papers before making another call.

He said he was checking the papers to determine where his next nearest call would be when Patrolman Snow attracted his attention by tapping on the car window. He said the Negro girl was standing with the officer beside the car at that time.

Brooks said he has been married twice, once when he was about 20 and the second time Aug. 4 of this year. His teen-age daughter, wife, mother and other members of his family were in court.

On cross examination by Jester, Brooks said he didn't know anything either of the officers had against him "unless it's Thornhill, Wood and the NAACP. They are taking a lot of interest in this case."

An excerpt from the cross-examination:

Jester: "Do you mean that everybody who has testified in this case is telling a falsehood but you?"

Brooks: "Somebody is telling something."

Whitehead called six character witnesses. Five of them testified Brooks' general reputation in the community is good. The sixth said his relationship with Brooks had been a business one and he had no way to know his general reputation in the community.

* * *

A REBUTTAL witness, Dewey L. Fitzgerald, a dry-cleaning route man, said he saw Patrolman Snow talking with someone in a car at the place the offense allegedly was committed on March 21. He said he saw a man and a girl getting out of the car but could not identify them. He said he was unable to say whether the girl was white or Negro.

Whitehead, in his closing arguments, harped on the fact the commonwealth failed to call the girl, the juvenile court officer in whose custody the girl was placed or a physician to testify.

Jester's answer was they were unnecessary, the act having been observed by a police officer and corroborated by statements made by the defendant to other officers shortly after the crime.

ALL SPECTATORS, except immediate families of the two principals in the case and newsmen, were excluded from the courtroom during the trial.

Brooks was declared mentally competent to stand trial after he was examined and observed under court order at Southwestern State Hospital at Marion.

William B. Smith, assistant commonwealth's attorney, assisted in the prosecution of the case.

Second Death Sentence Meted Out To Wansley

The News

LOCAL

LYNCHBURG, VA., WEDNESDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 13, 1963 8

By HORACE OVERMAN

For the second time in five days, Thomas Carlton Wansley, 18-year-old Lynchburg Negro, Tuesday was sentenced to death for rape.

He was convicted Tuesday of the rape of a Japanese woman Nov. 13. Last Thursday he was convicted of the rape Dec. 5 of a white woman and sentenced to die.

An all-white, male jury returned Tuesday's guilty verdict and fixed the penalty at death in the electric chair.

The jury deliberated one hour and 18 minutes before returning its final verdict.

The men came out shortly after 6 p. m. to ask Judge O. Raymond Cundiff about Wansley's possibilities of parole if they returned a life imprisonment sentence.

Instructed that they were to be concerned only with fixing the sentence to fit the crime involved, they returned to resume deliberations, then came out 18 minutes later with the death penalty.

Wansley was sentenced to die June 7.

Unlike his first trial last Thursday when Wansley did not take the witness stand, he took the stand Tuesday to say he had had intimate relations with the woman previous to the night the woman reported to police she had been raped.

HE SAID he had known her carnally at least two times prior to the night she telephoned police. He said the last time before the night of Nov. 13 was one week earlier on Nov. 6.

He also testified he met her through another Negro, Sylvester Dickerson, who, he said, is now dead. Wansley said the reason he failed to tell police about his previous relations with the woman was that she had threatened to get him in trouble.

Wansley further said the woman invited him back to visit with her later and asked him to bring her a pack of cigarettes. He said he never went back because of the threat.

Commonwealth's Attorney Royston Jester III called the woman as the first witness for the state. She testified she fought the Negro and also screamed aloud for help. She said Wansley choked her neck to stifle her shouts.

POLICE WHO testified were Patrolman S. B. Chapman, Det. Sgts. Hubert Nash, C. M. Harvey, C. W. Loving and J. E. Franklin and Police Chief Major R. O. Brooks.

Patrolman Chapman was the first officer on the scene. The detectives identified clothing introduced as that Wansley wore the night of the attack. It was picked up at his 410 H. St. residence and later identified by the woman.

Major Brooks and the detectives verified Wansley's confession of the crime and testified he took them to the Lucado Place woman's home.

* * *

DEFENSE WITNESSES included the Rev. Baby Stokes, Mrs. Willie Mae Thornton, Wansley's mother; Mrs. Effie Wansley, and Estelle Cabell, a neighbor who has known the defendant since "he was four."

They testified to Wansley's "good" character.

Wansley appeared calm and unmoved when he took the witness stand. His testimony concluded the case for the defense.

In his arguments to the jury Jester declared the only just punishment for "a crime of this nature is death." He said the jury was "not concerned only with the fate of the defendant. You are also concerned with the fate of the 60,000 people of Lynchburg."

He said the jury should "let the people know we are not going to tolerate this kind of conduct.' He declared also that the sanctity of the home and the sanctity of womanhood was at stake.

Defense attorney Reuben Lawson, Negro, Roanoke, argued that the state had failed to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the case was one of rape.

THE CASE went to the jury at 5:18 p.m. and the verdict was returned at 6:36 o'clock. Members of the jury were George Bass, A. Lee Booth, Edward T. Boyd Jr., Claiborne W. Craddock, Ernest W. Mitchell, John A. Myers, David B. Padgett, Clyde L. Tyree, William P. Wood, James T. Smith, J. Lyons Davidson, and Henry O. Porter.

Two alternates, Ralph B. Anthony and Werth W. Harvey were excused after hearing all of the testimony but immediately prior to the jury retiring to consider the verdict.

Wansley, who appeared stunned and burst into tears last week when Judge Cundiff passed the death sentence on him, appeared indifferent Tuesday.

His mother, who last week broke into sobs audible throughout the courtroom, calmly approached her son Tuesday and embraced him and kissed him.

Wansley was led smiling from the courtroom.

Controversy

A recent trial in Lynchburg has excited widespread interest and controversy. We wish to present the facts and pose four questions.

A young Negro, eighteen years old, was sentenced to death for the rape of a white woman and a Japanese woman. He was also sentenced to 20 years imprisonment for the robbery of $1.36 at knife-point of the first victim. Verdicts in both cases were returned by an all white, male jury.

The defense lawyer filed petitions to have him committed to a mental institution for observation, to dismiss the all-white jury because of possible bias, and to try the case in another place because of the publicity surrounding it and because of the possibility that it had been prejudged in the papers and other news media.

The motion for a mental observation was denied because the defendant was examined by several psychiatrists and found to be legally sane (though of low normal intelligence), able to distinguish right from wrong. The other motions were also overruled.

In his arguments to the jury the Commonwealth's Attorney stated that the only just punishment for "a crime of this nature [a savage, brutal attack] is death." If the jury returned a verdict other than death, citizens "can't walk safely upon public streets."

The only legal requirement for a defendant's ability to stand trial is that he know what he is doing and be able to distinguish right from wrong, regardless of his level of intelligence or any mental illness.

This trial raises many serious questions.

1) "He shall not be deprived of life or liberty, except by the law of the land or the judgment of his peers . . ." (Article I, section 8, Constitution of Virginia.) Can an all-white, male jury in the state of Virginia, city of Lynchburg be considered the "peers" of a Negro boy on trial for the rape of two non-Negro women?

2) In the emotionalism surrounding any trial of this type is it possible to arrive at an impartial decision? Should the trial have been held somewhere else?

3) Five days after the first trial, the young defendant was tried again and sentenced to death a second time. Would not the publicity between the trials and the widespread attention it had attracted affect the jurors of the second trial?

4) The penalty for common law rape in the state of Virginia ranges from death to not less than five years imprisonment with the punishment fixed by the jury. Is death the only "just punishment" in this case? The decision to say to someone "you will be electrocuted until you are dead" is of great magnitude.

Certainly the obligation to protect society must be considered, but serious reservations about this sentence in the circumstances of the trial can not help but be raised in the minds of thoughtful and conscientious citizens.

Man's Sentence Set On Perjury Charge

LYNCHBURG, March 5—(AP)—A 37-year-old white man was sentenced to three years in prison Tuesday for perjury resulting from his testimony during a trial in which he was convicted of the statutory rape of an 11-year-old Negro girl.

The three-year sentence given George Walton Brooks must be served after he has served a five-year prison ferm on the statutory rape charge.

Corporation Court Judge O. Raymond Cundiff refused to set aside the jury verdict in the perjury case and pronounced the sentence fixed by the jurors.

Brooks was convicted last September on the statutory rape charge and appealed to the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals. The court last week upheld the conviction and Brooks started serving his 5-year sentence Monday.

LYNCHBURG, Va.---Len Holt, noted civil rights attorney from Norfolk, has been employed as counsel for Thomas C. Wansley, 18, under two death sentences for alleged rape.

He will take the place of Reuben Lawson of Roanoke, who died March 23 while preparing Wansley's Appeal to the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals, Richmond.

Holt will work with William Kunstler, New York attorney employed by the Gandhi Society for Human Rights. They will seek to void the death sentences and a 20-year prison term faced by Wansley.

The Negro youth is scheduled to die June 7 unless there is a stay. Two all-white juries found him guilty of raping a white woman who could not positively identify him and a Japanese woman with whom Wansley said he had been having sex relations before she charged him with rape.

A short time before this, in the same court, a white man was sentenced to five years in prison for raping an 11-year-old girl after a policeman caught him in the act.

Concerned white persons in Lynchburg are forming a group to work with Negro leaders seeking freedom for Wansley. They are especially disturbed over the double standard of justice shown in the Wansley case and that of the white man.

People all over the nation are protesting to Gov. Albertis Harrison, Executive Mansion, Richmond, Va., and to U.S. officials in Washington.

Nationwide support for Wansley is being rallied by the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), Atlanta, which has a unit in Lynchburg, and the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), New Orleans.

Holt is a member of the Legal Committee of SCEF and is a co-secretary of the Committee to Aid Southern Lawyers (CASL), of the National Lawyers Guild.

DANVILLE, Va.--Over 100 Negroes marched singing through the streets here to attend the appeal trial of five persons arrested in January for sitting in at a Howard Johnson restaurant.

The five received $100 fines---double what they had gotten in their previous conviction in Municipal Court. The charge was trespass. The defendants included the Rev. A. I. Dunlap, leader of the Danville Progressive Christian Association and a member of the board of the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

The marchers were not allowed in the courtroom. The judge excluded all spectators after Defense Attorneys Len Holt and Michael Standard moved for desegregation of the courtroom and removal of all racial signs.

The judge also over-ruled motions by Holt and Standard challenging the jury system here. They charged that the system provides for only "token inclusion" of Negroes; they pointed out that the total Danville population is 45,000 of whom 11,000 are Negroes, but that there were only 75 Negroes on a panel of 500. They said a correct ratio would be one-fourth of the panel.

Holt, of Norfolk, Va., and Standard, a New York attorney, represented the Committee to Assist Southern Lawyers of the National Lawyers Guild. Holt is also a member of the SCEF Legal Committee. They said the convictions would be appealed further.

The mass march to the trial followed a few days after 2,400 persons turned out to hear Dr. Martin Luther King speak at the City Auditorium here. It was said to be the largest crowd ever gathered at the auditorium. The Danville Progressive Christian Association is an affiliate of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, which Dr. King heads. The city auditorium was recently desegregated after an omnibus integration suit was filed here.

Other speakers at the meeting included Mr. Dunlap, the Rev. L.D. Campbell and the Rev. L.W. Chase, both of whom are also defendants in the trespass case; Dr. Milton A. Reid, Petersburg, Va., SCLC state representative; and Carl Braden, SCEF field secretary.

JACKSON, Miss.--Four more NAACP boycott pickets were arrested on downtown Capitol Street. Arrested were Arverna Adams, Jimmy Armstrong, Frank Dickey, and Austin Moore III, all natives of Mississippi and students at Tougaloo Southern Christian College.

The charge was "obstructing the sidewalk"--an offense punishable by six months in jail each and $500 fines apiece.

Witnesses say the sidewalks were clear and the picketing, which lasted only a few minutes, was orderly. Between 75 and 100 Jackson city police were involved in the arrests.

The arrests marked another round in the four-month-old Jackson anti-discrimination boycott which is levied against 127 business establishments, 17 are members of national chains.

Leaders threatened to make the boycott a "permanent institution" unless their demands are met, namely, equality in hiring and promotion, desegregation of store facilities, use of courtesy titles, and service on a first come-first served basis. The effectiveness of the boycott is estimated at about eighty percent.

The boycott movement, initiated by NAACP youth and supported by all other civil rights organizations, began shortly before Christmas when a Tougaloo faculty member and his wife and four students picketed briefly before being arrested by between 50 and 100 police and charged with "obstructing." Later, two more Tougaloo students were arrested on the same charge.

Bail bonds of $500 each have been provided for all arrested pickets by interested individuals, the Gandhi Society for Human Rights, and the New Orleans-based Southern Conference Educational Fund.

Legal defense, which includes efforts to get the trials of the pickets transferred from the state courts into Federal court on a primarily First Amendment basis, is being furnished by the Gandhi Society. Attorneys for the arrested boycott pickets are R. Jess Brown, Jackson; Clarence Jones, New York City, and William Kunstler, New York City.

The Mayor has threatened to line downtown Capitol Street with 1000 policemen to prevent picketing; a shot has been fired through the window of one boycott leader and threats have been made to dynamite his home; workers have been harassed.

Boycott leaders answered by stepping up their campaign of mass distribution of leaflets, telephoning, public meetings, speakers in churches, and have promised more picketing. They were encouraged recently when white students in Jackson joined the boycott movement and helped with leaflet distribution---perhaps marking the first time in Mississippi history that white students from the state have been involved openly in a local civil rights project.

April 17, 1963

NORFOLK, Va.--Civil-rights leaders from over the South will gather here April 26 and 27 for a conference on "Time for Action in the Mid-South."

Purpose of the conference is to stimulate action leading to equal rights for all citizens and to provide information on which people may act. There will be workshops on job opportunities, housing, voting, civil liberties, public facilities, and education.

The conference will open Friday night, April 26, with a keynote session in the auditorium of Norfolk Division, Virginia State College, on Corprew Avenue. The workshops will be held all the next day at the college.

Keynote speaker will be the Rev. C. T. Vivian, Chattanooga, a leader in the Tennessee Voters Council and a noted exponent of non-violent direct action. He will be introduced by the Rev. C. E. Griffin, pastor of First Calvary Baptist Church here.

Presiding will be Dr. Herman H. Long, director of Race Relations Institute at Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., and vice-president of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), New Orleans. Music will be by Guy Carawan, Atlanta, Ga., noted Southern folk singer.

The welcome will be by Dr. Lyman B. Brooks, provost of the Virginia State Norfolk Division. Those making brief talks will include Dr. Samuel Newman, Danville, Va.; David D. Alston, Norfolk labor leader; Dr. Daniel Bowers, Portsmouth, Va.; and the Rev. James Curtis, Norfolk.

Presiding at the opening of the workshop sessions on Saturday will be the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, leader of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights. He was arrested twice in Birmingham during recent demonstrations there.

The Rt. Rev. Edgar A. Love, Methodist Bishop of Baltimore and president of SCEF, will preside at the opening of the afternoon workshops. Dr. G.W.C. Brown, director of adult services at Norfolk

State, will preside at the closing session, where the conference will be summarized by Miss Ella J. Baker, Atlanta.

Among resource people at the workshops will be student leaders who have been in the forefront of the struggle in Georgia and Mississippi. They will include Charles Sherrod, who has been heading the voter-registration drive in Albany, Ga., for the Voter Education Project (VEP).

There will also be students who took part in the recent demonstrations at Greenwood, Miss. Included will be James Forman, executive secretary of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), who spent several days in the Greenwood jail.

Also present will be Mrs. Diane Bevel, Cleveland, Miss. She led the student upsurge at Nashville in 1960, was jailed for nonviolent direct action in South Carolina in 1961, and is under a two-year sentence at Jackson,Miss., for her part in the Freedom Rides.

Other resource people will come from Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, and Louisiana. Participants will be drawn mostly from Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland and the District.

Workshop chairmen will be Dr. Withrow McEnge, Virginia State College, Norfolk; W. Hale Thompson, attorney, Newport News, Va.; Dr. S. F. Coppage, Norfolk; the Rev. Virgil A. Wood, Lynchburg, Va.; the Rev. L. Francis Griffin, Farmville, Va., and the Rev. Mr. Curtis.

Sponsors of the conference are the Institute for Community Development (Virginia State College); Norfolk Committee for Social Justice; Norfolk-Portsmouth Council on Human Relations; Peninsula Coordinating Committee; Tidewater Voter Registration Project; Student Movement for Human Dignity; and SCEF.

Conference Coordinators are Dr. G.W.C. Brown and Dr. W. P. Robinson of the Institute for Community Development. Housing chairmen are the Rev. Godfrey Tate and Mrs. Mary Rose Curtis, both of Norfolk.

Persons desiring housing should write them at 503 Massachusetts Avenue, Norfolk 8, Virginia.

LYNCHBURG, Va.---"If it weren't for you people I don't know what I would do," Mrs. Willie Mae Thornton told a mass meeting sponsored by the Wansley Defense Fund.

Mrs. Thornton is the mother of Thomas Wansley, 18, who is under two sentences of death for alleged rape of a white woman and a Japanese woman.

Her statement was made after she read to the gathering a letter written by her son. He is in the Death House at Richmond, Va., awaiting execution on June 7.

In the letter young Wansley asked his mother to "tell Grandmother that I am going deeper into the Bible." He wrote Mrs. Thornton after she visited him recently.

"He looks well and seemed to be in very good spirits," his mother told the assemblage of ministers and other white and Negro supporters.

She later told a reporter about her son's deprived background. His father died several years ago and she remarried. Wansley dropped out of school at 16, when he was still in the 6th grade.

He had done fairly well in his studies but got behind because he was absent so much. This resulted from a chronic scalp ailment which the family did not have the money to treat adequately.

Mrs. Thornton, who works as a maid, said that Wansley went to work as a dishwasher after he left school. She noted that he had never been arrested or been in any kind of trouble before he was accused of rape. He is also under a 20-year sentence on a charge of taking $1.36 from one of the alleged rape victims.

"I sat in those trials here in February," Mrs. Thornton said. "From the evidence I heard they haven't convinced me that he's guilty of anything.

"The only thing he is guilty of is being with the Japanese woman. Like he told in court, he had been with her before she charged him with rape. I think she made the charge because her neighbors saw my son going into her house and she was afraid they would tell it."

Wansley testified that he had intercourse with the Japanese woman on at least two occasions before she alleged rape. The other rape victim could not positively identify the young man as her attacker.

His conviction and sentences have aroused the Negro community and many white persons in this area, as well as persons in other parts of the state. The Rev. J.A. Carter told the mass meeting: "We want justice. Righteousness exalts a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

Another speaker was the Rev. Herman Ford, local president of NAACP. He said of young Wansley: "Though he may be far from our eyes, he is near to our hearts."

The Wansley Defense Fund was started by the Baptist Ministers Conference, headed by the Rev. Harold A. Carter and including other denominations. "God is blessing our cause if for no other reason than the publicity it is getting all over the world," Rev. Mr. Carter declared.

"We got a letter and a check today from Tel Aviv, Israel. It is symbolic at this time of year to have a communication and a contribution from the Holy Land."

He reported that money and messages of support have been received from other parts of the world and from all over the United States. There have been donations by professors and students at all-white colleges in this area.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), Atlanta, and the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), New Orleans, are urging friends and associated groups to aid the Wansley defense.

Protests are being sent to Gov. Albertis Harrison, Executive Mansion, Richmond, Va., and to the U.S. Department of Justice and the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, both in Washington, D.C.

A representative of SCEF told the mass meeting that the Wansley case would be made an "international issue." He was commenting on reports in the Lynchburg press, which scoffed at claims that the Wansley Case would become a national issue.

The likelihood that it will become one has the local newspapers worried. They have reacted by smearing several persons working in behalf of Wansley.

These include the Rev. Virgil A. Wood, a board member of both SCEF and SCLC, and Len Holt, an attorney for Wansley. Holt is a member of the SCEF Legal Committee and is active in the National Lawyers Guild; he is also a former field worker for CORE.

Holt has asked the Corporation Court to grant Wansley new trials because of the death of his trial attorney, Reuben Lawson of Roanoke, Virginia. Lawson died March 23 but Holt notes that he was ill when Wansley was tried Feb. 7 and 12.

Another basis for the request is that no court reporter was present for the trial on Feb. 7, and the death of Lawson "denies to the defendant the sole person properly capable of making up and insuring the accuracy of a transcript of the proceedings."

A tape recording was made of the trial, but Holt notes "that none of the present counsel for the defendant including myself, has any way of determing the accuracy of the purported tape."

He said there is no way to tell "whether there have been any additions or whether some mechanical accident may have destroyed part of the recordings."

Numerous other violations of Wansley's constitutional rights are noted, including racial segregation in the courtroom and systematic exclusion of Negroes from the juries which tried him.

Denial of the requests for new trials would clear the way for taking the case to the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals at Richmond. The next step after that is an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court in Washington.

Holt is working with William M. Kunstler, New York attorney employed by the Gandhi Society for Human Rights. They expect to get a stay of Wansley's execution so they will have time to prepare his appeal.

April 30, 1963

NORFOLK, Va.--A massive assault on token integration in the Mid-South was mapped at a meeting of civil-rights leaders here recently.

The two-day conference at Virginia State College (Norfolk Division) brought together key people from nine Southern states. Many of these came from the Deep South to share experiences with leaders from North Carolina, Virginia, and Maryland.

They took part workshops on voting, civil liberties, job opportunities, and how to end segregation in schools, housing, and public facilities. There were also four general sessions.

"The Mid-South is a symbol of the tragedy of success," Mrs. Ella J. Baker said in a summary at the closing session. "We have succeeded in achieving little goals and satisfied ourselves; we failed to see that we have only scratched the surface."

Most speakers and resource persons warned participants not to wait for someone else to do the job--but to get out and do it for themselves.

"If we want liberals in office we are going to have to make them ourselves---with votes," said the Rev. C.T. Vivian, of Chattanooga, the keynote speaker.

Mr. Vivian is a leader in the Tennessee Voters Council and an advocate of nonviolent direct action (N.V.D.A.). He stressed that N.V.D.A. must be combined with political, legal, and economic action--that all must be used together.

"We changed the law and really changed very little in the segregated pattern," Mr. Vivian declared. "Laws grow out of a culture, so now we find that we must change the whole culture from which the laws grow. There must be a full-scale assault on the status crow!"

He urged mass action mixed with a spirit of love--a total mobilizing of the individual. "We'll pit ourselves, our total personality, against this evil system," he asserted.

Negroes must fight as hard against injustices to white people as they do against injustices to their own people, said David D. Alston, Norfolk, international vice-president of the International Longshoremen's Association (ALF-CIO).

James H. Curtis, minister of the Unitarian Church of Norfolk, called upon the group to "never be afraid to raise your voice for honesty and truth and compassion...You will change the earth."

The assemblage adopted a resolution praising the Norfolk Virginian Pilot for supporting the right of an integration leader to speak on the campus of Old Dominion College here.

An officer of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), New Orleans, one of the conference sponsors, had to address a group of students in a professor's back yard after being barred from the O.D.C. campus on a technicality.

The O.D.C. action was also criticized in a talk by Dr. Otto H. Olsen, a professor at the college and president of the Norfolk branch of the American Association of University Professors.

Dr. Lyman B. Brooks, provost at Virginia State, welcomed the conference participants. Dr. G.W.C. Brown and Dr. W.P. Robinson of the college's Institute for Community Development were coordinators of the meeting, of which I.C.D. was also a sponsor.

The board of SCEF held its semi-annual meeting here in connection with the conference. The board voted to continue all-out support of the struggle in Birmingham, which it called the "most crucial battlefield in the South."

SCEF condemned the use of court injunctions against people demonstrating against segregation. It urged supporters throughout the nation to back the boycott of stores that discriminate in the South, especially Woolworth, Kress, Newberry, and H.L. Green.

The board complimented the Federal Government on finally acting against recent injustices in Mississippi, but said that the actions were far from enough and the Government should do more. The U.S. Justice Department was urged "to extend the application of federal power beyond the token stage."

SCEF expressed shock at the assassination of William Moore in Alabama. It noted that such murders result from the kind of hate generated by segregation.

The board voted support of the Freedom Walk started as a memorial to Moore by the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) and CORE.

SNCC members, SCEF directors, and other conference participants were among about 100 persons who took part in a vigil for Moore on the sidewalk in front of the Federal Building here. The vigil was held on the afternoon that Moore was buried, which was the last day of the conference.

The Executive Committee of SNCC met after the conference to complete plans for the Freedom Walk. Several members of the Executive Committee had taken leading parts in the action conference.

RE: Outrage in Alabama

NOTE ON THE NEWS

By Marjorie S. Wheeler

Behold --- these modern men calling out dogs
To help them keep the law! But what is that Behind the law -- equipped with broken staves
And garbled words? I think it is our fathers'
Ghosts ordering old bloodhounds into the swamp.

The use of vicious dogs, fire hoses, and electric shock sticks, upon citizens demonstrating peacefully against injustice in Alabama, should outrage people of good will everywhere.

Behind this barbaric and sadistic outburst is the refusal of business men and city officials to grant modest demands previously agreed to, such as the desegregation of lunch counters, fountains, and rest rooms in downtown Birmingham.

More than fifteen hundred have been arrested in Birmingham, including more than five hundred teen-agers still in custody. Among those arrested yesterday was Guy Carawan, noted folk singer, and his wife. Carawan was arrested as he tried to enter a Negro church to provide music for the service. Police had ordered all whites to stay out of the church.

Nineteen "freedom-walkers" are in jail. Eight were arrested on May 1, one on May 2 at Attalla, and on the 3rd ten more from SNCC and CORE were arrested at the Georgia-Alabama line. All were charged with "disturbing the peace."

I was present when the first group of eight young people was arrested May 1, "Law Day." Marching single file along the shoulder of Highway Eleven, they had stopped for a red light in Attalla where four state highways converge.

They began their walk in memory of William Moore at about the spot where he had been murdered. The signs they wore, sandwich style, carried the legends "Love!," "All Men are Equal," "Love Thy Neighbor--Thou Shalt Not Kill." They attracted little attention during the 15 minutes they had been walking. There were no incidents.

When the light turned green, the pilgrims crossed the street where a state patrol car was waiting. In a few seconds the Sheriff's car charged up, along with other state cars. The signs were snatched off and placed in the trunk of one of the cars. With a crude command, "get in that car, boy," they were hustled off to the Etowah County Jail, where they are refusing bail, as are the 10 others in DeKalb County Jail.

ACTION:

Here is what you can do:

(1) Telegraph or write to The President, The Attorney General, the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, all at Washington 25, District of Columbia; Governor George C. Wallace, Executive Mansion, Montgomery, Alabama; Mayor Albert Boutwell, City Hall, Birmingham, Alabama.

(2) Leaders of the Birmingham Movement ask that delegations of one or more be dispatched to Birmingham, May 16-18, to give moral support to the freedom movement and to picket the federal building; also Woolworth, Kress, Newberry, H.L. Green.

(3) Support the nationwide boycott of Woolworth, Kress, Newberry, H.L. Green. If any of these national chains have stores in your community, tell them how you feel about their segregated policy in the South.

(4) If you would like to write to the freedom-walkers: (For the nine arrested in Attalla, write to: Mrs. Diane Bevel, Etowah County Jail, Gadsden, Alabama.

(For the ten arrested at the Alabama-Georgia line, write to: Mr. John Robert Zellner, DeKalb County Jail, Fort Payne, Ala.

Following is a copy of our telegram to Governor Wallace on May 1st.

TODAY IN ATTALLA, ALABAMA, I WITNESSED A TRAGIC MISCARRIAGE OF JUSTICE. EIGHT YOUNG AMERICANS WALKING PEACEFULLY ALONG HIGHWAY ELEVEN WERE ARRESTED AND JAILED FOR TELLING PEOPLE TO LOVE EACH OTHER.

IN A SENSE THIS DEPRIVATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS IS MORE SHOCKING THAN THE MURDER OF WILLIAM MOORE BECAUSE IN THIS INSTANCE THE OFFENDERS ACTED UNDER COLOR OF LAW AS OFFICERS SWORN TO UPHOLD THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

WE CALL UPON YOU TO PROTECT THE RIGHTS OF ALL CITIZENS AND TO USE YOUR GOOD OFFICES TO SECURE THE RELEASE OF THESE YOUNG IDEALISTS WHOSE FORTHRIGHT WITNESS TO CONSCIENCE WILL BE REMEMBERED LONG AFTER THEIR JAILERS ARE FORGOTTEN.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.--A man who was about to die in the electric chair one year ago is now expected to be free on parole by the end of 1964.

Robert Jones, Jr., a Negro, was saved from execution through the efforts of an interracial group called the Committee for Clemency for Jones and Brown.

He was granted a new trial by the Kentucky Court of Appeals after protests by the committee and by concerned people throughout the nation. The court cited errors in Jones's trial for armed robbery in December, 1961.

The court gave similar reasons for granting a new trial to John Brown Jr., a white man who was facing death for another armed robbery. He was given life in prison upon retrial, which means probable freedom on parole about five years hence.

In Jone's case, the man he had robbed dropped dead recently. The State offered to let him off with a sentence of 8 years, and he agreed. He will be credited with 13 months served in the Death House.

"This means that he will be eligible for parole in a year and a half," said Mrs. Verna Pfuhl, secretary of the Committee for clemency.

Leading members of the committee included Dr. M.M.D. Perdue and Bishop C. Ewbank Tucker, both members of the board of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), an interracial integrationist group based in New Orleans.

LYNCHBURG, Va.---Interest in the case of Thomas Wansley, a Negro youth under sentence of death, has resulted in a movement to save the lives of four white men scheduled for execution.

It has also inspired the formation of a committee to end all capital punishment in Virginia. Meantime, the date of Wansley's execution was delayed indefinitely to allow time for an appeal to the Virginia Supreme Court.

An interracial committee called Death to Death was formed by persons who attended a hearing here May 2 on a plea for new trials for Wansley.

They integrated Corporation Court for the first time in history, in the wake of a U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregated seating in courtrooms throughout the nation.

Courtroom segregation was one of the grounds on which Wansley's attorneys sought to win him new trials. It will now be one of the bases for appealing two death sentences and a 20-year prison term which he faces.

The youth is accused of raping and robbing a white woman who could not positively identify him, and with raping a Japanese woman with whom he said he had previous sexual relations.

Len Holt, Norfolk attorney, and William M. Kunstler, New York, told Judge O. Raymond Cundiff in a written motion that Wansley's previous attorney was ill when the youth was tried on Feb. 7 and 12. The attorney, Reuben Lawson, died March 23.

Holt and Kunstler noted that a tape recording was made of the trial on Feb. 7 because no court stenographer was available. They said that this, combined with the death of Lawson, made it impossible to provide a record for appeal on which all parties could agree. Systematic exclusion of Negroes from the juries that tried Wansley is also a basis for appeal.

Judge Cundiff refused new trials on the ground that such a decision was now out of his hands. However, he did allow Wansley to appeal as a pauper. The youth was a dishwasher before his arrest last fall. His mother works as a maid to support herself and other children.

White students and professors from colleges in this area were among the integrated group at the May 2 hearing. Also present was Mrs. Greta Crosby, white minister of the Unitarian Church here and secretary of the Lynchburg Council on Human Relations.

She became secretary of Death to Death, which was formed after supporters of Wansley learned that four white men were awaiting execution in Virginia. Death to Death organized a delegation that visited Gov. Albertis Harrison at Richmond on behalf of these men and Wansley during the week of May 6.

The committee's address is P.O. Box 1152, Lynchburg. It will cooperate with the Wansley Defense Fund, which is heading the drive to save Wansley. Other groups working in his behalf are the Gandhi Society for Human Rights, New York; the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), Atlanta, and the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), New Orleans.

Mrs. Crosby had questioned the whole concept of capital punishment in a letter to The Lynchburg News after the conviction of Wansley.

Her letter also raised the issue of "double justice," pointing out that no white man had ever been executed for rape in Virginia, so far as could be determined. (The death sentence for rape has been traditionally reserved for Negroes in the South.)

"Would Wansley now be awaiting execution if he were white?" Mrs. Crosby asked in her letter. She developed this theme further in a sermon to members of her congregation. She asked them pointedly:

"If he had been your son or mine, do you think he would now be awaiting his execution? Would he not have been tried as a juvenile? Would he not have spent a long time in a mental institution under observation?

"...would a son of yours or mine under the same accusation and conviction now be waiting to die by our hand?"

Wansley himself was visited by Attorney Holt just before the May 2 hearing. He was in the Death House at Richmond with the four white men whose lives he has already affected. He told Holt:

"I want to thank everybody for their help. I hope that they will fix it so that what happened to me won't happen to anyone else ---either black or white."

LOUISVILLE, Ky.---The Louisville and Vicinity Baptist Ministers and Deacons Meeting voted to recruit people to join the demonstrations against racial segregation in Birmingham, Ala.

They acted in response to a request from Dr. Martin L. King, Jr. and other leaders in Birmingham for a mobilization there on May 16 and 18.

Dr. M.M.D. Perdue, a director of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), New Orleans, was named chairman of a special committee to recruit participants from this area.

The committee also includes Dr. D. E. King, a director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), Atlanta, which is headed by Dr. Martin L. King Jr.

Other committee members are the Rev. W.J. Hodge, a leader in the NAACP here; the Rev. C.B. Lucas, director of the Baptist Fellowship Center, and the Rev. J.V. Bottoms.

The ministers also voted to contact President John F.Kennedy and Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy and urge them to use the power of the Federal Government to protect the rights of Negro citizens in Alabama.

It was also voted to raise money in the churches in this area and send it to Birmingham to help finance the struggle there. Half the Negroes in Louisville are members of churches affiliated with the Ministers and Deacons Meeting.

NEW ORLEANS, La.---The Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, leader of the integration movement in Birmingham, Ala., has been elected president of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF).

He was chosen by the SCEF board of directors at a special election caused by the resignation of Bishop Edgar A. Love, Methodist bishop of Baltimore.

Bishop Love resigned as president on orders of his physician, but will remain on the board and active in the affairs of SCEF, a Southwide interracial group working to end segregation and discrimination. Aubrey W. Williams, Montgomery, Ala., will remain as president emeritus.

The Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth has been president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights since it was founded in 1956 after the NAACP was outlawed in Alabama.

As leader of the struggles in Birmingham, he has been beaten and jailed numerous times. He and his family narrowly escaped death in 1956 when hoodlums destroyed their home with dynamite.

The SCEF board also added several new members to its number, including the Rev. James A. Zellner, Methodist minister in Panama City, Fla., and Mrs. Diane Bevel, Cleveland, Miss., former student leader in Nashville and now a key figure in the struggles in Alabama and Mississippi.

Mrs. Bevel is in jail in Gadsden, Ala., for taking part in a Freedom Walk as a memorial to William Moore, who was assassinated on a highway near Gadsden.

The Rev. Mr. Zellner is the father of Bob Zellner, who is in jail at Fort Payne, Ala., for taking part in another Freedom Walk for Moore.

Young Zellner and Mrs. Bevel are both field workers for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), based in Atlanta.

Mrs. Bevel is under a two-year sentence in Mississippi for her part in the Freedom Rides, while Bob Zellner faces up to 25 years in prison for various charges in Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi.

Also elected to the SCEF board were Methodist Bishop Charles Golden, Nashville, and the Rev. Robert E. Seymour, Baptist minister in Chapel Hill, N.C. The Rev. James H. Curtis, minister of the Unitarian Church of Norfolk, Va., was named to the SCEF advisory committee.

Philip Bacon and Marion Barry,Jr.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.--A white graduate student at the University of Tennessee has become the symbol of the integration movement in this city.

He is Philip Bacon, pictured here with the sign he has been carrying in the University area and in downtown Knoxville. The sign announces the one-man fast Bacon has been carrying on as a protest against segregation and arrests of young student demonstrators here.

With Bacon in this picture is Marion S.Barry, Jr., a Negro student integration leader. Barry described Bacon as the "symbol of the Knoxville movement" in an article scheduled for publication in the May issue of The Southern Patriot.

"What is so unique about Knoxville and the University of Tennessee," Barry added, "is the number of white students who have joined the fight for equal rights for all. Two-thirds of the movement here is made up of white students."

Barry himself is a leader of the Southwide Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC). He rose to leadership in the original student sit-ins in 1960, when he was a student at Fisk University in Nashville; he is now a graduate student at the University of Tennessee and is one of the founders of the interracial action group here, Student for Equal Treatment (SET).

The main target of the student movement here has been eating establishments around the University. Students began the campaign to integrate them in the fall of 1961, Barry reports. For an entire school year they attempted negotiation and persuasion, and five restaurants did open their doors last spring.

Two establishments, Byerley's and the Tennessean, adamantly refused, and last fall when the students returned to school they found that two of those which had integrated in the spring had reverted to their segregated policies. They then organized SET to engage in direct action.

Picketing, sit-ins, and stand-ins have been going on at the restaurants since January. There have been a number of arrests, and the restaurant owners have obtained injunctions against the demonstrators.

In April, when Knoxville was to receive an All-American City Award from Look Magazine, students demonstrated in protest. Students from Knoxville College, high school students, and townspeople joined University students in the demonstration. Forty-nine were arrested.

It was while he was in jail following this demonstration that Philip Bacon began his fast. He continued it after his release; a few days later he walked into the downtown area with his sign and was arrested for parading without a permit.

"Knoxville is beginning to move, and we hope to keep it moving," Barry wrote.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.--Virtually all Negro churches in this community are joining in sponsorship of a mass meeting to be held here May 28 in support of the Birmingham, Ala., integration movement.

Main speakers will be the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth and the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, two of the key leaders in the recent Birmingham struggle.

Sponsors of the Louisville meeting have also invited the city's white churches and interracial religious groups to join in support of the meeting.

Purpose of the meeting will be to pledge moral support and raise funds for the Birmingham freedom movement and to provide Louisville citizens with an opportunity to hear a first-hand report of recent events in that city.

Negro ministers and laymen in Louisville had planned a pilgrimage to Birmingham in support of the movement there but called that off after a truce was reached there. They said, however, that they stood ready to proceed with the pilgrimage plans if leaders in Birmingham indicated that such expressions were needed in the future.

Initiator of the pilgrimage plans and the May 28 mass meeting is the Louisville and Vicinity Baptist Ministers and Deacons Meeting. Joining in sponsorship of the meeting are leaders of the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance and local A.M.E. Zion Churches headed by Bishop C. Ewbank Tucker.

The sponsors sent invitations to be co-sponsors to the Louisville Ministerial Association, the West End Ministerial Association, the Louisville Pastors Conference (all predominantly white groups) and the Jewish congregations of the city.

The Rev. M.M.D. Perdue, chairman of the planning committee for the meeting, said: "We want this to be an interdenominational and interracial occasion, a time when we all pledge our support to the brave people struggling for freedom in Birmingham.

"We see Birmingham as the symbol of the American Negro's yearning to be free, but we don't see this as a battle of black against white. It is a struggle of people of good will against injustice, and we are inviting our white brothers to join us in this effort."

The planning committee for the meeting represents a unity of representatives of several regional and national civil rights groups. Mr. Perdue is vice-chairman of Louisville CORE and a member of the board of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF); another leader of the committee, at whose church the meeting will be held, is Dr. D.E. King, noted churchman who has led many local civil rights efforts and is a member of the board of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC) which has sparked the Birmingham struggle; another is the Rev. W.J. Hodge, Louisville NAACP leader. Bishop Tucker is chairman of Louisville CORE and also an SCEF board member.

Many church leaders in Louisville joined in the nationwide effort to get stronger Federal action in Birmingham. At the height of the crisis there, Bishop Tucker sent a telegram to President Kennedy in which he said:

"As one of the presiding bishops of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, with a constituency of 1,000,000 and a membership of 30,000 in Alabama, I implore you to employ the powers inherent in your high office to bring to an equitable consumation the deplorable situation in Birmingham.

"The use of dogs against men, women, and children clamoring for their constitutional rights is not in keeping with our boasted American civilization, and it is hard to realize, Mr. President, that this could happen in a civilized country."

In a telegram to the President the following day, Bishop Tucker told the Chief Executive that he could take action in Birmingham under Title 18, Section 242, of the U.S Code which says:

"Whoever, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, wilfully subjects any inhabitant of any State, Territory, or District to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or to different punishments, pains, or penalties, on account of such inhabitant being an alien, or by reason of his color or race, than are prescribed for the punishment of citizens, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both."

LOUISVILLE, Ky.---White Baptist ministers here have joined in supporting a mass meeting for May 29 for the Birmingham freedom fighters.

The rally will be in Convention Hall, which seats 7,500 persons and is in the heart of the downtown section. Featured speakers will be Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and his administrative assistant, the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, both of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), Atlanta.

The Rev. Leo T. Crismon, clerk of the Louisville Baptist Pastors Conference, said the group "voted to pledge sympathy, prayer, and support for the meeting." The action by the white ministers was unanimous, Mr. Crismon added.

Wide local support of the Birmingham movement came in the wake of passage of a city ordinance banning discrimination by Louisville businesses that cater to the public.

One of the factors in gaining passage of the law was fear that demonstrations similar to those in Birmingham might break out here again.

The ordinance came after a three-year struggle which included the jailing of hundreds of demonstrators in Louisville during 1961 and 1962. At one time the city held the record for the number of persons jailed for demonstrating in one day.

Those who led the demonstrations and the fight for the ordinance were among initiators and early sponsors of the rally for the freedom fighters in Birmingham.

These include Dr. M. M. D. Perdue, Bishop C. Ewbank Tucker, and the Rev. Daniel J. Hughlett, all members of the board of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), and Miss Mary Pendleton.

Perdue and Tucker are also top officers of Louisville CORE; Hughlett is secretary of the Jefferson County Sunday School Association, and Miss Pendleton is a leader in the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) and CORE.

Last January, Bishop Tucker threatened to lead a march on City Hall if the public-accommodations ordinance was not passed.

His threat caused a flurry of activity among liberals and moderates, who applied pressure to city officials and the Board of Aldermen. The vote for the measure was 8 to 3 and one alderman abstained.

Mayor William O. Cowger had come out in favor of the ordinance. He told Dr. Perdue, general chairman of the May 29th rally, that he also is supporting that effort.

LYNCHBURG, Va.---Supporters of young Thomas Wansley are mystified by the arrest and sudden release of a white man who was accused of murdering a friend of Wansley's.

Wansley is under two death sentences, one on a charge of raping a white woman who could not positively identify him, the other on a charge of raping a Japanese woman.

At one of his trials in February, Wansley testified that he had sexual relations with the Japanese woman at least twice before the November date on which she said he raped her.

Wansley also testified that he was introduced to the woman by Sylvester Dickerson, 29, the business manager of a dance band. Dickerson was found stabbed to death in a field north of here on January 3, five weeks before Wansley's trial.

On May 7, Elmon Baldwin was transferred from his job at a bus-station restaurant here to another restaurant in Charlottesville, Virginia. Nine days later he was arrested and charged with murdering Dickerson. Authorities refused to give out any details. Baldwin is 20 and a native of Mississippi.

The Rev. Virgil A. Wood, leader in a movement to save Wansley from death, hailed Baldwin's arrest as a most significant development in unraveling the Wansley case.

On May 29, the charge against Baldwin was dropped in court at Amherst, Va. He had been arraigned there because Dickerson's body was found in neighboring Amherst County.

(more)

Adding to the mystery surrounding Dickerson's death is the way it has been reported in the press here. When Wansley testified about Dickerson introducing him to the Japanese woman, the local newspapers did not mention that Dickerson had been murdered. They merely stated that he was dead.

In reporting Baldwin's arrest, the press did not mention that the victim of the slaying (Dickerson) had any connection with the Wansley case.

The newspapers here have also carried on a campaign to discredit any person working in behalf of Wansley. This has mostly been done by smearing the leadership, including Mr. Wood and Wansley's attorney, Len Holt.

Another leader in the movement to save Wansley is Mrs. Greta Crosby, the white Unitarian minister here. She was one of a delegation who visited Gov. Albertis Harrison in Richmond early in May. The Governor assured the group that he would see that nobody was executed in Virginia as a result of racial prejudice.

Mrs. Crosby also helped to organize a committee called Death to Death to work for an end of capital punishment in Virginia.

Wansley's execution has been indefinitely postponed to give his attorneys a chance to appeal. Holt is working with William M. Kunstler, New York attorney employed by the Gandhi Society for Human Rights.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), Atlanta, and the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), New Orleans, are among other organizations assisting in efforts to save Wansley from the chair.

NEW ORLEANS, La.---The Executive Committee of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF) voted full support of President Kennedy's proposals for ending racial discrimination. A telegram pledging such support was sent to the White House.

At a special meeting here, the leaders of the integrationist organization urged Kennedy to hold fast to his proposals and "to cope creatively with the problem of unemployment and the need for job training."

The Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham leader and president of SCEF, said the group also asked Kennedy to push for legislation empowering the Justice Department to file suit in any violation of constitutional rights.

"We urge you not to be swayed by the noisy voices of the past coming from the Southern Dixiecrats, acting in alliance with conservative Republicans," SCEF told Kennedy.

"Instead throw your weight fully with the thousands of Southerners, many of them silent, who can represent the voice of the future and will respond to leadership from you on a program that is to the benefit of all of us, Negro and white. This is the time for the voice of the President to be heard throughout the land."

While he was here for the Executive Committee meeting, threats were made to bomb Mr. Shuttlesworth's home in Cincinnati, and a police guard was placed around the residence. He pastors a church in Cincinnati but maintains voting residence in Birmingham.

ACTION MEMO

FROM: Jim Dombrowski

TO: Friends Everywhere

RE: Danville, Va.; Cambridge, Md.; National Legislation

SCEF has been requested to ask your aid in freedom struggles now taking place in Danville, Va., and Cambridge, Md. Leaders in those cities believe their cause will be helped by protests from people in other parts of the nation. Here is the situation in each of those places and what you can do to help:

Danville, Va.--Police here have proved to be as brutal as those anywhere in the South. On Monday, June 10, they beat 28 Negro and white demonstrators with specially made clubs which split open people's heads and faces and broke their bones. Young women hit in the face will be disfigured.

A state court issued an injunction against further demonstrations. Those arrested under it include two members of the board of directors of SCEF, the Rev. A.I. Dunlap and Leonard W. Holt. Mr. Dunlap and two other leaders have also been charged with inciting to riot.

Dozens of persons have been arrested for violating a hurriedly enacted ordinance limiting demonstrations. Conviction could result in a 12-month jail sentence.

This law limits the number of demonstrators to six walking ten feet apart, and it bars picketing after business hours. Persons under 18 are forbidden to demonstrate. This is clearly a violation of liberties guaranteed under the First and 14th Amendments to the U.S. Constitution.

The Danville demonstrators seek equal access to all places that serve the public; the employment of Negroes as policemen and firemen, and the right to jobs in industry on an equal basis. The Mayor has even refused to discuss these requests.

Action requested: Letters, wires, calls, or personal contact with President John F. Kennedy at the White House and to Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy at the Justice Department in Washington, D.C.; same to Gov. Albertis Harrison, Executive Mansion, Richmond, Va., and Mayor Julian R. Stinson, Municipal Building, Danville, Va.

* * * * *

Cambridge, Md.--For 18 months the Cambridge Nonviolent Action Committee (CNAC) has carried on action aimed at breaking down segregation in places that cater to the public. Demonstrators also want equal job opportunities and fairhousing in this city, described as one of the most segregated in the South.

Recently the protests have taken the form of marches by 200 to 500 people to the Courthouse. These have included the very young as well as adults. Many have been arrested. Two 15-year-old leaders in the movement, Dwight Cromwell and Miss Dinez White, have been put in juvenile reform schools.

This resulted in increased protests by Negroes and white sympathizers. Last Tuesday night, several Negro girls were chased into the Negro section of the city by about 50 whites. The resulting disturbance caused the governor to send in the state militia.

Action requested: Protests to Governor J. Millard Tawes at the Executive Mansion, Annapolis, Md., and to Mayor Calvin Mowbray at City Hall, Cambridge, Md. Urge them to grant the demonstrators' requests for fair treatment and to guarantee their right to protest without harassment. Especially ask the release of the two young people, Miss White and Mr. Cromwell.

National Legislation

We also urge you to work diligently in the next few weeks for passage of national civil-rights legislation. Because of a new sense of urgency throughout the nation, this is the year to get passage of strong laws.

However, counter pressure is already building up from the Southern Dixiecrats and conservative Republicans. We cannot take passage of new legislation for granted. It is important that every person who wants such laws on the books should contact his U.S. Representative and Senators and get his friends to do so.

The President has proposed legislation forbidding discrimination in all places catering to the public and empowering the Department of Justice to act where constitutional rights are violated. The SCEF Executive Committee has urged the inclusion of legislation providing for equal employment opportunities, job training, and fair housing practices.

FROM: The SCEF Staff

IN RE: Aaron Henry; Danville, Va.,; Greenville, Miss.

The Mississippi Supreme Court has taken the unusual action of reversing one of its own decisions. This was done in the case of Aaron Henry, Mississippi NAACP president, who had been sentenced on a trumped-up morals charge.

The court's action is one of the most blatant instances of the manipulation of the courts by the segregationists in the South.

On June 3 the State Supreme Court held that Henry's conviction was illegal because the police chief in Clarksdale had searched his car illegally. Six weeks later the court reversed itself on the ground that Henry's lawyers had not raised the question of illegal search in the trial court.

Henry and his attorneys must now carry the case to the U.S. Supreme Court in an effort to get justice. Here is the way Henry describes the situation:

"Just how and what is behind the action of the Mississippi Supreme Court is not too difficult to understand. You know it is rumored that the death of Medgar Evers was the result of the toss of a coin--heads, Medgar; tails, Aaron.

"The State of Mississippi is still trying to destroy us both--Medgar physically and Aaron Morally. However, the death of Medgar has served as a great impulse to the freedom movement. I feel that to some extent my persecutions are having a similar effect.

"I think that this action by the State Supreme Court, yielding to the White Citizens Council or whoever the pressure bringers were, should be brought to the attention of the nation."

You are urged to help by writing to the Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Department of Justice and to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, both Washington 25, D.C.. Urge them to join Henry's attorneys in asking the U.S. Supreme Court to reverse the Mississippi Supreme Court's reversal of its own decision. Get your friends and organizations to do likewise.

The struggle in Danville, Va., continues to be deadlocked. City officials refuse to negotiate with leaders of the movement there, despite protests from all over the nation.

Leaders of the movement in Danville believe that city officials will act only when prodded enough by the people who hold the economic power in that city. It happens that Dan River Mills employs 9,700 in that city of 47,000 and is by far the largest employer in that area. Its hiring practices have been under attack by the demonstrators.

The president of the mills, William J. Erwin, is chairman of the Danville mayor's advisory committee on race relations, but this has not resulted in any gains for the people who have been picketing and going to jail for almost three months. Leaders of the movement in Danville ask you to do the following:

1. Refuse to buy clothing and other material made from Dan River Fabrics. There are usually tags on cotton goods showing whether they are made of these fabrics. Often the goods are sold under the names of Wrinkl-Shed; Wrinkl-Shed with Danpel, and Wrinkl-Shed with Dri-Don. Sometimes the tag simply says Dan River Fabrics. Watch for tags and labels with those names and don't buy until our friends in Danville are accorded decent treatment. They are asking for the opening of all places that cater to the public; city jobs for Negroes on an equal basis, and fair hiring practices at industries and stores in the area.

2. Write to William J. Erwin, president of Dan River Mill, Danville, Va., and tell him you are not buying his products. Urge him to usehis influence with city officials.

* * * *

Greenville, Miss., has been the scene of demonstrations for almost a month. Greenville is relatively liberal for a Mississippi city, so nobody has been jailed for demonstrating. However, fifty persons have been arrested for sitting in at lunch counters and similar places. All are free under bond.

Leaders of the movement there want their friends elsewhere to write to Mayor George Archer and the City Council, City Hall; the Chamber of Commerce, Washington Street; the County Board of Supervisors, Washington County Courthouse, and Hodding Carter, editor of the Delta Democrat-Times, all in Greenville, Ask them to use their influence to open public parks and lunch counters to all citizens; hire Negro firemen, and induce the merchants to employ Negroes on an equal basis. These are the chief demands of the movement there.

Greenville leaders also want the Mayor and City Council to start their own drive for voter registration instead of leaving it to groups of citizens. The Greenville Student Movement is leading the demonstrations and the Negro Citizens Committee is negotiating with city officials. They believe they will do a lot better if they have some help from outside. So write today.

JACKSON, Miss.----A rare action by the Mississippi Supreme Court has brought new protests about the kind of justice meted to integration leaders in this state.

The court reversed itself and upheld the sentencing of Aaron Henry, state NAACP president, on a trumped-up morals charge. The judges had previously freed Henry on the ground that his car had been illegally searched by the police chief at Clarksdale, where Henry lives.

In reversing their own decision, the judges said the search was illegal butthat Henry's lawyers failed to raise objection to the search during testimony in the trial court. The attorneys therefore lost their right to object, the high court declared.

The latter point was brought to the attention of the judges by the state attorney general's office. After the judges reversed their reversal, the attorney general's office crowed:

"This is the first time in modern history that a suggestion of error has been sustained in behalf of the state, after a criminal conviction had been earlier reversed."

Henry said: "Just how and what is behind the actions of the Mississippi Supreme Court is not too difficult to understand, You know it is rumored that the death of Medgar Evers was the result of the toss of a coin---heads, Medgar; tails, Aaron.

"The State of Mississippi is still trying to destroy us both---Medgar physically and Aaron morally. However, the death of Medgar has served as a great impulse to the freedom movement. I feel that to some extent my persecutions are having a similar effect.

"I think that this action of the State Supreme Court, yielding to the White Citizens Council or whoever the pressure bringers were, should be brought to the attention of the nation."

The Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), New Orleans, has asked friends and supporters throughout the nation to join the protests against the court's action.

Protests are being sent to the Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Department of Justice and to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, both in Washington.

These agencies are being asked to petition the U.S. Supreme Court to reverse the Mississippi Supreme Court's reversal of its own decision.

Henry's attorneys are preparing his personal petition for review to the U.S. Supreme Court.

BALTIMORE, Md.--The U.S. Court of Appeals has set aside a lower court order that sent Herman Taylor to jail. Concern about the case had been expressed by people across the nation.

Taylor is a North Carolina civil-rights attorney who was charged with income-tax evasion after he filed a suit to speed school integration in Raleigh, where he lives.

He was sentenced to two years in prison but was granted probation on condition that he pay a $20,000 fine in 30 days. When it came time to pay the fine, he did not have the money.

U.S. District Judge Edwin M. Stanley, Greensboro, N.C., immediately revoked the probation and sent Taylor to prison. There was such an outcry that the Court of Appeals ordered Taylor's release and agreed to review Stanley's order.

The appeals judges suggested in their reversal order that Stanley should consider the possibility of letting Taylor pay the fine over the five-year period of his probation. They said that any part still owed after that time could be collected through liens.

Taylor's case was argued by Len Holt, Norfolk, Va., member of the Legal Committee of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, New Orleans, and a member of the National Lawyers Guild's Committee to Aid Southern Lawyers.

Holt's services were made available without cost to Taylor.

WILLIAMSTON, N.C.---Integration leaders here plan to test a city ordinance limiting the number of pickets downtown. They say that such a law is in violation of their right to peaceable assembly under the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

About 200 persons have been demonstrating daily for several weeks in this town of 7,000 in Eastern North Carolina. Among the leaders are two who fought segregation in Edenton, about 35 miles from here, in a struggle that lasted many months.

They are Golden Frinks, field secretary, and the Rev. Fred LaGarde, regional representative, Southern Christian Leadership Conference. The local leader of the movement is Mrs. Sarah Small.

They reported that three drugstores integrated their lunch counters but one later backslid. A biracial committee has been set up by the city but a swimming pool leased by the city has been closed.

"Everybody is now equally deprived of it," LaGarde said. He reported that 51 persons have been arrested for sitting-in but the judge delayed sentencing till August 29.

"They don't want to arrest us," LaGarde added. "We had a sit-down on the sidewalk in front of City Hall and nobody was arrested. We are confident of early victory."

NEW ORLEANS, La.--The Hon. John M. Coe, vice-president of SCEF, for 46 years a member of the bar in Pensacola, Florida, testified before the House Judiciary Committee in support of H.R. 7328, the Administration Civil Rights Bill.

Mr. Coe told the committee the Public Accommodations provisions of the bill were important because they "lay the basis for a change of customs, and public education in racial equality."

In enacting such requirements, said Mr. Coe, "We are taking no revolutionary step, but merely applying the ancient common law doctrine of the duties of innkeepers to other businesses similarly affected with the public interest."

"It is an ironic fact," said Coe, "that one of the leading cases in the United States on the doctrine of the innkeepers duty to receive all orderly comers who could pay his price comes from Alabama."

Mr. Coe advocated that these provisions be extended to "all businesses for public accomodation licensed under the laws of any state, territory, or the District of Columbia."

On the subject of elections, Mr. Coe stated that Rep. Kastenmeier's approach was preferable to that of the Administration because it would enforce the right to vote in State as well as Federal elections.

> "It is of little consequence to Negroes who is senator or Congressman, but of vital importance to them who is sheriff, because oppression springs from local officers who are near at hand, and responsive to a highly prejudiced local constituency."

The Florida lawyer urged that in drafting the administrative provisions of the bill, "the realm of discretion reposed in local officers (including Federal District Judges) be curtailed as drastically as the law permits because they respond to time honored prejudices, even though in their hearts they know them to be outmoded and unjust."

New Orleans Attorney Benjamin E. Smith, treasurer of SCEF, also appeared before the Judiciary Committee in testimony on H.R. 7328.

Sept. 6, 1963

LOUISVILLE, Ky.---Dr. M. M. D. Perdue, 69, one of the South's outstanding civil-rights leaders, died here Sept. 4. He had suffered a stroke Aug. 27 after helping to organize Kentucky's delegation for the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom.

Dr. Perdue was unable to go with the delegation because he was feeling ill. His wife, Mrs. Marie Speed Perdue, went in his place. The delegation was on the way to Washington when Dr. Perdue was stricken.

The noted minister had devoted his life to the struggle for freedom and justice for his people. He was a lifelong member of the NAACP; a member of the board of directors of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, New Orleans, and vice-chairman of Louisville CORE.

Tribute was paid to Dr. Perdue by one of his closest friends, the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, president of SCEF and of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, Birmingham.

Mr. Shuttlesworth had hoped to be in Louisville to speak at Dr. Perdue's funeral but the school crisis in Birmingham kept him in that city. Mr. Shuttlesworth said:

"The South has lost a great statesman and the nation a mighty warrior. Having worked so long and so hard for realization of the American dream, I am sure he died satisfied that his labors were on the way to fulfillment."

Dr. Perdue was a leader in the Interracial Hospital Movement, which played a major role in opening Kentucky hospitals to all citizens. He led a march on Frankfort, the state capitol, in connection with this campaign in 1951.

He was a former chairman of the Militant Church Movement, which worked for many years to open public facilities to all. Dr. Perdue also headed the Committee for Democratic Schools, which sought to integrate schools in Kentucky before the U.S. Supreme Court outlawed school segregation in 1954.

In 1954 and 1955, he was co-chairman of the Wade Defense Committee, along with Bishop C. Ewbank Tucker, another member of the SCEF board. This committee was formed to protect the right of a Negro couple, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew E. Wade IV, to live in a previously all-white neighborhood in Louisville.

In 1960 Dr. Perdue helped to organize a rally which resulted in demonstrations against segregated theaters and restaurants in Louisville. The demonstrations, accompanied by hundreds of arrests, eventually resulted in passage of a public accommodations ordinance in Louisville this year.

Dr. Perdue was pastor of Emmanuel Baptist Church, a fast-growing institution in Louisville's West End. His father, the late Dr. John H. Perdue, served the church as pastor from 1898 to 1938, when Dr. M.M.D. Perdue became pastor.

The minister was also a retired U.S. Army Chaplain. He held a doctorate of divinity from Simmons University here. He was at one time an instructor at the university and was on the school's board of trustees at the time of his death.

Before returning to Louisville in 1938, he was pastor of churches in several Kentucky cities; Grand Rapids, Michigan; Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colorado; Xenia, Ohio, and Indianapolis, Indiana.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.---Federal District Judge Robert L. Taylor has refused to remove the cases against Highlander Center workcampers from the state courts and take them into his court.

The eight defendants had asked Judge Taylor to do this because they claim their rights under the U.S. Constitution have been violated. They say they cannot get a fair trial in the state courts in Blount County, where the integrated group was arrested.

They also say that they believe they will be in physical danger if required to go back to Blount County for trial. The cases are now set for trial in the second week in December.

The defendants are some of the young people, white and Negro, from the North and South, who were assembled by Highlander Center this summer to begin work on a new conference center in the Smoky Mountains.

Highlander Center, now located here in Knoxville, is carrying on in the tradition of Highlander Folk School, which was for many years an adult education center at Monteagle, Tenn., training leaders in the integration movement. The state of Tennessee succeeded in closing the folk school in 1961, and later its main building was burned.

But Highlander supporters envisioned a new Highlander "rising like a phoenix from the ashes." In its early days this summer, the Smoky Mountain workcampers made good progress--clearing land, raising tents, and beginning work on an amphitheater. Then all twenty-seven campers were arrested by the Blount County sheriff's force in a 3 a.m. raid. Charges were placed against eight of them.

The charges included disorderly conduct, "lewdness" against one girl, possession of whiskey against two persons, and contributing to the delinquency of minors against the adult directors.

All of the campers deny the charges and maintain that the real purpose of the raid was an attempt to destroy the new Highlander.

Blount County is a Ku Klux Klan stronghold, and the Klan meets openly on the courthouse lawn in Maryville, the county seat. This is one reason the defendants cited in asking that the cases be moved to Federal court in Knoxville.

The director of Highlander, Myles Horton, and his attorney, Edward D. Lynch, declare that they were beaten by a white man in a Maryville restaurant soon after the raid. The beginnings of the camp site were burned at night by unknown persons about the same time.

Such incidents indicate the tension in Maryville, Horton said. It is reported that the Ku Klux Klan membership in the area has increased by 400 per cent since the Highlander raid.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.---Federal indictment of integration leaders in Albany, Ga., is apparently "a bone" thrown to the segregationists by the Kennedy Administration, a noted civil rights attorney said here.

William M. Kunstler, of New York, who is one of the lawyers in the Albany Case, said this was his "suspicion."

Addressing a meeting sponsored by the Kentucky Civil Liberties Union, he added: "I'm afraid they are looking to the 1964 elections. When the Kennedys are attacked by the segregationists, they can say, 'Look, we arrested these people in Albany too; we are not one-sided.'"

The Albany indictments were brought by a U.S. grand jury in August. It was the first time that the Federal Government has filed felony charges against persons active in the civil-rights movement.

Three leaders of the Albany Movement are charged with "conspiring to injure or influence a Federal juror": six others are charged with committing perjury before the grand jury investigating the case. Both charges carry long sentences upon conviction.

The charges were made after the Albany Movement organized a boycott of a grocery operated by a white man, Carl Smith, in a all-Negro neighborhood. Smith had been a juror in a damage suit brought by a Negro against a sheriff who he claimed beat him while he was under arrest. Smith voted with a majority of the jury that ruled against the Negro and in favor of the sheriff. He claimed that this vote was why his tore was boycotted; he closed the store as a result of the boycott.

Leaders in the Movement say the real reason the store was boycotted was Smith's refusal to hire Negro clerks and his treatment of Negro customers. They point out that other stores were boycotted at the same time.

Kunstler said: "In all the long months of the Albany Movement--when the constitutional rights of the Negroes were being violated--not a single Federal indictment was made. Now when the Federal government finally indicts someone, it is the movement leaders."

It is a "sinister and dangerous trend" that will have an effect in communities far beyond Albany, he said.

He added that he could not believe the indictments were just the doing of local jurors and prosecutor either. He pointed out that announcement of the charges was made by the Justice Department in Washington, an unusual procedure.

He also declared that the indictments were "carefully timed," coming just after Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., had told the press he might be going back to Albany.

The defendants were carefully chosen too, he said, noting that they included the past president of the Albany Movement, the current president and secretary, a minister who has been one of the most militant leaders, a 19-year-old representative of young student participation, and a white student from the North.

"This is one person from several different groups that took part in the movement," he noted. "It's made a big difference in Albany. People are frightened and they look defeated. Nobody knows who may be indicted next."

He added that he thought indictment of the Northern students would make many Northern parents refuse to let their sons and daughters go south to work in the integration movement. In fact some have already written their children to come home.

"It's one thing to face state charges, usually misdemeanors with small sentences," he said. "It's very different when it's a federal charge and a felony."

Sept. 25, 1963

NEW ORLEANS, LA.--Two noted civil-rights workers have been added to the staff of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), an integrationist group with its main offices here.

One is Miss Ella J. Baker, Atlanta, former director of branches for NAACP and formerly executive director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC). She will be based in Atlanta.

The other is John R. Salter, Jr., Jackson, Miss., who had a leading role in picketing and demonstrations in that city last winter and spring. He was beaten and arrested several times.

Salter will maintain an office in Raleigh, N.C., where he and his wife and infant daughter now live. He and Carl Braden, who has been with SCEF six years, will be field organizers.

Miss Baker will be special consultant to SCEF, working on various specific projects from time to time. Mrs. Anne Braden will be editor of the Southern Patriot, an integration journal published by SCEF. Editorial offices will continue to be in Louisville, where the Bradens are based.

The Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, SCEF president, said that Miss Baker and Salter will make a tour of Western and Midwestern states this fall to arouse support for civil-rights legislation pending in Congress.

Miss Baker is a native of Norfolk, Va., who was reared in Virginia and North Carolina. She was with NAACP for many years, and returned to the South as executive director for SCLC. She has worked closely with the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) and will continue to do so.

Salter is a graduate of Arizona State University. He taught sociology at Wisconsin State College and was professor of social studies at Tougaloo Southern Christian College, Tougaloo, Miss., until recently.

He was formerly with the International Chemical Workers Union. His wife, Mrs. Eldri Salter, has also been active in the integration movement. Their daughter, Maria, narrowly missed being killed when Mississippi hoodlums fired a bullet through the window of her bedroom last winter.

NEW ORLEANS, La.--State and city police raided offices of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF) and arrested two of its top officers on Oct. 4. All records of the organization were seized.

Civil-rights leaders across the nation immediately protested this action against SCEF, which is a Southwide group working to end segregation and discrimination. The protests were led by the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, SCEF president and leader of the movement in Birmingham, Ala., and by the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), Atlanta, Ga.

Those arrested were Dr. James A. Dombrowski, SCEF executive director; Benjamin E. Smith, treasurer of the group, and Bruce Waltzer, Smith's law partner. They were later paroled by State Judge J. Bernard Cox pending filing of formal charges.

Homes of all three men were ransacked and boxes full of personal papers and books were seized. Smith and Waltzer's law offices were also stripped of files having anything to do with SCEF business.

Dombrowski, Smith, and Waltzer were charged with "operating a Communist conspiracy" in violation of a state sedition law. A spokesman for the Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities said the raids and arrests followed a year-long investigation of SCEF by the committee.

The Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth said: "We recognize this as part of a three-state conspiracy in Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, our three most backward states, to frustrate the drive for freedom by civil-rights organizations. We expect more of these attacks on all civil-rights groups and all persons working for full freedom.

"Evidence of the three-state conspiracy includes the testimony of Governor Wallace of Alabama and Governor Barnett of Mississippi before Congress this summer, in which they sought to label all civil-rights organizations as subversive and vilified their leaders.

"More recent evidence is the fact that an Alabama legislative committee on subversion has invited Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and myself to appear before it.

"The tendency has been and still is to label anybody communistic and subversive who seeks in a righteous way to uphold the principles embodied in the Constitution of the United States. It should be made clear that, to a segregationist, integration means nothing else but communism or subversion.

"Certain persons operating under the guise of super-Americanism will stop at nothing and will do anything to bolster the crumbling walls of segregation. But civil-rights forces are not about to be stopped in their march toward freedom. The segregationists are riding the last coach on the last train on the last track to nowhere and are getting there slowly."

In Atlanta, the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee wired President Kennedy, Attorney General Robert Kennedy, and the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, Washington. SNCC declared that the action against SCEF "can only be termed an act of despotism."

"State sedition laws under which these person were arrested were outlawed by the U.S. Supreme Court seven years ago," SNCC noted. "This is another demonstration of the lawlessness and defiance of authority by the segregationists."

ATLANTA, Ga.---Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. denounced the police raid on headquarters of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, New Orleans, and asked U.S. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy to intervene.

He sent a telegram urging Kennedy "most urgently to take action to stop this additional harassment and intimidation of civil-rights organizations and their supporters."

In a statement to the news media concerning the raid and the arrest of SCEF officers, Dr. King described SCEF as "a courageous civil-rights organization." Dr. King, who is president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), said in part:

"...This appears to be another phase in a continuing effort by hard-core racists to place responsibility for integration in the South on Communist influence...Such smear tactics against efforts to bring about true brotherhood of man in the South have shown signs of increasing intensity during recent months.

"This breach of federal law, which was clearly established by the U.S. Supreme Court in April, 1956, calls for immediate action by federal authorities. Such tactics of harassment will not deter the march for freedom in the South and the nation, but will serve to point up most vividly the acute need for federal laws to protect all freedom-loving citizens."

Dr. King's reference to the Supreme Court decision of 1956 concerned the ruling by which the court declared state laws against sedition and subversion to be null and void.

The high court held that such matters were the responsibility of the Federal Government, and that laws of this kind could be misused by the states. Persons charged with sedition in Kentucky and Massachusetts were freed as a result of this decision, which arose out of a case in Pennsylvania.

BLUEFIELD, W. Va.---An immediate end to racial segregation and discrimination in the Bluefield area was demanded at a meeting of 250 Bluefield State College students and other citizens.

They advocated and endorsed nonviolent direct action (N.V.D.A.) of a continuous and intensive nature---including picketing, sit-ins, and mass marches. A strategy meeting was set to plan for action.

John R. Salter Jr., a field organizer for the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), was one of the main speakers at the rally. He told how action was organized at Jackson, Miss., where Salter was beaten and arrested several times for his part in demonstrations.

Salter declared that the racial situation in Bluefield was a "serious and sorry blight" on the community and on the state. "Several civil-rights organizations are becoming quite interested in Bluefield," he said.

"If you are arrested," Salter told the students, "fill up the jails. If there is brutality, intensify the demonstrations and continue to fill up the jails. Whatever happens, continue the movement until full equality is won."

One student leader said: "On the basis of what demonstrations have secured in other sections of the country, we feel that they can be most successful in Bluefield."

Salter declared that the students are the "real heroes" and the spearhead of the civil rights movement in the South.

Oct. 16, 1963

NEW ORLEANS, La.---Church, labor, and professional groups here have joined in denouncing police raids on offices of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF) and its officers.

The White Citizens Council applauded the raids, which were followed by the arrest of two top officers of SCEF, an interracial group working for integration and civil rights.

The raids and arrests were protested in a statement by the Louisiana State University at New Orleans chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

The chapter said it "denounces laws authorizing sudden arrests and confiscation of property and records apparently for political reasons and in disregard of the Bill of Rights..."

It added: "This chapter stands firmly committed to the American principles and rights guaranteed by our constitution and in favor of an atmosphere free from intimidation, without which the freedom of inquiry essential for education is not possible."

On the other hand, the White Citizens Council declared that "a blow for freedom" had been struck by the raids and the arrest of Dr. James A. Dombrowski, SCEF executive director; Benjamin E. Smith, treasurer of the fund, and Bruce Waltzer, Smith's law partner. They are charged with "participating in the management of a subversive organization."

The W.C.C. had special praise for the Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities, which instigated the raids. The segregationist group said the committee should be proud of attacks on it by the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, SCEF president; Carl Braden, SCEF field organizer and information director, and the Louisiana branch of the American Civil Liberties Union. Smith is counsel for the branch.

The Rabbinical Council of New Orleans declared: "We denounce the subversive practices of sudden arrests and immediate confiscation of property and records..."

The rabbis also endorsed the statement of the ACLU Louisiana branch, which called the raids "a dangerous act of political repression committed by our state government." It said the law under which charges were filed "is an unconstitutional device designed to inhibit the flow of free ideas and free speech."

Other groups denouncing the committee action were the board of First Unitarian Church; the Ideal Baptist Missionary Association; the Louis A. Martinet Legal Society; the Interdenominational Ministers Alliance, and Local 857, Intl. Longshoremen & Warehousemen's Union.

The local protests followed those by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Atlanta, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC); the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), Atlanta, and other civil-rights groups and leaders throughout the nation.

Protests from all over the country are going to U.S. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy and the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, Washington, D.C.; Gov. Jimmie Davis, Baton Rouge, La., and Mayor Victor Schiro, New Orleans.

Officials here had not expected such reaction to the raids and were losing some of their early enthusiasm for the action by the state committee.

The committee said it will hold hearings "before long" to evaluate material seized in the raids. A van was used to haul away all the records kept in the main office of SCEF here. Records and papers were also seized at Smith and Waltzer's law offices and at homes of the arrested men.

Dear Friends:

You have no doubt heard that our main office in New Orleans was raided by city and state police on Oct. 4. Our executive director, Dr. James A. Dombrowski; our treasurer, Mr. Benjamin E. Smith, and Smith's law partner, Mr. Bruce C. Waltzer, were arrested and held in jail several hours.

The charge against them is "participating in the management of a subversive organization." The only "subversive" thing they have done is to work for integration and civil rights all over the South.

A request for intervention by the Attorney General of the U. S. has been made by Dr. Martin L. King Jr., the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee, the American Civil Liberties Union, and many other concerned groups and individuals.

The sedition statute under which our officers were arrested was outlawed by the U.S. Supreme Court in a Pennsylvania case in 1956. This resulted in dropping of similar charges against individuals in Kentucky, Massachusetts, and Louisiana.

The enclosed fact sheet will show that the raid and the arrests are a threat to every organization working for integration and civil rights. We therefore ask you to join in a petition to the Attorney General of the U.S. We are assembling these petitions in our main office in New Orleans; we'd appreciate your signing the enclosed and returning it to New Orleans in the enclosed envelope as quickly as possible. Thank you very much.

A Petition To The Attorney General of The United States

To the Attorney General of the United States:

The undersigned organizations, through their officers, urgently request you to intervene in the case of the Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities versus Southern Conference Educational Fund of New Orleans and its officers.

This committee has caused raids to be made and has brought about the arrest of two officers of this organization because they have been working for civil rights and civil liberties. This committee, like the House Un-American Activities Committee in Washington, seeks to equate integration of the races with "subversion."

The American people are tired of hearing the cry of "Red" every time they seek their just rights under the U.S. Constitution. We earnestly urge you to join in stopping this effort of the Louisiana committee to destroy and disrupt an organization working for integration and civil rights.

FACT SHEET ON THE RAID AND ARRESTS

Conducted by State and City Police at SCEF New Orleans Headquarters at the Behest of the Louisiana Committee on Un-American Activities October 4, 1963

THE CHARGES: Violation of Louisiana Revised Statute Title 14, Section 388 et seq. "The Subversive Activities and Communist Control Law" and Section 390 et seq. "The Communist Propaganda Control Act" by "organizing between themselves and with other unknown people and their doing certain acts to carry out said agreement, to violate the aforesaid statutes by knowingly and willfully participating in the management of a subversive organization, and secreting books, records and files of a subversive organization, said subversive organization herein referred to being specifically the Southern Conference Educational Fund Inc., and also distributing and storing Communist political propaganda in the State of Louisiana."

THOSE ARRESTED: Dr. James A. Dombrowski, executive director of the SCEF. Benjamin E. Smith, SCEF treasurer, labor and civil rights attorney and counsel for the ACLU in Louisiana, and former assistant district attorney in New Orleans. Bruce C. Waltzer, Smith's law partner, who has no connection with the SCEF.

THE RAID: Conducted by about 100 policemen and jail trusties in five simultaneous strikes at the offices and the homes of the three arrested men. Streets outside were cordoned off during the three-hour ransacking, in which personal and official property was indiscriminately seized.

The Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities proclaimed it had inspired this action.

The committee's legal counsel told the press the raid hadn't been "coordinated" with the FBI because, while the committee had complete confidence in J. Edgar Hoover, "we have no confidence whatsoever" in U. S. Attorney-General Robert F. Kennedy.

"We knew that if we told the FBI about this raid they would have to tell Bobby Kennedy. We cannot trust him and we expect him to tell his friend, Martin Luther King."

Although the committee boasted that the raid had been planned for eleven months, the raiders first came to the wrong office in the building and broke down the door of an empty room with sledgehammers.

At the Dombrowski home, policemen repeatedly threatened to shoot the family dachshund, although the dog was on a leash.

THE REACTION: The Rabbinical Council of New Orleans declared, "We denounce the subversive practices of sudden arrests and immediate confiscation of property and records in imitation of Communistic tactics."

The rabbis also endorsed the statement of the Louisiana branch of the ACLU, which called the raid "a dangerous act of political repression committed by our state government" and said the law under which the charges were filed "is an unconstitutional device designed to inhibit the flow of free ideas and free speech."

At the time of this writing, other groups in New Orleans—religious, labor and legal—were reported preparing similar denunciations.

In Atlanta, the Reverend Martin Luther King said, "Such smear tactics against efforts to bring about true brotherhood of man in the South have shown signs of increasing in intensity during recent months. This Friday action followed shortly after a massive demonstration last Tuesday in New Orleans by some 10,000 Negroes and approximately 300 whites seeking freedom, and followed . . . . charges brought by Ross Barnett and George Wallace before a congressional committee in recent weeks that the search for freedom in this country was communist-inspired."

The Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee wired Attorney-General Kennedy, asserting that "state sedition laws under which these persons were arrested, were outlawed by the U. S. Supreme Court seven years ago."

"This is another demonstration of the lawlessness and defiance of authority by segregationists," their telegram concluded.

WHAT CAN BE DONE: We ask you to—

- Wire or write the U. S. Attorney General and the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights in Washington, D. C., asking them to intervene in this unconstitutional outrage. Protests to Louisiana Governor Jimmie Davis and New Orleans Mayor Victor Schiro would also be helpful.
- Spread the word of the case to others—to organizations, to individuals. A letter to the editor of your local paper can do much to foster nationwide interest.
- Advise us of what action you have taken.
- PLEASE, if possible, send a special contribution to help us with the expenses of virtually rebuilding an office and with the even greater prospective costs of the legal battles that lie ahead.

NEW ORLEANS, La. -- Judge Bernard J. Cocke of the Louisiana Criminal District Court Division, at a preliminary hearing today, discharged and dismissed the case against James A. Dombrowski, executive director of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc. (S.C.E.F.), Benjamin E. Smith, treasurer of S.C.E.F., and New Orleans attorney, and Bruce C. Waltzer, Smith's law partner.

Judge Cocke ruled that there was no factual basis for the State's charge that the men had conspired to violate the State's Subversive Activities and Control Law or its Communist Propaganda Control Act by managing S.C.E.F.

S.C.E.F. is an organization dedicated to furthering integration. Smith and Waltzer are active civil rights lawyers.

The Reverend Fred L. Shuttlesworth, president of S.C.E.F. and leader of the Birmingham integration movement, said: "The dismissal of the charges against Smith, Waltzer and Dombrowski, is a signal victory for the forces of civil rights and civil liberties in their efforts to bring about justice, freedom and fair play."

The three men had been arrested on October 4th by the Louisiana State Police and New Orleans police at the behest of the Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities; and their offices and homes were searched. Records and personal possessions were confiscated.

Arrest and search warrants had been signed by Major Russell Willie of the Louisiana State Police. Defense attornies brought out in court today that Major Willie had acted upon alleged information from a "confidential informer" whose identity Willie refused to divulge.

In a strongly worded statement, Judge Cocke ruled that the State had failed to produce a single fact to justify its actions. The three men were cleared of all charges in less than 90 minutes.

Testimony at the hearing by James A. Pfister, chairman of the Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee, revealed that the records and personal effects seized on October 4th were subpoenaed on October 5th by Senator James O. Eastland's U.S. Senate Internal Security Subcommittee.

"The fact that a State District judge dismissed the charges," said Reverend Shuttlesworth, "solidifies our hopes that justice has the same meaning in the deep South as it has in the rest of the nation. This is a definite setback to the three-state plot to destroy the integration movement master-minded by Senator James O. Eastland, Governor Barnett and Governor Wallace."

BLUEFIELD, W. Va.---A full-scale campaign to completely end racial discrimination lies directly ahead for this rigidly segregated mountain city on the Virginia border.

Speaking at an enthusiastic community mass meeting, the Rev. C. Anderson Davis, president of the West Virginia NAACP, said: "We're going to march up and down the streets, picket block traffic, and sit in."

John R. Salter, Raleigh, N. C., field organizer for the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), told the meeting---which included high-school and college students, clergymen, and other older persons ---that "the freedom movement in Bluefield will continue on a day-after-day and week-after-week basis until full equality is secured."

"Never be afraid of going to jail," said Salter who has been jailed and beaten several times for his civil-rights work in Mississippi. "It's an honor to go to jail for freedom."

Salter and Davis vigorously attacked the economic and political power structure of Bluefield, and strongly condemned its use of "paltry tokenism." Both declared that equality in employment and promotion on the job as well as equal access to public accomodations, are the key issues here.

Students from Bluefield State College have been picketing some stores. Several were recently attacked and roughed up by store managers. A number of white students are involving themselves in the civil-rights campaign.

Militant student leader John S. Nettles, who is president of the Bluefield State NAACP said: "The students are ready and willing to go---even to jail to stay---for they feel that it is their duty to secure full rights for everyone. We are going to move ahead and we are not going to stop until we win."

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.---The Board of the Southern Conference Educational Fund accused Senator James O. Eastland of Mississippi of stealing SCEF's records after they were seized in raids in New Orleans.

At their semi-annual meeting here, the directors called upon the U. S. Senate to censure Eastland for his action, "just as Senator Joseph McCarthy was censured."

The Rev.Fred L. Shuttlesworth, SCEF President, asked friends throughout the nation to get their senators to support such censure. He said the board also voted "to condemn Eastland in the strongest possible terms for stealing our records."

The Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, headed by Eastland, caused the records to be moved into Mississippi after officers of SCEF sued for their return. A Federal Judge in New Orleans then held that the records were out of his jurisdiction.

The raids in which the records were seized had resulted in the arrest of Dr. James A. Dombrowski, SCEF executive director, Benjamin E. Smith, SCEF treasurer, and Bruce Waltzer, Smith's law partner.

Three weeks later a state judge dismissed charges of subversion brought against the three men at the instigation of the Louisiana Un-American Activities Committee. It was then that SCEF sued for return of the records.

Dombrowski also filed suit for damages in Federal Court in Washington. He asked the court there to enjoin Eastland and his staff from using the records of the organization in any way. A hearing on this is tentatively scheduled for Nov. 15.

The SCEF board also voted to "condemn Louisiana Officials who carried out the lawless raid on our headquarters, as well as the authorities in Mississippi and Alabama who are working with them to destroy the intergration movement by labeling it subversive."

The Directors said in a resolution: "The segregationists are desperate because their laws are being declared unconstitutional and brutality has not stopped the movement.

"Now they are breaking into offices with sledge hammers, carrying out searches and seizures without due process, and arresting citizens without evidence. These are the methods of a totalitarian state and betoken the breakdown of all law."

The board also voted to "deplore attempts to compromise and weaken the civil-rights bill now pending in the Congress. Especially do we deplore the removal of the section which would empower the Attorney General to initiate action in cases of violation of Constitutional Rights."

The SCEF directors also:

1. Criticized the arrest of students and ministers in Jackson, Miss., "for trying to worship at churches of their choice"; also the jailing of the Rev. Ashton Jones in a similar situation in Atlanta. Mr. Jones has been in jail since June because he is unable to provide $20,000 bond.

2. Urged the Federal Government to drop the prosecution of six leaders of the intergration movement in Albany, Ga. These six are scheduled to go on trial Nov. 12 on criminal charges in Macon, Ga.

The board said: "We are outraged that the Government should take such action against these people while it fails to act against police lawlessness and brutality against intergrationists in Albany and across the South.

3. Questioned the diligence of local, state, and national authorities investigating the bombing of 16th Street Baptist Church in Birmingham on Sept. 15, in which four little girls were killed. The board noted that two months have passed and nobody has been brought to justice.

Mr. Shuttlesworth told the board that Negroes in Birmingham "are becoming fed up with the lack of racial progress here. They see no difference between the new City Government and the old one of Bull Connor."

The board meeting was held at offices of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, which Mr. Shuttlesworth also heads.

ACMHR has spearheaded the movement for equal rights in Birmingham for several years. SCEF is a Southwide organization of whites and Negroes seeking to end segregation and discrimination. Directors from several states were present at the Nov. 9 meeting.

NEW ORLEANS, La.---A federal judge issued a restraining order prohibiting any prosecutive action by Louisiana officials against individuals arrested in connection with the October 4th raids against the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

Judge John Minor Wisdom of the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, who signed the orders, is one of three judges named to hear a suit attacking the constitutionality of the state's Subversive Activities and Communist Control Act.

Last week, the Orleans Parish grand jury was ordered to conduct an investigation of SCEF by Criminal District Judge Malcom V. O'Hara. The grand jury subpenaed SCEF records confiscated during the October 4th raids.

The restraining order requested by the Fund's executive director, James A. Dombrowski, is directed to State Representative James A. Pfister, chairman of the Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities; Major Russell Willie of the state police; Attorney General Jack P. F. Gremillion; Thomas D. Burbank, head of the state police; Govenor Jimmie H. Davis and New Orleans District Attorney, Jim Garrison. The officials are restrained "from in any way taking any prosecutive action against the plaintiffs" under provisions of the Louisiana law "or from presenting evidence to the Orleans Parish Grand Jury for the purpose of showing a violation" of the statute under attack.

Benjamin E. Smith, treasurer of SCEF, and his law partner Bruce Waltzer, both arrested along with Dombrowski on October 4th, asked and were granted the right to intervene in the suit, and thus are protected by the temporary order.

Judge Wisdom granted the order pending a hearing by the entire three-judge court, now set for Monday, November 25th, in New Orleans.

Dear Friend of the SCEF:

First I want to thank you for the heartwarming flood of letters since the raids on the New Orleans office of SCEF on October 4th. More than a thousand messages were received.

While we have not been able to answer your letters, I have read them all, and they have been a source of deep inspiration and encouragement to the entire staff.

The enclosed fact sheet will bring you up-to-date on recent events. As you will see from the last entry under "November 18th", together we just won an important victory.

I can assure you that we are managing to continue operations, even to mount a counter-offensive, despite the raids by state and city police which virtually stripped our New Orleans office.

The raiders carted off 73 boxes of material, including all of our letterhead stationery, check books, tax records, all our stock of publications, and not only all of our records and correspondence but the filing cabinets housing them.

Our entire mailing list of contributors and supporters was seized, and we would be unable to reach "the outside world", had not our printer in Nashville had a duplicate list. Volunteer typists from the community are presently building up a new file from the printer's list.

We no longer have a record of past contributions, or of the dates when pledges come due.

On the positive side, I can report that the SCEF is finding good moral support among religious and liberal groups in New Orleans.

We have available to us outstanding local legal counsel.

I have every confidence that, given your continued support, we shall be successful. However, we are now facing much effort and expense. I urge you to send a special contribution toward this cause, if you have not already done so.

Sincerely,

James A. Dombrowski

Executive Director

P. S. To help us rebuild your records, please be sure to fill in and return the enclosed blank. If the address we have used is not correct, please give us your old and new address.

FACT SHEET ON THE RAID AND ARRESTS

Conducted by State and City Police at SCEF New Orleans Headquarters at the Behest of the Louisiana Joint Committee on Un-American Activities October 4, 1963

THE CHARGES: Violation of Louisiana Revised Statute Title 14, Section 388 et seq. "The Subversive Activities and Communist Control Law" and Section 390 et seq. "The Communist Propaganda Control Act" by "organizing between themselves and with other unknown people and their doing certain acts to carry out said agreement, to violate the aforesaid statutes by knowingly and willfully participating in the management of a subversive organization, and secreting books, records and files of a subversive organization, said subversive organization herein referred to being specifically the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc. and also distributing and storing Communist political propaganda in the State of Louisiana."

THOSE ARRESTED: Dr. James A. Dombrowski, executive director of the SCEF. Benjamin E. Smith, SCEF treasurer, labor and civil rights attorney and counsel for the ACLU in Louisiana, and former assistant district attorney in New Orleans. Bruce C. Waltzer, Smith's law partner, who has no connection with the SCEF. The prisoners were released on parole.

THE RAID: Conducted by about 100 policemen and jail trusties in five simultaneous strikes at the offices and the homes of the three arrested men. Streets outside were cordoned off during the three-hour ransacking, in which personal and official property was indiscriminately seized.

The Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities proclaimed it had inspired this action.

The committee's legal counsel told the press the raid hadn't been "coordinated" with the FBI because, while the committee had complete confidence in J. Edgar Hoover, "we have no confidence whatsoever" in U. S. Attorney-General Robert F. Kennedy.

"We knew that if we told the FBI about this raid they would have to tell Bobby Kennedy. We cannot trust him and we expect him to tell his friend, Martin Luther King".

Although the committee boasted that the raid had been planned for eleven months, the raiders first came to the wrong office in the building and broke down the door of an empty room with sledgehammers.

Police entered the law offices of Smith & Waltzer with drawn revolvers. At the Dombrowski home, policemen repeatedly threatened to shoot the family dachshund, although the dog was on a leash. At the home of Bruce Waltzer, police confiscated the mailing list of the Committee for Peaceful Alternatives.

THE REACTION: The Rabbinical Council of New Orleans declared, "We denounce the subversive practices of sudden arrests and immediate confiscation of property and records in imitation of Communistic tactics."

The Louisiana branch of the ACLU called the raid "a dangerous act of political repression committed by our state government" and said the law under which the charges were filed "is an unconstitutional device designed to inhibit the flow of free ideas and free speech."

The Board of Trustees of the First Unitarian Church protested the action of the Louisiana Committee, and endorsed the statement of the LCLU.

The Louisiana State University in New Orleans Chapter of the American Association of University Professors protested the searches, seizures and arrests by the Louisiana Committee. The professors' statement declared, "The technique of terror as an instrument of policy is inappropriate in a democratic society".

At the time of this writing, other groups in New Orleans—religious, labor and legal—were reported preparing similar denunciations.

In Atlanta, the Reverend Martin Luther King said, "Such smear tactics against efforts to bring about true brotherhood of man in the South have shown signs of increasing in intensity during recent months. This Friday action followed shortly after a massive demonstration last Tuesday in New Orleans by some 10,000 Negroes and approximately 300 whites seeking freedom, and followed . . . charges brought by Ross Barnett and George Wallace before a congressional committee in recent weeks that the search for freedom in this country was communist-inspired."

The Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee wired Attorney-General Kennedy, asserting that "state sedition laws under which these persons were arrested, were outlawed by the U. S. Supreme Court seven years ago . . . This is another demonstration of the lawlessness and defiance of authority by segregationists".

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SINCE OCTOBER 4TH?

OCTOBER 5th: The SCEF documents, then in the custody of State Police in Baton Rouge, were subpoenaed by the Subcommittee on Internal Security of the U. S. Senate Judiciary Committee, at the direction of committee chairman Senator James O. Eastland of Mississippi.

OCTOBER 25th: At a preliminary hearing in Louisiana Criminal District Court, Judge Bernard J. Cocke discharged and dismissed the conspiracy charges against Dombrowski, Smith and Waltzer because of total lack of evidence on the part of the State.

OCTOBER 26th: Dombrowski, Smith and Waltzer requested a temporary restraining order and permanent injunction to prevent removal of the stolen records from Baton Rouge.

OCTOBER 28th: At the hearing granted, after several postponements, at noon of the 28th, Federal Judge Robert A. Ainsworth declared the question of an injunction moot since testimony revealed that the SCEF documents had been transferred from Baton Rouge to Woodville, Miss., early that morning, at the direction of Senator Eastland. Between October 28th and 31st, at least part of the documents were sent on to Washington, D. C.

OCTOBER 31st: Dombrowski and Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc. were plaintiffs in a suit filed in U. S. District Court of the District of Columbia, requesting a preliminary injunction restraining Senator Eastland from using the SCEF documents in any way, also asking for half a million dollars in damages for false arrest and illegal seizures of records and property. A similar suit was filed in New Orleans on October 28th restraining state officials, and asking for $750,000 damages.

NOVEMBER 1st: Notice of appeal to the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals was filed on behalf of James A. Dombrowski, Benjamin E. Smith and Bruce Waltzer, appealing the denial by Federal District Judge Robert A. Ainsworth, Jr. of a temporary restraining order to prevent State Police from delivering Southern Conference Educational Fund records to Senator Eastland.

NOVEMBER 8th: The Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities held a three-hour hearing on SCEF in Baton Rouge, open to the press but closed to the public "to keep out agitators". No SCEF witnesses were called. Photostatic copies of SCEF documents were used as "evidence" in an attempt to label the organization a communist front.

NOVEMBER 12th: Dr. Dombrowski and the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc. filed a suit in Federal District Court attacking the constitutionality of the state Subversive Activities and Communist Control Law, and requesting that a three-judge Federal District Court issue a Declaratory Judgement that the law violates the U. S. Constitution. The plaintiffs also requested an interlocutory injunction restraining State authorities from utilizing photostatic copies of the seized SCEF documents. Judge Ainsworth granted a November 20th hearing on the injunction.

NOVEMBER 13th: The Joint Legislative Committee transferred 26 (out of a total of 73) cartons of SCEF materials from Baton Rouge to the New Orleans District Attorney's office, stating that this portion of the confiscated property was useless to the Committee in its continuing investigation of subversive infiltration of SCEF. "The important correspondence files, financial and other records of the SCEF are all still in Washington under the subpoena of the U. S. Senate," said Pfister.

NOVEMBER 14th: Criminal District Judge Malcolm V. O'Hara charged the grand jury now in session with responsibility for investigating possible violations of the State Communist control law. O'Hara issued a subpoena to State Representative James H. Pfister, chairman of the Joint Legislative Committee, requesting that copies of SCEF documents in the Committee's possession be submitted to the grand jury. The grand jury is scheduled to meet Wednesday, November 20th.

NOVEMBER 15th: Chief Judge Elbert P. Tuttle of the U. S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals appointed a three-judge federal panel to hear the SCEF suit attacking the constitutionality of Louisiana's Subversive Activities and Communist Control Law. Named were Judge John Minor Wisdom of the Appeals Court; Federal District Judges Frank B. Ellis; and E. Gordon West.

NOVEMBER 18th: Judge John Minor Wisdom of the U. S. Fifth Circuit of Appeals, issued an order restraining state and city officials from "taking any prosecutive action" against the persons arrested in the SCEF raids.

The temporary restraining order is pending a ruling by the entire three-judge court, on the constitutionality of the Louisiana subversive statutes, now set for Monday, November 25th in New Orleans.

The order specifically directs that officials are restrained "from presenting evidence to the Orleans Parish Grand Jury for the purpose of showing a violation" of the statute under attack.

WHAT CAN BE DONE: We ask you to—

- Write your Senators protesting the action of Senator James O. Eastland.
- Ask that the U. S. Senate censure Eastland for his action, just as Senator Joseph McCarthy was censured.
- Letters to the following members of the Senate Judiciary Committee (Senator Eastland, Chairman) would be especially helpful:

Michigan:	Sen. Philip A. Hart
Massachusetts:	Sen. Edward M. Kennedy
New York:	Sen. Kenneth Keating
Pennsylvania:	Sen. Hugh Scott

NEW ORLEANS, LA. ---A case challenging the constitutionality of Louisiana's communist control laws was taken under advisement by a three-judge federal court on December 9th.

The Southern Conference Educational Fund and its executive director, James A. Dombrowski, original plaintiffs in the case, were joined by attorneys Benjamin E. Smith and Bruce C. Waltzer whose request for intervention was granted by the court.

Smith, who is the Fund's treasurer, and his law partner, Waltzer, were arrested along with Dombrowski on October 4th for allegedly violating the state anti-communist statutes -- as managers of a "subversive" organization and for distributing "communist" literature, -- and all SCEF records were seized. Conspiracy charges against the three men were dismissed by a Criminal District Court, but the records were not returned to SCEF.

The plaintiffs are now asking for a temporary injunction against state and city officials preventing them from enforcing the statutes, and prohibiting the Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities (LUAC) from turning over the seized SCEF records to the Orleans Parish Grand Jury.

At the hearing before Judge John Minor Wisdom of the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals and Federal Judges Frank B. Ellis and E. Gordon West, attorneys for the plaintiffs argued that the state anti-communist laws are superseded by federal legislation and are in violation of the 14th Amendment of the U. S. constitution. Milton Brener, New Orleans attorney for SCEF, argued that the defendants know that the SCEF is a civil rights organization and that there is no evidence of communism or subversion in the seized documents.

The court took under advisement a motion by Jack Rogers, counsel for the LUAC, to quash a subpena issued by attorneys for the plaintiffs for production of the records taken during the raids. He claimed that these are now official records of the Louisiana Legislature, "used in the commission of a crime. After some reluctance, however, Rogers consented to present the court with photostatic copies of the documents within a few days.

Arthur Kinoy, New York, representing Dombrowski and SCEF, argued that the terms and definitions in the statutes -- e.g. "communist", "communist front" -- are so broad and indefinite that they make it possible for the state "to sweep into a dragnet people engaged in peaceful, constitutional efforts", such as SCEF's program to promote racial equality.

"Is it possible that racial segregation is considered part of the constitution of Louisiana?" Kinoy asked the court. "Are activities considered illegal that promote its abolition?..."These statutes have been written" said Kinoy, "as if the First and Fourteenth Amendments do not exist... Every precept, every canon, every concept of constituional law enunciated for years by the Supreme Court to enforce the precious freedoms of the First Amendment have been ignored.. They are patently void on their face ..."

John E. Jackson, Jr., an asst. state attorney general, and William A. Porteus,III representing District Attorney Jim Garrison contended that the state laws were constitutional because they covered only acts against the State of Louisiana.

The court reserved decision on the case and granted a continuation of the temporary restraining order prohibiting prosecution of the plaintiffs until the full determination of the state laws' constitutionality. Before reaching their decision, it is likely that the three judges will schedule another hearing at which witnesses for SCEF and the State will present evidence.

Defendants in the case include: Major Russell Willie of the state police; Attorney General Jack P. Gremillion; Colonel Thomas D. Burbank head of the state police; Governor Jimmie H. Davis; district attorney Jim Garrison; and James H. Pfister, chairman of LUAC, who was defeated as a State Representative in the December 7th primaries by a vote of two to one.

Leon D. Hubert, former District Attorney of New Orleans, represented Smith and Waltzer. In addition to Kinoy and Brener, Dombrowski and SCEF were represented by William Kunstler of New York, national trial counsel for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and of counsel A. P. Tureaud of New Orleans.

December 19, 1963

NEW ORLEANS, LA. --- Notice has been served of a deposition to be taken from J. G. Sourwine, Chief Counsel of the Senate Subcommittee on Internal Security (SSIS). The examination of Sourwine will take place at 2 p.m., December 30, in the offices of Dillon & Dillon, attorneys, at 1625 Eye Street, Washington, D. C.

The notice of deposition was served in connection with an affidavit submitted by Sourwine who, along with SSIS chairman, Senator James O. Eastland of Mississippi, are defendants in a suit brought by Dr. James A. Dombrowski, Executive Director of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc. (SCEF), a civil rights organization.

SCEF and Dombrowski have asked for an injunction in Federal District Court for the District of Columbia restraining Eastland, Sourwine and others from using the records and lists of contributors to the Fund seized by Louisiana State Police and New Orleans city police in raids on the Fund and its officials in New Orleans on October 4. Damages of $500,000 have also been sought.

At the time of the raids, instigated by the Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities, (LUAC), Dombrowski, Benjamin E. Smith, the Fund's treasurer, and Smith's law partner Bruce Waltzer, were arrested and their homes ransacked. They were charged with violating the Louisiana Communist Control Law by managing a "subversive" organization and distributing "communist" literature.

A criminal court judge dismissed the charges at an October 25th hearing in New Orleans because no evidence of subversion was presented. At this hearing Rep. James H. Pfister, chairman of LUAC testified he was unable to produce the seized SCEF documents as the court had requested, because the documents had been subpoenaed by the Internal Security Subcommittee of the U. S. Senate Judiciary Committee, at the request of Eastland. Pfister said that he and other state officials had been served subpoenaes to this effect, signed by J. G. Sourwine, in Baton Rouge on October 5th, the day after the raids.

In his affidavit, Sourwine insists he had "nothing whatsoever to do with the acquisition of SCEF material" by LUAC. He states, however, that LUAC attorney Jack N. Rogers informed him of the forthcoming SCEF raids as early as July 1963; and that Rogers asked Sourwine some time in August or September if he would come to Baton Rouge if LUAC subpoenaed the SCEF records - to help evaluate the material.

According to the affidavit, Rogers phoned Sourwine in Washington, D.C. late on the night of the raids, and that he flew to Baton Rouge on the morning of October 5. Sourwine explains the date on the subpoena - "on this fourth day of October" - as a "typographical error."

Sourwine's affidavit makes no mention of the fact that on October 28 all the SCEF records were moved to Woodville, Miss., then were sent to the SSIS in Washington. This transfer was made at the request of Senator Eastland on the day that SCEF was requesting a temporary restraining order against removal of the stolen records from Baton Rouge.

Today a district judge, on the motion of the government and of Senator Eastland dismissed the section of the complaint requesting injunctive relief, but did not dismiss that section of the complaint asking for damages, thus permitting the deposition action to stand.

An immediate appeal will be taken to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia from the dismissal of the request for injunctive relief.

Lawyers representing SCEF and Dombrowski are, William Kunstler and Arthur Kinoy of New York; Walter E. Dillon, Jr., Washington, D. C; Milton E. Brener and of counsel, A. P. Tureaud, both of New Orleans.

How Desegregation . . Can Grow Into . . Integration

BY FREDERICK A. BLOSSOM

(As legal barriers to segregation fall, there is an increasing awareness that even after the laws are removed there is yet a long mile to go before we achieve a brotherly society. Desegregation and integration are radically different processes. This article by a white man, long an opponent of segregation, now a Florida resident, suggests some things each individual can do. The Patriot welcomes comment from other readers.)

While of course giving our main attention and effort to the important issues of integrated schools, Negro voting rights, and job opportunities, we should not forget that "apartheid" curses every aspect of our social life.

Even if the school, voting, and job battles are won, racial separation will continue unless countless aspects of the social pattern are corrected.

Without lessening our activity on presently dominant issues, would it not be well for us to study ways we can wear down the separatist habits that nearly all of us unconsciously fall into?

This line of thought was first suggested to me by a pamphlet entitled "There Are Things To Do" which Lillian Smith published 20 years ago. She pointed out that even in those times we could make a start toward tearing down the "Chinese Wall" between the races, and she outlined ways to go about it.

The idea appealed to us and we have since then been doing whatever we could to carry it out.

● We were living in Washington at that time, and we welcomed the integration of the local cooperative bookshop, which became the most vital cultural center in that city.

● We patronized Negro movie houses and were most courteously received.

● We rented to a Negro family one floor of our three-story house in a definitely Southern neighborhood. No unpleasant results.

● When we sold our too-large house, we built a cottage in a Negro subdivision and are glad we did. Dependable and helpful neighbors.

● When I had to put up a legal fight for my government job, I engaged a talented Negro lawyer. Even my integrationist friends urged me not to "throw the case away," pointing out that the chairman of the appeals board was a Southern "colonel." We won a smashing victory.

● We encouraged Negro friends to attend and to join the Unitarian church we attended. We went as friendly observers to a statewide Negro P.-T.A. convention. We invited Negro friends to accompany us to concerts, lectures, mass meetings.

● We patronized a Negro gas station, dry-cleaning establishment, barber, dentist (the most expert and cultured we have met in our four-score years), and employed Negro carpenters, electricians, painters, etc.

And here are some other suggestions of things white people can do to change the over-all pattern:

● Give Negro friends and neighbors a lift to and from market, etc. Always have them sit up in front.

—Margaret Rigg

● Invite their children to play with our children and vice versa, both indoors and out, and plan birthday and Christmas parties together. Also picnics and excursions.

● Invite Negro friends and neighbors to drop in and have a chat and cup of tea. Exchange garden hints, seeds, cuttings, etc., with them and try to get them admitted to garden clubs.

● Always invite and urge Negroes to "sit up front" at meetings. Whenever possible, include Negroes on civic and social committees.

● Buy extra copies of The Southern Patriot regularly and distribute them to Negro leaders—also to white persons.

● Be seen with Negroes in a natural but unprovocative manner as often as possible. In a bus, at public meetings, etc., take a seat beside a Negro whenever possible, and converse naturally.

(Our Negro fellow-supporters of SCEF can reciprocate along parallel lines and help develop this program.)

There are those who will say that an "intentional" program as here outlined places too much emphasis on race and would keep people from just acting naturally. We agree that it would be ideal if we could all, for example, just walk into a meeting and sit down by anybody without looking at his color.

But the facts of life in our society today do not give us this ideal situation. Separation is an insidious and all-pervasive habit in the thinking and living of most of us. Some such conscious program as this seems needed to initiate change.

If we make it a practice to do these little things, we will build for ourselves happier and richer lives, set an example for others, and thereby be instrumental in bringing nearer the time when we can all forget color completely.

Segregation is a malformed ugly octopus whose tenacles strangle my dreams, your dreams, and the dreams written in the Constitution of the United States. Are you going to continue feeding it ? Now is the time to stop giving your dollars to the octopus' evel mouth.

We have been carrying on fruitless negotiations for two years. We have requested the employment of a significant number of Negroes at Rich's department store in Atlanta. We have been thrown "wells", "you sees", and many other evasive answers.

Last year, Rich's agreed to hire 12 Negroes - they hired 6. This year they proposed hiring 41 Negro Saleswomen by Christmas and up to 100 by June 1. When asked to sign this agreement they rudely refused. Negroes comprise 25-30% of their net sales. Out of 740 sales people at Rich's, only 6 are Negroes. Is this equal opportunity ? Are you going to contribute to these conditions ? Support the Selective Buying Campaign.

Dear Art:

Enclosed is a draft outline for the M.I.S. report. I discussed it by phone with Arnold, and he seemed happy. I wish, however, that you would regard it as merely a stimulus to your own thinking, and suggest revisions as drastic as you wish or even a complete re-doing.

After you have had a chance to study this, the next step would be, I think, to frame a cost estimate and to send it and the agreed outline off to I.C.M.A. Simultaneously, we can be seeking research assistance. I hope you may have some suggestions as to a person.

Best wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Enclosure - 1. (Outline)

A. Background

1. A brief introduction

(a) Statement of subject of report

(b) Definition of Problem of urban racial tension and its implications for municipal policy

(c) Contrast of situation of Negroes with that of other minorities who, in the past, have migrated to cities
(Both "b" and "c" to be briefly treated here and returned to at later points)

2. Population distribution of Negroes, movement and projection

3. Nature of prejudice and cultural separateness

(a) North

(b) South

B. Principal Problems for Municipal Policy

1. Community tension

2. "Negro" crime

3. Mass disorders
(Each of these to be discussed at length, with illustration of "1" and "3" North and South, and illustrative documentation of "2" from statistics and authoritative comments and interpretations. In each sub-section, purpose will be to define and describe problem as it presents itself to municipal policy-makers, North and South. Sub-section "1" would include, e.g., such issues as protest demonstrations in the South and block-busting in the North.)

C. Municipal Instrumentalities: Policies and Methods

1. Short review of legal precedents
(Purpose would be to show types of municipal ordinances and policies which have been invalidated by courts; e.g., segregation laws, zoning ordinances.)

2. Police
(A rather full discussion which would:
(a) draw on professional literature for principles of good police work in areas of racial tension; (b) describe selected incidents; (c) describe selected training programs of police forces.)

3. Human rights commission
(A number of cities have established these under one name or another. We should make a representative list, indicate powers, composition, effectiveness.)

4. Ordinances and laws
(The problems are various and perhaps cannot be fully defined until after research. Generally, we would want to consider how to guard against the use of commonplace laws and ordinances -- such as trespass, breach of peace, licensing ordinances -- to serve the end of racial restriction.)

5. FEP's, etc.
(For those cities with anti-discrimination commissions, what problems exist of meshing the work of these with other municipal agencies; describe typical powers and composition of commissions, and judicial decisions regarding their constitutionality.)

6. Administration of municipal programs, such as recreation, parks, fire-fighting, hospitals, etc., and implication for race relations

Dear Les:

Rather than delay further getting to you the part of the manuscript on Municipal Race Relations Practices which Margaret has completed, until the entire manuscript is finished, I thought it best to shoot down to you the enclosed sections.

Understand that this represents exactly what has come off Margaret's typewriter, without any editing or attempt at final organization. It represents what Margaret intends for parts "B" and "C" of our outline, with section A still to be written. Harold and I have read this, but neither of us have done more than that.

I'm starting on part A, which I hope to have completed right after the Thanksgiving holiday, with a copy to you. Then I will go over the entire manuscript, integrate it into a readable whole, with suitable topical, and subtopical sectioning. Let us have your ideas on the enclosed and if you think there is reason to get together again, how about giving me a call?

Heard you were ill, and I hope you're over whatever it was by the time you get this. Best regards to all.

Sincerely,

INTRODUCTION

In war and in peace, the American people have met many challenges with vigor and resourcefulness. One of the most persistent challenges in our history is that of civil rights, and this field has proven no exception to the imaginative use of public and private initiative. That we have made much progress is indisputable, as this report will show; that we have a long way to go in providing equal opportunity to all of our citizens is equally clear.

this is news!

Definition of Minority Group.

An eminent social scientist 1/ once defined a minority "as a group of people who, because of their physical ar cultural characteristics, are singled out from the others in the society in which they live for differential and unequal treatment, and who therefore regard themselves as objects of collective discrimination. Minority status carries with it the exclusion from full participation in the life of the society".

Minority Rights Reinforced.

Minorities have grown increasingly ~~more~~ restive under the restrictive practices which circumscribe their full participation in American society. Legal challenges to existing community customs and laws have resulted in a growing series of court decisions striking down racial barriers. The first series of cases sought to clarify the meaning ~~and practice~~ of "equal" in the "separate but equal" doctrine ~~under which this nation was governed from the time of the Civil Rights Acts of 1866 to 1875 and the Fourteenth Amendment, ratified in 1868.~~ which prevailed in our constitutional law from the late nineteenth century + which is most famously associated with the Plessy v. Ferguson decision of 1896. These legal decisions ~~successively struck down laws which "abridged privileges or immunities of citizens", which tended to "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process", and which "denied any person equal protection of the laws".~~ tended to permit segregated - i.e. "separate" - treatment + facilities of Negroes while at the same time holding to the constitutional theory that the treatment or facilities had to be "equal". The "equality" requirement, poorly defined in early cases, was given more + more strict emphasis by the federal courts in the years between about 1915 and 1953.

1/ Louis Wirth, "The Problem of Minority Groups", in Ralph Linton (ed.), The Science of Man in the World Crisis, Columbia University Press, 1945, p.347.

Full Equality Established.

The historic school desegregation decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in 1954 brought to a culmination the legal trend of the previous half century of litigation, declaring that "separate educational facilities are inherently unequal". It was the death knell of the "separate but equal" doctrine.

Although the new principle initially applied only to public education, it has since been ~~applied~~ extended to most facets of civil rights in succeeding court cases. And where, to begin with, these decisions applied only to direct state actions (and, by extension, to actions of local jurisdictions), recent rulings have enjoined private discrimination whenever "to some significant extent the state in any of its manifestations has been found to have become involved" in private acts of discrimination.[2/]

Today, there is little doubt of the legal responsibility and authority of executive officials to end discrimination through the use of public policy, law, and administrative machinery, ~~attested to by~~ a growing body of court decisions, acts of Congress, executive orders, administrative rulings, and state and local legislation, ~~all that~~ all

2/ Burton v. Wilmington Parking Authority, 365 U.S. 715,722

THE PROBLEM

Civil rights problems do not arise in the abstract. Those who are denied their constitutional rights are very often also the victims of poverty and inadequate education. The quest for equal opportunity has created large mobile masses, moving from rural to urban centers, from region to region, and from city to city, in search of a better way of life. Like earlier immigrants before them, many of today's minorities have been crowded into urban slums, restricted to the poorest schools, and employed in the lowest paying occupations. In their adjustment to city life under such handicaps, they have required a disproportionate share of health, welfare, police, and other services, and have been more vulnerable to personal and social maladjustment.[3/] These deprivations have led to discrimination, which in turn reinforces the deprivations.

Past Inequities.

Many of the hardships of today's minorities -- the Negro, the Puerto Rican, the Mexican-American, the American Indian --

3/ Philip M. Hauser, "Urban Boom and Crisis in the Sixties", address before the International Municipal Assembly, May 12, 1960.

are the cumulative result of past denials of civil rights. This has produced a new deprivation - the lack of motivation and incentive. Often, newly opened opportunities are not used, even when they are evident. Frustration of ambition and lack of hope breed delinquency and crime, which further raise the cost of public services. These are essentially social problems, yet, they are inextricably bound up with civil rights issues.

Present Discrimination.

Unemployment hits Negroes more than twice as hard as others, underlining the fact that they are confined to the least skilled, worst paid, most insecure occupations, highly susceptible to cyclical lay-offs. Much of the housing market remains closed to millions of Americans because of ~~their~~ race, religion, or ancestry, so that they are mainly confined to substandard housing in slums. In public education, eight years after the Supreme Court desegregation decision, only a little over seven per cent of the South's 3,200,000 Negro children attend biracial schools, (and most of this group are in the so-called border states) 4/ ~~mostly in token situations, and~~ De facto inequalities in public educational systems exist in many northern & western cities. ~~elsewhere in the nation.~~

In a number of Southern states, voting restrictions are enforced by outright discrimination, physical violence, or economic reprisal. In the North, where citizens may vote freely, malapportionment and gerrymandered districting seriously dilutes votes. Recent headlines from Brown v. Board of Education about "sit-ins", "kneel-ins", "wade-ins" and other attemps to secure equal treatment in public accommodations indicate that ~~this~~ problems are tense. ~~is far from resolved.~~ There are still places in the nation, however, where the fear of racial violence is very real, and where police brutality ~~remains~~ is a national shame.

New Minority Image.

Against this picture of widespread deprivation, a new minority image -- especially of the Negro -- has emerged to challenge discrimination and the denial of equal opportunity. Bolstered by legislation, court decisions, and recent changes in public policy, Negroes and other minority groups have more and more taken to direct, though "non-violent", action to secure their rights immediately and in full. The prevailing majority, accustomed to the concept of "gradualism", has frequently reacted with a sense of shocked resistance, ~~to what it had been prepared to grant over a period of time.~~ Frequently, it is not so much a question of rights as a community problem of timing -- but for minority groups, time has run out and unfulfilled promises are being presented for payment now. Herein lies one of the main causes of community tensions.

Population Mobility.

In the past decade, the mobility of our largest minority group has attained unprecedented proportions. "Although the largest cities have generally registered the largest numerical gains, the largest proportional gains have been experienced by medium-sized cities in the 100,000- 500,000 range. Syracuse, Rochester, New Haven, San Diego and Fort Wayne all saw Negro populations approximately double in the past decade".[5] In Toledo, Ohio, the white population increased one per cent from 1950-60; the Negro population rose 63 per cent. In Milwaukee, Wisconsin, the Negro population tripled in the past ten years. The Cleveland, Ohio, Negro population increased 100,000 (150,000 in 1950 to 250,000 in 1960), and Connecticut has double the number of Negroes (107,800) that the state had ten years ago. Today, one out of every eight citizens is Negro in Los Angeles, Buffalo, and New Haven. Negroes make up one out of every four residents of Philadelphia and Detroit.

The Central City.

Washington, D.C., exemplifies the central city ghettoization of these mobile masses. At the time of the Civil War, the proportion of Negroes in the metropolitan area was about one-fourth the total population. Today, a century later, the metropolitan proportion has scarcely changed at all, but the population of the central city of Washington, D.C., is more than one-half Negro. The surrounding suburbs are almost exclusively white, ringing the central city of deteriorating, substandard, and slum dwellings. Unable to break out of the "white noose", ever more crowded into housing diminished by urban renewal and highway construction, with overcrowded schools and inadequate facilities of every type, Negro pressures and frustrations require disproportionate public services at mounting costs. This unhappy story is repeated in community after community where the problem is often ignored, and where the blame for tension and incipient violence is often mistakenly and tragically placed upon the victims rather than upon the actual causes, which victimize majority and minority groups alike (although the burden is far from equally shared).

Leadership Responsibilities.

The assumption of responsible leadership ~~responsibility~~ by municipal executives and administrators is a prerequisite ~~to~~ the solution of this modern "American dilemma". A realistic appraisal of community problems, realistic planning for the provision of equal opportunity in all aspects of daily living for every citizen, and the large scale educational job that is required for public acceptance of such planning, call must be undertaken by the city leadership before conditions reach the threshold of violence. Wise city heads will institute a program of prevention that will insure the continued growth and prosperity of the community instead of the traumatic and often economically ruinous conflict that some cities have suffered before bowing to the inevitability of desegregation and integration.

TOWARD A SOLUTION

Despite legal precedent and public policy, ~~on civil rights, there~~ remain great gaps in the implementation of equal rights for all citizens. Differing laws, the nature and numbers of minority groups, and the attitudes of the majority group -- all coalesce in any particular community to present unique problems and paths to solution. Thus, each community must assess its own stage of civil rights development, its own requirements for achieving progress, and follow its own methods for alleviating present or incipient tensions.

Principles of Practice.

However, there are principles common to all civil rights solutions, and ~~by which~~ specific implementation should be guided by them:

1. A clear-cut policy, firmly enunciated and unequivocally applied. An ambiguous policy half-heartedly applied is AN OPEN ~~a open~~ invitation to resistance and trouble.
2. A growing sense of inevitability. The South has demonstrated that people ~~will rise above their prejudices and~~ adjust to new racial patterns when ~~if they are~~ convinced that change is unavoidable. The "moderate" -- who is often a person who favors change but won't support it until it is "safe" -- becomes effective when he can plead inevitability.
3. Reassurance that change will not be overwhelming or catastrophic. Many whites equate integration with inundation. The only real cure for this fear is experience, but the symptoms can be eased somewhat in advance of experience by facts and interpretation. The cooperation of the communication media can be very helpful in effecting needed change with minimum disruption.
4. Convincing precedents for change, drawn from the experience of other, like areas. It is not easy to transmit experience from one area to another, but, next to first-hand practice itself, such precedents offer the best way of allaying unjustified fears, familiarizing people with new ideas, and destroying the myth that racial change always means trouble.

5. Communication between the majority-minority groups, allaying fear through the destruction of mutual, long-held stereotypes. Approaches to solution mutually agreed upon and worked out in concert, including the pressing problem of timing, will find much more ready acceptance on the part of all concerned.

6. Practical self-interest (most especially economic self-interest) enlisted on the side of change. This is critical, and should be brought into play at the earliest possible moment to ~~establish~~ demonstrate that the entire community has a great deal to gain from progress toward equal treatment and opportunity.

7. Moral leadership. The churches have a special responsibility to clarify the moral issues involved in discrimination. But all community leaders can contribute to public acceptance of needed social change as a moral as well as practical imperative.

Resource Agencies.

In the accomplishment of these overall objectives, city executives may wish to avail themselves of the services of the many ~~intergroup relations~~ human relations agencies whose representatives serve virtually every community in the country. These specialists ~~in human and intergroup relations~~ are skilled and experienced not only in community tension problems, but also in affirmative actions which can help to eliminate discrimination and provide equal opportunity to minority groups. If such resource agencies do not have local representatives, the International City Managers' Association or the state university can recommend an agency representative.

Guides to Progress.

Progress toward equal opportunity ~~in this great nation~~ is the sum total of the advances made in the thousands of local communities ~~that comprise it.~~ This report is an account of ~~such progress through~~ community action ~~examples~~ in the areas of education, employment, housing, public facilities, police practices; through policy pronouncements, ordinances, human relations commissions, and other administrative steps. These examples are meant to serve as guides to advancement, illustrations of problems ~~in those communities which conscientiously~~ seek to improve relations among all their citizens, irrespective of race, creed, color, or national origin.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT: AGENT OF EQUAL OPPORTUNITY

What are the major areas of concern to municipal government in the provision of equal opportunity for all citizens? What examples of good practice are available in employment, education, housing, and other areas?

The principal purpose of this report is to show the work being done by selected city governments in working toward the goal of equal opportunity for all citizens. The principal obstacle in the way of achieving this goal is race relations. Much publicity has been given in the past decade to racial problems both in the north and the south. But the steady progress being made by hundreds of communities in all parts of the country toward the achievement of equal opportunity is a less well-known story. This report shows the scope of progressive practices together with suggestions and guidelines for city government officials.

Growth of Equal Opportunity

Four developments in the past decade have heightened the expectations of Negroes and other minority groups in securing full civil rights.

Court Decisions

The school desegregation decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court in 1954-55 culminated the legal trend of 50 years of litigation by declaring that "separate educational facilities are inherently unequal." Although the decision applied initially only to public education, it has since been extended to most facets of civil rights in succeeding court cases. Subsequent decisions in both state and federal courts have broadened civil rights in housing, public accommodations, and other areas. This growing body of court decisions has been supplemented by acts of Congress, Presidential orders, federal administrative rulings, state statutes, and county and municipal ordinances. In earlier years this body of law applied only to direct state actions (and, by extension, to actions of local jurisdictions), but recent rulings have enjoined private discrimination whenever "to some significant extent the state in any of its manifestations has been found to have become involved" in private acts of discrimination.[1]

Population Mobility

Approximately 1.5 million Negroes left the South between 1950 and 1960. "Although the largest cities have generally registered the largest numerical gains, the largest proportional gains have been experienced by medium-sized cities in the 100,000 to 500,000 range. Syracuse, Rochester, New Haven, San Diego and Fort Wayne all saw Negro populations approximately double in the past decade."[2]

During the 1950-60 decade, for example, the Negro population doubled in the state of Connecticut and tripled in the city of Milwaukee. The 1960 Census of Population shows that one out of every eight inhabitants is Negro in Los Angeles, Buffalo, and New Haven, and one out of every four is Negro in Philadelphia and Detroit.

[1] Burton v. Wilmington Parking Authority, 365 U.S. 715, 722.

[2] Eunice and George Grier, The Impact of Race on Neighborhood in the Metropolitan Setting, Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies, 1961.

Population Exodus

The 1950-60 decade also saw a tremendous out-migration of white population from central cities to suburbs. Thus the population change in central cities has been the replacement of middle-class whites with Negroes from lower educational and economic strata. The central cities are accumulating substandard areas with high population densities that require disproportionate services at mounting costs.

New Minority Image

Finally, against this pattern of economic and social change, should be set a new minority image, especially of the Negro, that has emerged to challenge the denial of equal opportunity. Bolstered by legislation, court decisions, and recent changes in public policy, Negroes increasingly have taken to direct, "nonviolent" action to secure civil rights immediately and in full. The prevailing majority, accustomed to the concept of "gradualism," has sometimes reacted with a sense of shocked resistance to what it had been prepared to grant over a period of time. Frequently, it is not so much a question of rights as a community problem of timing – but for minority groups time has run out and unfulfilled promises are being presented for payment now. Herein lies one of the main causes of community tensions.

Role of the City Government

For many cities the question is not whether there will be social change but rather the kind and extent of change that will occur. Will the time of transition be a period of stress, conflict, and recrimination? Or will it be handled expeditiously within the context of constitutional law? The city government has a great deal to do with influencing this choice.

Clearly defined city government policy declarations and ordinances are an essential prerequisite for social change. They provide not only the climate for such change but also the legal tools for accomplishing the job. Such directives should make clear that the city government is committed to working toward the goal of equal opportunities for all. In the unequivocal implementation of official regulations, the city manager, the mayor, or other chief administrator bears prime leadership responsibilities. He is the catalyst in the complex interactions in any given city that finally result in achievement.

The assumption of responsible leadership by the municipal administrator is the key to the solution of this modern "American dilemma." A realistic appraisal of community problems, planning for provision of equal opportunity in all aspects of daily living for every citizen, and the large-scale educational job that is required for public acceptance of such planning, all must be undertaken by city leadership before conditions reach the threshhold of violence. Wise city heads will institute a program of prevention that will insure the continued growth and prosperity of the community instead of the economically ruinous conflict that some cities have suffered before bowing to the inevitability of desegregation and integration.

Guidelines to Progress

The following are suggested objectives toward which the chief administrator can work to effect meaningful social change:

I. Municipal Policy. Through resolutions and ordinances, establishing an enforceable policy of nondiscrimination in:

1. Public and private employment.
2. Public and private housing.
3. Public education.
4. Public accommodations and facilities.

II. Enforcement. Coordinating, conciliating, and enforcing official policies through:

1. A fair practices commission which receives and investigates complaints, holds hearings, and enforces policies of nondiscrimination.

2. Regulations binding city departments to nondiscrimination.

3. A civil rights coordinator in the executive branch. As responsibility is increasingly accepted within governmental departments, a special coordinator in the executive branch charged with civil rights responsibilities can stimulate and coordinate functions. Such a coordinator can command the authority of the executive branch in the task of keeping heads of departments alert to their obligations and in giving vitality and implementation to civil rights programs within city departments.

III. Implementation. Providing administrative machinery to implement programs in the fields of:

A. Employment.

1. Affirmative nondiscrimination in recruitment by the civil service or merit system, and comprehensive reporting on minority placement.

2. Inspection and compliance programs in contracting departments of the city respecting fair employment on city contracts.

3. Procedures for obtaining fair employment compliance from private employers, and for correcting violations.

B. Housing.

1. Eligibility for public housing solely on the basis of need as determined by the local housing agency or other appropriate governmental authority.

2. Provision of relocation housing for all who are displaced by redevelopment, and administrative controls to insure nondiscrimination in urban renewal programs especially involving slum clearance.

3. Elimination of discrimination in the sale or rental of private housing.

C. Education (in cooperation with the local board of education).

1. A clear policy declaration and an implementing program to overcome de facto segregation in public schools.

2. A specific program to overcome the cultural lag in learning receptivity among minority group children.

3. Inclusion of human relations subject matter in the curriculum.

D. Public Accommodations.

1. Regulations requiring nondiscrimination in public services and accommodations, including those both under private and governmental ownership.

2. Enforcement by the police department and other appropriate city government agencies of regulations barring discrimination in hotels, restaurants, theaters, hospitals, and other places of public accommodation.

3. Licensing controls on public services and accommodations requiring nondiscrimination.

E. Community Tensions.

1. A human relations commission or other such official body which can coordinate community efforts to promote affirmative programs of civil rights.

2. A police training program on community and minority group relations.

3. A human relations training program for recreation workers.

4. In cooperation with the local board of education and institutions of higher learning, a teacher training program on intergroup relations.

Preconditions for Successful Change

The organization job to achieve these objectives will depend principally on the type of community involved, the size and nature of the minority population, historic and existing regional and community intergroup relationships, the structure of city government, political alignments, and a host of other socio-economic complexities. Each community must assess its own stage of civil rights development and its own requirements for achieving social change. However, there are principles common to all civil rights solutions, by which specific implementation should be guided.

Following are some of the preconditions for successful social change:

1. A clear-cut policy, firmly enunciated and unequivocally applied. An ambiguous policy half-heartedly applied is an open invitation to resistance and trouble.

2. Emphasis on inevitability. The South has demonstrated that people adjust to new racial patterns when they are convinced that change is unavoidable.

3. Reassurance that change will not be overwhelming or catastrophic. Many whites equate integration with inundation. The cooperation of the communications media in reporting needed facts and interpretations can be helpful in effecting change with minimum disruption.

4. Convincing precedents for change, drawn from the experience of other, like areas. Next to first-hand experience such precedents offer the best way to allay unjustified fears, familiarize people with new ideas, and destroy the myth that racial change always means trouble.

5. Communication between majority and minority groups, allaying fear through the destruction of long-held stereotypes. Mutually agreed upon approaches to solutions worked out in concert, including the pressing problem of timing, will find much more ready acceptance on the part of all concerned.

6. Practical self-interest (most especially economic self-interest) enlisted on the side of change. This is critical, and should be brought into play at the earliest possible moment to demonstrate that the entire community has a great deal to gain from progress toward equal treatment and opportunity.

7. Moral leadership. The churches have a special responsibility to clarify the moral issues involved in discrimination. But all community leaders can contribute to public acceptance of needed social change as a moral as well as a practical imperative.

Resource Agencies. In the accomplishment of these over-all objectives, city administrators would do well to avail themselves of the services of the many human relations agencies whose representatives reach virtually every community in the country. These specialists are skilled and experienced not only in community tension problems but also in affirmative actions which can help to eliminate discrimination and provide equal opportunity to minority groups. If such resource agencies do not have local representation, the state university can recommend an agency representative.

Program Areas

The nation's progress toward equal opportunity is the sum total of advances made in thousands of communities. This report is an account of such progress by the presentation of examples from individual cities in all parts of the United States. The following section covers "The Organization Job," and the balance of this report comprises six major sections covering the work of human relations commissions, police practices, public education, employment practices, public and private housing, and the provision of public facilities. A resource reading list is included at the end of this report for those municipal administrators who wish to go more deeply into specific problems and measures to overcome them.

The Organization Job

The preceding section outlines the policy framework for the city government in fulfilling its role as an agent in providing equal opportunity for all citizens. Beyond this, however, a start must be made by the chief administrator in clarifying problems and setting forth immediate and long-term objectives. Depending upon his position in the community, the chief administrator should determine the extent to which he can assume leadership and the degree to which he should work through other leaders in the community. Successful programs depend upon effective leadership and a systematic job of organizing community resources. In doing this it helps to envision six steps that should be taken.
